Hitler-Conquered Europe Called Land of Gloom, Despair and Hunger

New York, Oct 1 (CP)—A land of gloom, despair and hunger..... a dead listlessness spreading like a plague......

Thus Richard O. Boyer, just returned from a 100-day trip through Hitler-conquered Europe, pictures Germany in a copyright article Monday in PM, New York's new evening newspaper. He visited Germany, Holland, Belgium, France, Italy and Spain.

Boyer, one of the few American correspondents to return from Berlin since the start of the war, arrived in Munich June 28, the day Hitler ordered a 10-day celebration for the defeat of France. Boyer wrote that he found the people of Munich, to his surprise, unmistakably sad, quiet and weary." A German explained: "We celebrated once in 1914."

Boyer added:

"But the most surprising development in Germany is that a dead listlessness, akin to the disease of the spirit that caused the collapse of France, is spreading through Germany like a plague, infecting an increasing number of her people with defeatism......

"It must be quickly added, however, that this spirit has not yet infected the army, the Nazi party or the Hitler youth to any appreciable degree and it is doubtful if it ever will until there is a military setback.

People Have No Elan

"For 10 days before I left Berlin I sat in bombproof cellars with the inhabitants of the German capital ......Never have I seen people with less elan, with more real depression of spirit. It was not fear. It was not the damage being done or the people being killed for the raids were still small scale compared to those over London.

"It was something far deeper. That something was what gave the mild, demonstration bombings of Berlin an importance out of all proportion to the damage done..."

Boyer wrote that when he left Germany "it was like leaving a prison." People called to ask for the remainder of his unused food stamps. "When they shook hands they had the attitude of people remaining in a desperate situation bidding farewell to one 'fortunate enough to escape......"

He concluded: "Every day of English resistance causes more German civilians to say, with a sort of long suffering, passive despair: 'Ach, it will never be over. We shall have another terrible winter. No food, no heat and bombings every night.' "

Wounded Survivors Tell of Struggle On Indo-China Border

Disheartened French Officers and Footsore Stragglers Back in Hanoi Tell Fight Forced on Them—Month's Defence Preparations Wiped Out by Japanese in Three Days

By C. YATES McDANIEL
Associated Press Staff Writer

Hanoi, French Indo-China, Oct. 1 (AP)—Wounded survivors, disheartened French officers and footsore stragglers pieced together for me today their version of the Japanese attack which last week routed the defenders of Langson, strategic point on the northern border of harassed French Indo-China.

They all said the fight was forced on them after they had been informed an amicable agreement had been reached to settle the Japanese demands of the colony.

65 Wounded Arrive

In three days the Japanese succeeded in wiping out a month's defence preparations. They captured the French general and his staff with several thousand of his French Legionnaires and colonial infantrymen.

The stories of these men, some of them uncomplaining five to seven days after they had been wounded by bullets and bomb fragments, added up to the fact that someone underestimated the Japanese ability to nullify French artillery superiority and launch a surprise assault at pistol range on Langson's tightly protected rear position.

Japanese Used Tanks

One officer, whose men held up a Japanese flanking movement for two days, said he was given to believe the Japanese on the Indo-China border were not equipped to attack. However, against his outpost position, manned by a few machine guns and trench mortars, the Japanese hurled three tanks backed up by mountain artillery and planes.

Another officer told how he blew up his battery of 155 millimetre guns — which like nearly all the French artillery were placed to stop a frontal attack—when Japanese machine-gunners poured in fire from the rear.

He said several other battery commanders tried to move the guns to turn them against the Japanese but their transport mules became panicky.

The officer said that when the end of the fighting came he had fired only 30 of his 2,000 rounds of ammunition because he was ordered to hold his fire unless attacked. This despite the fact, he said, that he saw Japanese moving around the French flanks within easy range.

One of the officers who was in the thick of the Langson fight said his machine-gunners took a heavy toll of Japanese infantrymen crossing a vital bridge, but that they continued to advance over the piled-up bodies of their comrades.

This officer said the assault on Langson was delivered after the city had been encircled by Japanese units attacking with sub-machine guns, pistols and bayonets from all directions.

A night attack, he said, caused such confusion that friend and foe alike were mowed down by cross fire.

A Polish medical orderly, member of a French regiment, said that after the French capitulated the Japanese occupied barracks and large buildings and herded their prisoners into heavily guarded enclosed places where they received one meal or rice daily.

Greatest Large-Scale Tactical Exercises Since War Started

3 'ARMIES' MOVE

Camp Borden, Ont., Oct. 1 (CP)—Five thousand troops started on intensive manoeuvres which will take them over parts of Western Ontario and the Niagara Peninsula before they return to camp Thursday afternoon.

Tank units formed a part of all the three "armies" which started out over different routes, but no armored fighting vehicles went along. A period of intensive training with the tanks lies immediately ahead and officials were not anxious to jeopardize the tanks at this stage.

The troops included in the movement were all fit and eager to start the test under something like actual war conditions. Hundreds of vehicles in the columns were in the finest condition for the grind. The manoeuvres give the men realistic training with the aid of aerial reconnaissance and motorcycle corps.

The resolution, proposed by Ald. J. W. Cornett, asks that any Japanese found residing in Canada illegally be immediately deported.

WOULD SANCTION FINANCIAL AID TO GREAT BRITAIN

PACIFIC PROTECTION

Tragic Situation Throughout World and Japanese Operations in China and Indo-China Prompt Bill

Washington, Oct. 1 (AP)—The United States' State Department's reaction was sought today on a broad proposal sanctioning unrestricted financial aid to Great Britain.

The proposal, offered by Senator William H. King (Dem-Utah), would exempt Britain from the limitations of present neutrality and other laws which prohibit loans to belligerent or debt-defaulting nations.

Chairman Key Pitman (Dem-Nevada) said the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, to which King's resolution was referred after introduction yesterday, would await State Department views before considering the measure.

Defence of All Democracy

King presented his resolution with the assertion that it would provide "for help to be given, if necessary, to Great Britain in the contest which she is waging not only for democracy, for the salvation of Great Britain, but in the end for the salvation of all democratic nations, including the United States."

Besides permitting financial assistance, the measure would empower the President in furtherance of the National Defence program, to enter into negotiations for acquisition of strategic British island possessions in the Pacific. Thus the way might be opened for a deal for air and naval bases in the Pacific similar to those recently leased by the United States in the Atlantic in a trade for 50 destroyers.

Protection of U. S. Interests in Pacific

King told his colleagues that he thought the time was "propitious for the consideration of steps which might be taken for the protection of our interests in the Pacific." He said that "the tragic situation throughout the world" as well as Japanese operations in China and Indo-China had influenced him in this bill.

Several Senators said they thought the attitude of the Foreign Relations Committee on the proposal would be guided largely by the State Department's views. If the Department failed to express an opinion, however, few thought that the committee would take action.

Britain Prepares for Severest Winter Of War in History

Great Britain Will Soon Have Complete Answer To Night Bombing

London, Oct. .—(CP)—With no end in sight to the bombs which have fallen on London day and night for twenty-five days, Britain's capital is preparing for the severest winter of war in its history.

Its plan is three-fold—to combat the German raiders with the strongest possible defence weapons; to speed the exodus of women and children to less bombed areas; to give those who must stay the utmost shelter.

After another night-long series of attacks broken off just before dawn, London's anti-aircraft guns roared into action again this morning against scattered German raiders.

Early this afternoon several bombs fell in a thickly settled southwest London district and there were believed to have been casualties. A raider which penetrated to the

MURDER CHARGE IS PREFERRED

Brantford, Ont., Oct. 1 (CP)—John Leonard Buck, 27-year-old Six Nations Indian, was charged today with the murder of Fred House, 32-year-old fellow tribesman who was found dead on the Six Nations Reserve, Monday morning.

Leslie Martin, 19, arrested with Buck late Monday, when both men were charged with vagrancy, is held by police as a material witness.

The two men were arraigned before Magistrate R. J. Gillen, who assumed that office today to act in the absence of Magistrate S. A. Jones on six months' leave of absence.

When the murder charge against Buck was read, Acting Crown Attorney E. R. Reid, K.C., asked for an adjournment to Oct. 9th.

Police said Buck and Martin were associated with House and had been with him Sunday night.

Dr. W. D. Davis of the Reservation Hospital examined the body and said House died after suffering a fracture of the skull and that injury to the brain was indicated. He said a two-and-a-half inch gash on the left side of the man's head indicated a sharp instrument had been used to inflict the fatal blow.

Says New Alliance Aims to Destroy Britain, Empire

Toronto, Oct. 1 (CP)—Sir Willmott Lewis, Washington correspondent of The London Times, said in an address here last night that the common desire of Germany, Italy and Japan in their newly-completed alliance is to destroy Britain and dismember the Empire.

Germany, he said, is master of Europe, but due to British blockade, is also the "prisoner of Europe." Italy is still the "prisoner" of the Mediterranean, Suez and Gibraltar. Japan is tied to her war in China and is faced with the threat of Singapore's naval base.

Disheartened French Officers and Footsore Stragglers Back in Hanoi Tell Fight Forced on Them—Month's Defence Preparations Wiped Out by Japanese in Three Days

By C. YATES McDANIEL
Associated Press Staff Writer

Hanoi, French Indo-China, Oct. 1 (AP)—Wounded survivors, disheartened French officers and footsore stragglers pieced together for me today their version of the Japanese attack which last week routed the defenders of Langson, strategic point on the northern border of harassed French Indo-China.

They all said the fight was forced on them after they had been informed an amicable agreement had been reached to settle the Japanese demands of the colony.

65 Wounded Arrive

In three days the Japanese succeeded in wiping out a month's defence preparations. They captured the French general and his staff with several thousand of his French Legionnaires and colonial infantrymen.

The stories of these men, some of them uncomplaining five to seven days after they had been wounded by bullets and bomb fragments, added up to the fact that someone underestimated the Japanese ability to nullify French artillery superiority and launch a surprise assault at pistol range on Langson's tightly protected rear position.

Japanese Used Tanks

One officer, whose men held up a Japanese flanking movement for two days, said he was given to believe the Japanese on the Indo-China border were not equipped to attack. However, against his outpost position, manned by a few machine guns and trench mortars, the Japanese hurled three tanks backed up by mountain artillery and planes.

Another officer told how he blew up his battery of 155 millimetre guns — which like nearly all the French artillery were placed to stop a frontal attack—when Japanese machine-gunners poured in fire from the rear.

He said several other battery commanders tried to move the guns to turn them against the Japanese but their transport mules became panicky.

The officer said that when the end of the fighting came he had fired only 30 of his 2,000 rounds of ammunition because he was ordered to hold his fire unless attacked. This despite the fact, he said, that he saw Japanese moving around the French flanks within easy range.

One of the officers who was in the thick of the Langson fight said his machine-gunners took a heavy toll of Japanese infantrymen crossing a vital bridge, but that they continued to advance over the piled-up bodies of their comrades.

This officer said the assault on Langson was delivered after the city had been encircled by Japanese units attacking with sub-machine guns, pistols and bayonets from all directions.

A night attack, he said, caused such confusion that friend and foe alike were mowed down by cross fire.

A Polish medical orderly, member of a French regiment, said that after the French capitulated the Japanese occupied barracks and large buildings and herded their prisoners into heavily guarded enclosed places where they received one meal or rice daily.

TACTICS BEGUN AT CAMP BORDEN FOR 5,000 MEN

Greatest Large-Scale Tactical Exercises Since War Started

3 'ARMIES' MOVE

Camp Borden, Ont., Oct. 1 (CP)—Five thousand troops started on intensive manoeuvres which will take them over parts of Western Ontario and the Niagara Peninsula before they return to camp Thursday afternoon.

Tank units formed a part of all the three "armies" which started out over different routes, but no armored fighting vehicles went along. A period of intensive training with the tanks lies immediately ahead and officials were not anxious to jeopardize the tanks at this stage.

The troops included in the movement were all fit and eager to start the test under something like actual war conditions. Hundreds of vehicles in the columns were in the finest condition for the grind. The manoeuvres give the men realistic training with the aid of aerial reconnaissance and motorcycle corps.

Start in Three Armies

The troops started south in three "armies." The Blue Army included the Perth Regiment, the

At the same time Mayor Lyle Telford issued a warning to Japanese that they would be well advised to discontinue Japanese schools here for the duration of the war.

The resolution, proposed by Ald. J. W. Cornett, asks that any Japanese found residing in Canada illegally be immediately deported.

That no more Japanese be permitted to enter Canada.

WOULD SANCTION FINANCIAL AID TO GREAT BRITAIN

PACIFIC PROTECTION

Tragic Situation Throughout World and Japanese Operations in China and Indo-China Prompt Bill

Washington, Oct. 1 (AP)—The United States' State Department's reaction was sought today on a broad proposal sanctioning unrestricted financial aid to Great Britain.

The proposal, offered by Senator William H. King (Dem-Utah), would exempt Britain from the limitations of present neutrality and other laws which prohibit loans to belligerent or debt-defaulting nations.

Chairman Key Pitman (Dem-Nevada) said the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, to which King's resolution was referred after introduction yesterday, would await State Department views before considering the measure.

Defence of All Democracy

King presented his resolution with the assertion that it would provide "for help to be given, if necessary, to Great Britain in the contest which she is waging not only for democracy, for the salvation of Great Britain, but in the end for the salvation of all democratic nations, including the United States."

Besides permitting financial assistance, the measure would empower the President in furtherance of the National Defence program, to enter into negotiations for acquisition of strategic British island possessions in the Pacific. Thus the way might be opened for a deal for air and naval bases in the Pacific similar to those recently leased by the United States in the Atlantic in a trade for 50 destroyers.

Protection of U. S. Interests in Pacific

King told his colleagues that he thought the time was "propitious for the consideration of steps which might be taken for the protection of our interests in the Pacific." He said that "the tragic situation throughout the world" as well as Japanese operations in China and Indo-China had influenced him in this bill.

Several Senators said they thought the attitude of the Foreign Relations Committee on the proposal would be guided largely by the State Department's views. If the Department failed to express an opinion, however, few thought that the committee would take action.

As the British attacked, the Captain said, the leading German fighter went down as the result of a burst of machine gun fire from another German. Immediately afterward the Captain downed the over-excited pilot.

Girl Autograph Hunter Hurt As Metal Wastebasket Hits Her

Detroit, Oct. 1 —(AP)— A girl autograph hunter, struck on the head by a metal wastebasket as she waited outside a hotel to see Wendell L. Willkie last night, was reported in serious condition with a skull fracture today.

The basket was one of several missiles which showered down on the crowd following the Republican Presidential Nominee shortly after he had entered the hotel.

The girl was identified as Betty Wilson, 19. A dozen stitches were required to close a scalp laceration.

Tracing the source of the missiles police arrested a woman who gave her name as Doris La Rue, 31, and said she was an employee of the Federal Housing Administration. She was held on a disorderly conduct charge.

Britain Prepares for Severest Winter Of War in History

Great Britain Will Soon Have Complete Answer To Night Bombing

London, Oct. ,—(CP)—With no end in sight to the bombs which have fallen on London day and night for twenty-five days, Britain's capital is preparing for the severest winter of war in its history.

Its plan is three-fold—to combat the German raiders with the strongest possible defence weapons; to speed the exodus of women and children to less bombed areas; to give those who must stay the utmost shelter.

After another night-long series of attacks broken off just before dawn, London's anti-aircraft guns roared into action again this morning against scattered German raiders.

Early this afternoon several bombs fell in a thickly settled southwest London district and there were believed to have been casualties. A raider which penetrated to the

MURDER CHARGE IS PREFERRED

Brantford, Ont., Oct. 1 (CP)—John Leonard Buck, 27-year-old Six Nations Indian, was charged today with the murder of Fred House, 32-year-old fellow tribesman who was found dead on the Six Nations Reserve, Monday morning.

Leslie Martin, 19, arrested with Buck late Monday, when both men were charged with vagrancy, is held by police as a material witness.

The two men were arraigned before Magistrate R. J. Gillen, who assumed that office today to act in the absence of Magistrate S. A. Jones on six months' leave of absence.

When the murder charge against Buck was read, Acting Crown Attorney E. R. Reid, K.C., asked for an adjournment to Oct. 9th.

Police said Buck and Martin were associated with House and had been with him Sunday night.

Dr. W. D. Davis of the Reservation Hospital examined the body and said House died after suffering a fracture of the skull and that injury to the brain was indicated. He said a two-and-a-half inch gash on the left side of the man's head indicated a sharp instrument had been used to inflict the fatal blow.

BELLEVILLE MARKET SLIMLY ATTENDED

The Belleville market was rather slimly attended on Tuesday morning with many of the customary fall fruits being conspicuous by their absence. Peaches, for the first time in several weeks, were not offered, while the display of grapes was very small. Grapes, however, were offered at 35c per basket, showing a 5c decline from Saturday's quotations. Plums sold at 45c per basket for most varieties while Blue Damsons sold at 20c per basket. British prunes sold at 50c per basket. Pears were 45c per basket.

St. Lawrence apples were quoted at 30c per basket or at 40c per peck with other varieties selling at 30c the peck or at $1. per bushel. Tomatoes sold at 15c per basket or at 75c per hamper, while potatoes also held at the usual price of 25c the peck and 85c the bushel. Corn sold at 20c per dozen ears. Muskmelons and watermelons were offered in declining quantities although at the usual prices.

Returns for the first half of the fiscal year, just ended, totalled $983,279.10 as compared with $625,279.72 for the same period during 1939.

Custom returns for the month of September, 1940, totalled $181,666.93 as compared with $130,215.14 for the same month during 1939, showing an increase of $51,451.14.

GIANT CUCUMBER WEIGHS NEARLY 4 LBS.

Despite the fact that the current season's crop of cucumbers is claimed to be far below normal and also that their growth has been retarded considerably by unfavorable weather, there is at least one exception as was proven by a prominent Prince Edward County gardner on the Belleville market on Tuesday morning when he displayed a giant cucumber which weighed only one and a half ounces less than four pounds. The huge cucumber, grown and displayed by Mr. Henry Nelson, of Gardenville, measured exactly fourteen inches in length and had a girth of thirteen and one half inches. It was the largest cucumber that he had ever seen, stated Mr. Nelson.

Question of Two-Year Term For Mayor & Aldermen Will Be Submitted to Electorate

Vote Will be Taken at the Municipal Elections to be Held in December

OTHER BUSINESS

The chairman and members of the Board of Education augmented by a number of ratepayers of Murney Ward were to have appeared before the Council at their regular session Monday night to request of that body a sum sufficient to construct an addition of four rooms to Queen Mary School, which would allow the children that ordinarily go to that school be transferred back from King George School, an action that was necessary due to limited accommodation at Queen Mary School.

The delegation was not heard by the Council in committee although it was understood the deputation had an appointment with the Council for eight o'clock. When the Council went into session in the Council Chamber all that was left of the deputation were Trustees Charles L. Hyde and Dr. H. W. Kinnear. Mr. Hyde addressed the Council and stated that the chairman of the Board, Reg. Moncrieff, considered he had been discourteously treated and had left. "I sat for six years as an alderman in this city," said Mr. Hyde, "and it was the policy of those Councils to meet all deputations promptly." Mayor Thompson apologized, stating he was called in consultation with a man from Toronto and could not leave the meeting. He stated the Council was sympathetic with the Board of Education and the deputation would be heard respecting the matter in hand at an immediate future date.

Resident Makes Request

A resident of Coleman Street appeared before the Council requesting that garbage be not dumped in the Moira River below the lower bridge. He stated that restaurants along Front Street, south of Bridge Street, at times dumped garbage in the river and that he had complained to authorities but he was of the opinion "that someone was passing the buck." "I do believe that if a person fell on his face in the river he would be unable to turn over due to the garbage that has accumulated in the stream especially near the railway bridge. If the wind is blowing from Front Street across the river that section of Coleman Street south of Bridge Street is almost uninhabitable from the stench created. Mayor Thompson stated the Council would require an order from the Sanitary Inspector before any action could be taken by the governing body.

Special Committee Appointed

A special committee composed of Mayor Thompson, Aldermen Kennedy, Rollins and City Engineer Charles Mott presented their report on an interview with Hon. T. B. McQuesten, Minister of Highways, respecting the roadway construction on West Dundas Street corner for conversion of transport traffic. A report by City Engineer Mott on the same question was also presented. The report and letter is herewith given:

Sept. 25th, 1940.

His Worship Mayor Thompson and Aldermen of the City Council,
Belleville, Ont.

Re: Roadway Construction, West Dundas St. Corner, for Diversion of Transport Traffic

Gentlemen,—

Your special committee, appointed to interview Mr. T. B. McQuesten, Minister of Highways, relative to the proposed construction across the southeast corner of the West Dundas Street intersection known as the Devil's Elbow, beg to report as follows:

On Tuesday, Sept. 24th, we were received by Mr. McQuesten at his office in the Parliament Buildings in Toronto, where the details of this undertaking were placed before him. He informed us that the Highway Act made no provisions whereby the Government could grant any funds for highway work to any municipality that was incorporated as a city and that the total cost of such a project, if undertaken, would have to be borne by the Corporation. He stated that his Department would assist us in any of the engineering or construction details, should we require it.

We were then instructed to submit our plans to one of the Department's engineers, Mr. Nelson, whose office was located in another part of the building. After discussing the whole situation with Mr. Nelson we were informed that the Department would send down one of their engineers to Belleville to look over the ground and the general layout as to the exact route the heavy transports would be required to take.

We expect to hear from Mr. McQuesten at a later date as to when the engineer will arrive.

Your respectfully,
G. E. THOMPSON,
Mayor.
H. ROLLINS,
Chairman of Public Works.
A. KENNEDY,
Chairman of Fire.
CHARLES A. MOTT,
City Engineer.

His Worship Mayor Thompson and Aldermen of the City Council,
Belleville, Ont.

Re: Roadway Construction, West Dundas Street Corner, for Diversion of Transport Traffic

Gentlemen,—

I beg to report that I received a telephone call from the Chief Engineer's Office of the Department of Highways in Toronto Saturday morning, stating that Mr. R. M. Smith, Chief Engineer, would appreciate meeting a committee of the City Council at the City Hall on Wednesday morning, October 2nd, at 11 o'clock.

Mr. Smith is making a trip through to Brockville and points east this week and wishes to discuss the diversion of the transport traffic along West Dundas Street with our committee on the date mentioned. I informed him that I would arrange to have the committee on hand.

Yours respectfully,
CHARLES A. MOTT,
City Engineer.

A petition received from market gardeners respecting the licensing of hawksters was dealt with. The petition was turned over to the City Solicitor and Mr. A. B. Collins, K.C., submitted his decision to the Council, which in part stated:

Sept. 28th, 1940.

J. Wilfred Holmes, Esq.,
City Clerk,
City Hall, City.

Re Petition of O. A. Lounsberry and others

Dear Sir:

The power to license any trade carries with it the power to prohibit the carrying on or engaging in it without a license. Subject to the limitations contained in the Municipal Act where power is given to license—the Council of the Municipality shall fix the amount of the fee to be paid for a license.

The petition herein pertains to the peddling of farm or garden produce. Section 433 of the Municipal Act deals specifically with the licensing of peddlers, one subsection of which particularly refers to the sale of the growth, produce or manufacture of Ontario. Hence therefore in as much as sub-section 1 (a) of Section 433 provides that—

> "No such license shall be required for hawking, peddling or selling goods, wares or merchandise to a retail dealer, or for hawking, peddling or selling goods, wares or merchandise, the growth, produce or manufacture of Ontario, not being liquors within the meaning of The Liquor Control Act, if the same are hawked or peddled by the manufacturer or producer of them, or by his bona fide servants or employees having written authority to do so."

It is not within the jurisdiction of the Council to entertain the Petition.

The original Petition is herewith returned.

Yours very truly,
A. B. COLLINS,
City Solicitor.

Firemen to Receive Full Pay

All firemen laid off by illness will receive the difference in pay from the city between the amount given by the Insurance Company and that regularly received by the individual fireman affected, according to a recommendation unanimously passed. Due to two residents defaulting on their contract with the city with respect to the purchase of lots, the chairman of the special property committee was authorised to take the proper steps to acquire the said property for the city. Five pieces of property were sold on the condition that the purchasers erect houses on same within a year and pay 1940 taxes on same. The Catholic Women's League was granted a Tag Day on October 5th to solicit funds for war work. A grant of $10 was made to the Fire Department to defray expenses of advertising Fire Prevention Week.

Change Stop Signs

The 'Stop Signs' at the corner of Victoria and Bleecker Avenues will be changed to designate Bleecker Avenue as a 'through street.' A report on the Essex car driven by the fire chief was presented, showing that the vehicle was in need of repairs to the sum of $45.55 and the Comptroller recommended that the car be scrapped rather than have the work done as the car was of old model and had served its usefulness. Mr. Bateman also recommended that the Fire Chief and City Engineer drive their own cars on city business and a stated sum be given each month for maintenance of same. A committee of Aldermen Kennedy, Rollins and Clarke was appointed to investigate the matter and report back.

Petition Received

A petition was received for a new sidewalk on the east side of Bleecker Avenue from Bridge to Dundas Street. The council moved that petition be checked and if properly signed, the Solicitor be instructed to prepare a by-law to have work done under the Local Improvement Act. The Imperial Oil was granted permission to place tanks on their property for the handling of aviation gasoline.

By-laws were passed for deeds of conveyance to be issued to J. B. Ives, Samuel Goodman, Gordon Detlor, H. C. Truesdale, Timothy and Mary Sullivan for property recently purchased from the city.

A by-law was also passed appointing Harold D. Bateman as Controller of Revenue as well as Assessor, the by-law setting out in detail his duties for which he will be paid $2,700 a year from October 1st of this year.

Submit Question

A question will also be submitted to the electors at the Municipal Election in December asking if they are in favor of a two-year term for mayor and aldermen as a War Measure Act and at the request of the Provincial Government. If the electors are in favor of the measure, the mayor and aldermen elected this year for 1941 will serve in 1941 and also in 1942 without having to come to the people in the Fall of 1941. Considerable money can be saved by this procedure. The question will be fully discussed during the municipal election campaign.

Will Purchase Portraits

Under the heading of Motions, Aldermen Allin and Jeffrey moved that a suitable portrait of Their Majesties, King George and Queen Elizabeth be obtained and hung in the Council Chamber.

There being no further business the Council adjourned.

Sneezing Blamed For Causing Colds

Pittsburgh, Oct. 1 (AP)—The Air Hygiene Foundation reported Monday that common cold germs, propelled by a sneeze, hunt new victims at a speed of better than 100 miles an hour. "An unstifled sneeze sprays the air with thousands of droplets, some of which travel 12 feet and at a rate as high as 100 feet per second," said a Foundation bulletin.

Halifax Member Of Sunken Ship Killed in Action

Halifax, Oct. 2 (CP)—Austin McNeill, 20-year-old Halifax youth, was killed along with 16 other members of the crew of the 5,200-ton British steamship Hazby by enemy gunfire, according to a letter received by his father, D. J. McNeill, here.

The letter came from the ship's agents, Sir R. Ropner and Company, Ltd., Stockton-on-Tees. It did not disclose the details of the action, saying only that some of the crew, including the Master, were rescued.

The letter said that "it would appear in view of the number killed that the crew put up a gallant fight before being overcome."

On July 6, the British Admiralty announced the British submarine Truant stopped a German prison ship disguised as a Norwegian freighter and rescued part of the Hazby's crew from it after the freighter was scuttled by the Nazis.

Annual W. A. Conference of Hastings Deanery Held at Roslin

Roslin (Special)—The annual Woman's Auxiliary conference of the Hastings Deanery was held on Friday, September 27th in St. Paul's Church, Roslin. This little church which is one of the oldest in the district, having stood for 96 years on the hill overlooking the village, presented a most pleasing appearance, on this beautiful autumn day, the exterior gleaming with a fresh coat of paint, and the interior bright with golden sunshine and masses of autumn flowers.

There was a celebration of Holy Communion at 10.30 a.m. with the Rector, Rev. F. C. Beazer acting as celebrant assisted in the chancel by the Rev. Rural Dean A. B. Caldwell of Marmora. The special preacher for the morning service was Rev. J. L. Hutchinson of Trenton who spoke to the members of the Woman's Auxiliary from the text found in Matthew 6-13. "For Thine is the kingdom, and the power and the glory." The work of the Woman's Auxiliary is the extension of Christ's Kingdom. In these days of stress and strain, many people feel they are unable to do all they wish to do, but through the power of God all may be accomplished. Hydro power lines passing by our homes are of no use to us unless we are connected with them, so with the power of God it is of no use to us unless we connect with it through sacrament and prayer.

The speaker said, there might be a tendency on the part of some to feel discouraged. After hearing the reports of other branches which perhaps had done more, all were asked to remember that their work was being done for the glory of God.

At noon luncheon was served to ninety persons in the church hall by the ladies of the Roslin church.

Extends Welcome

Mrs. George Clark the Deanery Secretary presided for the afternoon session which opened at 1.30 in the church with the singing of the hymn "The love of Christ constraineth."

Rev. F. C. Beazer led the opening prayers. Mrs. Beazer on behalf of the Roslin Auxiliary welcomed the visitors and Mrs. A. E. Pepper of Tweed replied.

Rev. Mr. Harding of Stirling brought greetings from Bishop Lyons who was unable to be present owing to another engagement.

The secretary was asked to send a letter of sympathy to our Diocesan President, Mrs. J. De Pencier Wright in her bereavement in the death of her sister. The following branches in the deanery were represented and reports from each were given by their secretaries.: Bancroft Sr., Bonarlaw, Sr., Madoc Girls, Roslin Sr. and Little Helpers, Stirling Sr. and Little Helpers, Thomasburg Sr., Trenton Sr., Girls, Jr., Tweed Sr., Girls, Jr. and Little Helpers.

Mrs. Clark read a letter from the Secretary-Treasurer of the Living Message, Mrs. W. P. Nooman, in which she urged more subscriptions to the Living Message, also Gift Subscriptions to people in lonely districts.

Delegate Reports

Miss W. Burns of Kingston who was taking the president's place, and who had recently attended the Dominion annual meeting in Toronto brought highlights from that meeting at which 26 Dioceses were represented. The October number of the Living Message will be the report number this year and all branches were urged to have the President's address read at their next meeting following receipt of magazine.

The W. A. throughout Canada has been able to meet all obligations thus far, but will be asked to assume more responsibility as the society in England which has been assisting the Canadian church has asked to be relieved for the duration of the war.

This will mean an extra $60,000 to be raised by the Canadian church each year.

The Woman's Auxiliary has decided to make an appeal for $10,000 as their share of this amount.

There are 92,000 members in the senior and girls branches and if each gave 25c this amount would be met.

The united thankoffering at the opening service in St. James's Cathedral in Toronto was $12,385. One third of the Diocesan thank offering goes to the united thankoffering.

A resolution was passed that in future pledge money is to be paid quarterly in order to save paying interest on money borrowed from the bank.

Princess Alice, wife of the new Governor General of Canada has graciously consented to be Patroness of the W.A. in Canada.

The Prayer card designed by Sister Evangeline was shown and all were urged to use them.

Mrs. Chalmers, the recording-secretary, spoke briefly. In connection with the Diocesan annual meeting the following motion was passed: that each branch send list of officers to the deanery secretary, after the branch annual meeting, these to be forwarded by her to the recording secretary.

Work of School

Mrs. Boulby, formerly of Chapleau school told of her work while at the school. She said she was pleased to be at a deanery meeting in a country parish as her home had been in a country parish. A junior W.A. has been formed at the Chapleau school and the girls are learning to do their part in church organization and the boys are organized in a church boys league.

Mrs. Boulby described the Dorcas work in the school and told of the work of distributing the clothing to the children.

She told of an Indian boy who had been ordained and was ready for work among his own people. She wanted all to feel that it is worthwhile work watching the children grow. Her closing words were "Beware that slothful to fulfil thy mission, you lose one jewel from your crown."

Mission in China

Mrs. Simmons, formerly of Honan, China, told of her work in Honan, China, where she went with her husband in 1910 and with Bishop White who had been consecrated in 1909. They started the work at Honan, China, with twelve persons and at Christmas of that year they had 8 baptisms and two churches were opened. From 1910 to the present day, China has seen many changes. In 1911 became a republic, in 1913 the great famine, and since that civil wars and the last and greatest calamity, the present war with Japan which started in 1937. Our church has been affected but has been able to help refugees and soldiers and those who were treking to the western provinces, away from the invaders. Since the Japanese invasion all British and Canadian missions have been closed, so it was felt better to leave the work in charge of Bishop Tsen and other native workers. There are now 17 parishes and 12 ordained clergy.

Mrs. Simmons told of the hospital work which is being carried on.

The work has not stopped on account of the war and plans are being made for the future.

A doctor, nurses and more clergy are needed, Mrs. Simmons asked for the prayers of the people for the work in China, and read a letter from Miss Robbins who has been there for many years. We must have courage, hope and faith, and like the early church, adding to the church daily such as should be saved.

Reports Heard

Mrs. Crowe, Treasurer of E. C. D. Fund asked each branch to appoint a secretary for this fund as this money is the only pocket money of the W.A. for special appeals. In one branch on her birthday, each member gives the number of pennies of her age. "Let us put first things first and support our church", said Mrs. Crowe.

Mrs. J. Amieson, Educational Secretary showed some of the literature which was on display at the literature table and urged all to visit it.

Miss Ruttan, Dorcas Secretary, in her opening remarks, said there were more children to clothe this year than before. Last year 1384, this year 1410.

Each deanery is being asked to decide whether they wish to supply money for an underwear and stocking fund, in the same manner as for boots and blankets. It was in this deanery that the resolution to create a boot and blanket fund was started, and now this is done all through the Dominion.

Miss Ruttan closed with this message from Mrs. Lucas, the Dominion Dorcas Secretary: "We must do the work for our King, but we must not let down our work for the King of Kings."

Rev. Mr. Hutchinson spoke of the work of the Church Boys' League and of the Sunday School by post.

The offering for the day which amounted to over $18.00 was given to Miss Ruttan for her work and to the Sunday School by post.

Votes of thanks were given the officers and the missionaries for their splendid addresses and the Roslin ladies for their hospitality.

Miss Porter invited the deanery to hold their meeting next year at Thomasburg. This invitation was accepted. The National Anthem was sung and Canon Swayne closed the meeting with the benediction.

Board members from Kingston present at the meeting were: Miss Burns, Mrs. Chalmers, Miss Ruttan, Mrs. Jamieson from Napanee and Mrs. Crowe from Trenton.

Spectators Watch Italian Attempt To Bomb Haifa

Jerusalem, Oct. 1 — (AP) — Hundreds of spectators on Mount Carmel watched an attempt of the Italian air force Sunday to bomb Haifa, oil port on the Palestine Coast, for the third time in eight days.

Witnesses said the big Italian bombers were met by anti-aircraft fire and twisted and turned in efforts to escape it. Finally the raiders climbed to a great height and loosed their bombs on waste land and into the sea, where they raised huge fountains.

Material damage was trifling. Ten persons suffered minor injuries.

It was the Italians' 10th attack on Haifa, vital outlet for the oil wealth of the Middle East.

"I am Still a Telephone Man"

"I spent all my working years in telephone service. I had only one employer in all that time. The Company was small when I started back in 1887, and I soon came to know practically all the people in it.

"Well, a man gets a pretty good idea of the kind of people he works with in 48 years—one way or another he finds out all about them. He soon comes to know what they stand for—what their ideals are.

"One day when I was only a youngster my boss said to me, 'Jim, we've got to watch our step all the time in this business. People size up the whole Company from what they learn about us. Don't ever forget that its reputation is in your hands!'

"Well, sir, I never forgot that. And I believe most of the men and women I worked with all those years have remembered it, too. That's why Bell Telephone people are looked on as being very loyal to their Company. And if you ask me, I think that's why the Company's reputation as an employer and as a public servant stands so high today."

...and Proud of it!"

Counterparts of Jim Penning, a real flesh-and-blood pioneer, are to be found to-day everywhere throughout the country.

TWO GREAT PILLARS OF BRITISH STRENGTH

Two great pillars of the British world are in the news day after day. One is that of Britain's Prime Minister, one of the outstanding figures in all history, the very embodiment of the body, mind and spirit of the British race and the other is the Rock of Gibraltar, which has stood for all the ages and which today performs the duty of sentinel of the Mediterranean and the route to the Near and Far East.

Mr. Churchill was a figure in the First Great War. The days before the present conflict brought Mr. Churchill to the attention of the world as he predicted the course of the policy of the Huns, which he saw inevitably leading to war. He saw through the Nazis' trickery, deceit, plotting and violence and the Nazis came to hate him. In the course of time, the man who foresaw the criminal intentions of the Nazi Germans was called to the head of the British Government. The man of the age had reached the post for which he was destined by birth, by his vast experience of life, his service on behalf of his nation and by his knowledge of men. This man of many callings is today the voice of Britain. When Mr. Churchill speaks, world democracy speaks. He is himself, therefore, fully armed for the vast burden he carries on those broad shoulders of his. And in him Britain is doubly armed because he knows the peculiar slant of Nazi mind against which he fights the battle for democracy. While Mr. Churchill knows the enemy, Hitler the Hun, does not know Britain, though he may know the Huns.

Mr. Churchill is a man of the world, he is one of that company of great men who make history and decide the course of civilization. So great is he that his name and fame will descend the ages.

On the other side, the enemy's side, is that narrow figure, Adolf Hitler, twisted and warped by hate, vengeance and love of power, a man who is ignorant of many things and particularly of the people he fights against. Hitler knows only the Nazi circle by whom he is surrounded, the sycophants who praise him and extol his service on behalf of Germany.

Mr. Churchill does not yearn for mere power because he is the true democrat and because Britain could not create the aggressor type. The British leader is the common sense type and is swayed by the highest sense of public duty. Hitler's name will be cursed through the ages. Mr. Churchill will be praised and admired for his greatness, for his democratic frame of mind and his genius for democratic government.

Gibraltar, one of the rocks known to the ancients as "the Pillars of Hercules," has played a part through history and civilization. Today it serves its role as the defender of the liberties of the world in keeping the Mediterranean Sea free from the clutches of Hun or Fascist whose avowed intentions are to grab and throttle liberty.

Britain's Prime Minister's inspiration is rooted deep in the British race. He breathes the air of freedom and sturdy defence. He is the voice of that world way of life, that democracy which has been threatened by Hitler and the Nazis and by Mussolini and the Fascists. Beside Mr. Churchill is the Gibraltar of Britain, symbolizing Britain's endurance and reliability. Mr. Churchill is the living spirit of Britain in action.

FORCES AGAINST HITLER

Forces which Hitler did not dream of are being unleashed and will thwart his ambitions and bring his defeat, said Bishop R. J. Renison, padre of the 21st Battalion, C.E.F., in an address to former comrades at St. Paul's Church, Toronto.

Britishers understand that such forces are potent forces. They know that he who trusts in the sword alone is destroyed by the sword. A man like Hitler trusts in arms alone and in the associations which he thinks will weaken and destroy and he fails to take cognizance of those other powers which are possessed by nations which are of a clean heart and are not like the German Nazis who are nourished on hatred of other races and lured by lust for aggression. It is natural that Hitler, who trusts to violence in arms and in terrorization of the minds of his foes, should overlook the powers that lie hidden from the eyes of a man of his type. Only the destructive agencies have been planned for in his warfare.

But the democratic people as they fight to defend themselves have all the forces of which the human body and spirit are capable. These forces, material and spiritual, work together and are woven into a fabric of defence which proves far stronger than the aggression of Hitler and his henchmen.

The Nazis, like gangsters, do not count on the sense of law and justice. Hitler cannot weigh the forces of good which are arrayed against him. He thinks all men will cow before his "lightning war" and he is disappointed when it fails to gain for him his objective.

The great strength the British are assembling and building is not only of material resources but spiritual resources. Even the material resources which are coming to Britain are built upon spiritual values. The justice of her cause brings Britain steadily increasing strength.

So Hitler cannot win. He is like the gambler who loses because he stakes all on the wrong and evil. He cannot develop the resources of the spirit as others do for he is forestalled by his warped outlook upon life.

Axis Broadcasts Fail in Efforts

By KEN CLARK
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Ottawa, Oct. 1 — (CP) — Tip to Goebbels: Experts here think Nazi propaganda on the Canadian air is ineffective. The stuff that rides the short waves out of Berlin, officials who make a business of checking it say, is too plainly marked with the swastika.

The announcers speak beautiful German but at the moment this might be said to defeat its own end. The "news" reviews are sent first in German and then in English, or "American" as the announcers call it. Ottawa's official listeners think this trick is too subtle. Besides, the "news" in German differs from that in English on facts.

Since the war began Berlin has been sending toward North America a poisonous spray, half fact, half "taradiddle", varied with some tremendous whoppers. Examples: sinkings of the Hood, the Ark Royal and the Resolution.

The Italians harmonize in the best way they can, according to official checks on their broadcasts, but there have been some discordant results. Between Berlin and Rome "30 of Britain's 15 battleships have been put out of commission" and then not long ago an Italian admiral asserted seven were still operating in the Mediterranean and five in home waters.

Some Berlin commentators are put forward as having a special appeal in the United States. They assume the pose of the "unbiased observer" but always end up favoring the Nazi way of doing things.

Special to Canadians are two broadcasting lads known as Jim and John. John always explains to Jim how the latter is being buffaloed by Canadian propaganda. In the end Jim sees the light. Here, say the experts, is wishful thinking too obviously marked to be effective.

Lately, however, Royal Air Force raids have thinned the German outpouring of error because planes can ride radio beams, making broadcasting stations an easy target.

16-INCH PEACHES

To a stranger the fair at Armstrong (in the Okanagan) is startling. Of course, you have seen other fairs, bigger ones and more pretentions. But I dare say that nowhere in the world will you see quite the same display of fruit and other things that emerge so fast from the soil of the Okanagan.

The peaches here, shipped up from Oliver and Penticton and Kelowna are so large that 20 of them fill a crate completely. They are larger than a large apple, much larger than a baseball. A few days ago the growers gave a basket of peaches to Sir Edward Beatty and each fruit measured at least 16 inches in circumference. One of them is all you can get through at a meal.

Iceland Has Free Hot Water And Electricity is Cheap

Living in such an isolated country as Iceland may not appeal to many people, but to those who "have to pay the bills" it would have its merits.

According to Clarence B. Burden, who recently arrived in the island to establish facilities of the Canadian Legion War Services for the Canadian troops stationed there, electric power, for one thing, is extremely cheap. In fact, it's so inexpensive that rather than go to the expense of buying switches the inhabitants leave their lights on all the time. Then there isn't the problem of keeping a steady supply of hot water on hand, for the natural hot springs that are everywhere to be found are simply piped to the surrounding houses and business establishments. At the moment, Mr. Burden says in his report to Lieut.-Col. D. E. Macintyre, D.S.O., M.C., general manager of the C.L.W.S., construction is under way to carry the hot water to all parts of Reykjavik, the capital, for central heating of all buildings.

Mr. Burden, a native of Fredericton, N. B., is the legion's supervisor in Iceland and his duties among the Canadian forces there include the providing of entertainment, recreation and personal services such as supplying the men with free note paper, envelopes, books, magazines, daily newspapers, cigarettes and other comforts that will help brighten their lives and keep their morale high. He reports that the troops are in excellent physical condition and are eager for an opportunity of reminding the Germans that the spirit of the old Canadian corps is as alive to-day as it ever was.

Sporting equipment, games, reading matter and a large quantity of writing materials have already been distributed from the legion to the men, Mr. Burden says, and numerous sing-songs have been organized. He adds that the legion's help was greatly in demand during recent celebrations of the first mobilization anniversary of the unit to which he is attached.

Iceland itself, Mr. Burden writes, is a "country of contradictions". He says that it is positively beautiful on occasions, and positively ugly on others. What might be wonderful weather at one moment can change in 10 minutes to a downpour of rain with a raging gale.

The sail up the fiord on arrival at Reykjavik was a thrilling experience, he adds. "The first land sighted was a lofty mountain with its rounded top glistening white in the sun. Glacier ice, it was. Hill after hill passed as we entered the harbour, and the hamlets along the shore, nestling under those hills, were most picturesque with their bright-painted roofs. The houses, which are nearly all made of stone or concrete, are themselves brightly painted.

"Gorgeous flowers grow in profusion in one spot of fertile ground, and just a few yards away are rough, uneven rocks of lava formation. The weather is quite cool, and at nights even cold, yet not a hundred yards from my tent steam rises continually from one of the many natural hot springs."

Mr. Burden says that the people of Iceland are very friendly and highly educated. Although a few still cling to their national dress, most of them have acquired modern clothes. The main town is also modern in appearance and he expresses the belief that, judging from the reconstruction work which is going on, the British and Canadian occupation of the country has been a real benefit to the inhabitants.—Canadian Legion War Services.

U. S. Isolationism Is Dead Says Writer After Visit

I pretend to no magic prescience in my knowledge of American public opinion, but I had the good fortune this month to spend some time in the United States — in the Middle West. Canadians coming back from the Atlantic seaboard have always said that sentiment about the war in New England and New York was not representative. "You must go to the Middle West to find that", they said. Well, I have been to the Middle West, and for what it is worth I will set down what I heard and read and saw.

I visited St. Paul and Minneapolis, Chicago, Des Moines, St. Louis and Louisville. In these cities I had conversations with hundreds of people. We talked and talked and talked — about Canada, about the United States, about the war. We talked about our joint defence plans and the kind of co-operation that is now taking shape in North America, but always the talk turned ultimately to the war and its significance to the world.

In the main, I talked to business men, to journalists, to professional men. On trains and sleepers I talked to commercial travellers and a handful of people travelling for pleasure. Now and again, on the street or in stores, I made other contacts. In Iowa I met a group of farmers. All these people were part of the great Middle West of the United States, that part of the country which traditionally has been reported as the core of American isolationism.

Never have I met kindlier, friendlier people. Never have I found a wider, more sympathetic understanding of Canada and Canadian problems.

Never, I should add, have I found a more profound and sweeping change in a nation's attitude towards world problems. Isolationism in the United States is dead. Dead as mutton. Dead, I think, forever.

How so deep-rooted and violently held a belief as isolationism could, in the course of a few months, vanish is a problem that the historians of tomorrow will explain better than we can.

When the war broke out isolationism was embedded in the minds of the American people. In the vast majority they hated Hitler and his works. But two potent factors dominated their minds. The first was the disillusion and bitterness that had sprung up and been carefully fostered over their entrance into the last war. The somewhat naive but very genuine and honest idealism that had been the mainspring of their war effort had disappeared. In talking to Americans during the first months of the war it was all but invariable to find that they believed Europe was "not American business". There was a deep cynicism, sadly reinforced by the disastrous appeasement policy so long carried out by Britain and France. Europe, they thought, would have to fight it out, discover its own solution for the recurring quarrels of its divers tribes. The course of the war itself during those first months reinforced this view. The Borah-Ford belief that it was "a phony war" admirably suited the prevailing tide of opinion.

That was one, and the most important thread in American reasoning about the war. There was also another, and in the war's early stages it was not apparent that it ran counter to the pattern formed by the first. This was the tacit assumption that the Allies were going to win the war hands down and without much trouble. The American people hated Nazism and wanted to see it destroyed. For this reason they were ready to see American industry supplying the Allies with war material. It was not only good paying business. It also fitted into their conception of what was desirable in the world. They felt they could thus make a useful though limited contribution to a cause in which they had some interest.

But it was the interest of the audience in the grandstand seats, and not that of a people whose own fate and future were desperately and terribly involved.

That whole conception of the war, which dominated the United States until last May and June, has now, I should judge, vanished completely. The Maginot Line collapse, the Dunkirk evacuation, the collapse of France, were hammer-blows that struck with mighty force at the average American just as it did to ourselves. Canada, an active belligerent, in the face of those disasters recast and remoulded her own conception of the war. But the neutral United States did likewise.

Panic swept the country. Almost overnight isolationism vanished. The issues of the war fell into their true perspective. It became recognized in the space of ten days that isolationism was an illusion. Everywhere Americans began to say that American security depended upon British resistance. That mood persists.

In my travels in the United States I met not one single isolationist. Some may exist, but my informants said that they were few and far between. I met many, many men who had been isolationists. They were recanting both privately and publicly; and always their first question to a Canadian was the desperately anxious one, "Can Britain hold out?" Some of them were what we, on this side of the line, would call defeatists. The power of propaganda, the false legend of invincibility with which Hitler has surrounded himself, led many of these people now to fear the worst; and none of them had any illusions as to what then would happen. North America, they knew, would then face Hitler alone.

There is one encouraging feature about this situation and that is the very high level of knowledge about European affairs which exists in the United States. Admitted that American isolationism was falsely based. Nevertheless in the back of their minds most men had absorbed the fact that France and Britain were their first bulwarks of defence, that their security depended upon the strength of those two democracies, that British sea power, above all else, maintained not only British power but American security as well.

In this respect, in their appreciation of the fundamental strategic factors of a world war, the American people are now a hundred times better informed than they were in 1917. For this increase in knowledge credit must go to the generally high standard of work performed by the American newspaper press and by the well-informed radio commentators. Day by day there has been discussion of this subject, and the result is that, when the acute crisis emerged, an informed democracy knew what lay before it.

This is the major conclusion my American journey brought me. — By G. V. Ferguson in the Winnipeg Free Press.

A King Speaks

Buffalo Courier-Express.

He fed the guns at Jutland as a boy. Today he is not a boy. He is a serious, modest, anxious man who gives every ounce of his being to a kingship, not of his own seeking.

Recently we heard his voice. It was a voice hoarse with emotion, and a voice halted, now and then, that its owner might overcome a speech handicap. But, through every minute that it rang out, it was the voice of a man, a fighting man—the sailor-prince who fed the guns at Jutland and who scorns to quit the danger zone now.

He spoke from Buckingham Palace, with "its honorable scar". He spoke from London, ancient capital of the British people. He spoke from London, which "occupies full front" and must bear the brunt of this thing called war, though it be murder. He spoke from the city where he will die, if need be, rather than desert his people—the people who have suffered most, with their faith in country unshaken, "resolute and undismayed", as the King put it.

Don't climb a tree or fence with a loaded gun—a gun has a nasty habit of going off in the strangest places.

Don't point a gun, empty or loaded, at another person — many an "empty" gun has killed an innocent person.

Don't shoot at a flat, hard surface or on the surface of water—ever hear of the word ricochet?

Don't carry a gun or rifle on your shoulder with the muzzle pointing forward — the gun is its own master that way.

Day Dreaming or Phantasy

I spent a number of hours trying to convince a young chap that remaining at home and dreaming of the great things he was "going to do" was not helping his parents who were poor and who could use any wages he could earn. While he was dreaming about what he was going to do in the future, they were giving him his board and lodging.

As I talked to him he used large words and quoted various authorities for his right to live his own life. I pointed out to him that everybody wanted to live their own lives and that sometimes I felt like going off on a long cruise around the world. However I knew I had a wife and family, that I had patients who believed that I helped them and they depended upon me. And so I continued at my work and tried to get a long trip every three or four years and at least two or three weeks vacation every year besides. So it was up to him to work at anything with his hands or with his head, and so help his parents while he had his health instead of waiting for a day that might come.

I told him we all had day dreams—phantasies—in which we saw ourselves doing big things in the world instead of the everyday things of our own work or profession. But if we wanted to be normal, everyday good citizens, we had to work most of the time and then we could dream the rest of the time. We were not entitled to dream and let someone else support us, unless we were sick or unable to work. In fact, he was not a real man, if he would not work with hands or head.

After about six chats with him he found a job handling boxes, barrels, and other heavy objects, paid for his food and lodging, purchased some new clothes.

It was the actual physical work, something to occupy his mind, give him an appetite and a good night's rest that helped him to get hold of himself. There was little or no time left for day dreaming and the fact that he was taking his place in the world gave him the necessary assurance to face the world of reality.

FORMER SOLDIER GETS NEW MEDAL

Awarded by King for Bravery on the Home Front

London, Oct. 1—(CP)—A former soldier still receiving treatment for wounds received in the First Great War Monday was awarded the first King George medal, newly established by His Majesty for bravery on the home front.

Patrick King, a Northumberland air raid warden, was cited for the award after he helped rescue a blind woman from her bombed home while bombs still were bursting nearby.

It will be some time before Patrick King will receive the medal, however, for His Majesty hasn't even seen the design yet.

King Awards George Cross To Lt. R. Davies

London, Oct. 1—(CP)—The King has awarded the George Cross to Lieut. Robert Davies, formerly of St. Catharines, Ont., and Sapper George Cameron Wylie, both of the Royal Engineers, for bravery in removing a time bomb which threatened St. Paul's Cathedral.

It was the first time the newly-created award has been granted. Yesterday the George Medal, also a new award intended for somewhat wider distribution, was conferred upon Patrick King, Northumberland air raid warden, for aiding a blind woman from her bombed home while bombs were still bursting nearby.

Red Cross Prepared For Any Eventuality On Either Coast

Prepared for any eventuality on the Pacific and Atlantic coasts of Canada, the Canadian Red Cross Society has large quantities of supplies stored at strategic points and has thoroughly organized local disaster relief committees ready for action at any time, it was announced yesterday by Dr. Fred W. Routley, national commissioner.

"During the past several months, the Canadian Red Cross has been making an intensive study of disaster relief problems on the coasts," Dr. Routley said, "As a result, our Red Cross divisions at the Atlantic and Pacific, in co-operation with national office, have made preparations for any disaster that might come."

Large quantities of supplies, including clothing, cots and bedding, surgical and medical supplies, as well as a number of mobile surgical units, are stored in readiness for immediate action. Medical and nursing personnel has been organized, and a number of suitable buildings have been spotted at various points from which the work of relief can be done when needed.

"The action we have taken is in line with our Red Cross policy of being prepared for any emergency, and the people of Canada should not be alarmed by these preparations," Dr. Routley emphasized, "Red Cross must be prepared for anything and everything. That is why we are appealing for the support of everyone in our present campaign for at least five million dollars."

Action, Not Words, is What Counts In Community Spirit, Rotarians Told

The responsibility of Rotarians, their duty to the community in which they live and their obligations to their own business was the theme of an interesting address given to Belleville Rotary Club at their weekly luncheon Monday by the Rev. J. F. Reycraft, minister of Picton United Church.

He urged members of the club to live up to at least part of the doctrines Rotary stands for. He described the singing of Rotary songs as so much "dribble." "I don't like to see people breaking their arms patting themselves on the back. Save your arms, you may need them for something else," he said.

The entire business of a man should be in the club, he pointed out, illustrating himself as a plumber, if that business is to be related to the community. And business men cannot condone themselves if they do not live up to the ideals of the club and community. They should live their lives and conduct their businesses as one with the community, rather than in different phases.

It is not an easy task to be a citizen today, the speaker declared. Men and women have a complex task. "We have prated a lot about the things worth living for, and must keep on thinking clearly and know what we are saying. The trouble is too many of us are prone to say too much. When a man claims he knows all about a certain subject it is a sure sign that he is ignorant. I have no time for know-alls. They are too ignorant."

"It is far more important for men to know what they are not, than to boast of what they are," Mr. Reycraft told the clubmen.

"People have asked me, 'are we going to win the war'? he continued. As I view the complications of the world, it seems to me that justice is marching to the gallows again. As one turns back the pages of history and reviews events, there is only one onswer 'We have got to win the war.' For humanity's sake. Not for glory, dominion, power and the right to rule but for the sake of humanity."

"A conception like this isn't mine," the speaker said, "it belongs to the whole Empire, and into that conception is woven the clear thinking of the men and women of the Commonwealth. We all belong to a great last effort to make the world a fit place in which to live. It is all very well to have luncheons, to sing songs, and boast about what we are going to do, but we have a much bigger job on hand. We can correlate our good times with our work, but at present our task is a great one.

Daring British Pilot Attacks Twelve Bombers; Destroys Four

The tenacious courage, do-or-die spirit and cold heroism of the British fighter pilots was related to members of the Belleville Rotary Club at their weekly luncheon yesterday by the Rev. J. F. Reycraft, minister of Picton United Church, guest speaker during the course of his address.

A son of the speaker, now in England with His Majesty's Canadian fighting forces was the source of the story in a letter received yesterday by his parents.

"I stood on the sands of a beach in the south of England," the soldier wrote, "when I looked up and saw twelve German bombers come roaring over the channel. Overhead they sailed apparently headed for an inland objective, when suddenly out of the haze raced a single British Spitfire. The wasp-like machine darted for the nearest bomber, disabled it with a burst of machine-gun fire, then as suddenly darted away. A minute later he returned to the attack and sent another enemy down in flames. Three times he repeated the manoeuvre, and as many times accounted for an enemy."

"Then he whirled out of the fight," the letter continued, "and I saw the machine come crashing down. It hurtled toward earth like a bullet and crashed into flames a short distance away. A cold fear swept over me, for I thought the pilot was in the mass of flames that was once a Spitfire. Then I looked up again, and silhouetted against the sky was a prachute. It landed a few hundred yards from where we were standing. We raced to the pilot and found him to be a smiling British boy with eight machine-gun bullets in his arm. We gave him first-aid treatment and brought him to. He looked up and smiled at us. "I thought I had better bale out before I got sick,' he laughed. His wounds did not bother him. Today likely he is recovering and anxious to take the air again."

JAPANESE PLANES BOMB KUNMING

British Missionary Property and French Buildings Damaged Extensively

Kunming, Yunnan Province, China, Oct. 1.—(AP)— Twenty-seven Japanese warplanes bombed city of Southwest China Monday, causing extensive damage to British missionary property and French buildings.

Kunming is the Chinese terminus of the Indo-China railway which the Japanese hope to use in an assault on Southwest China.

Casualties and heavy damage were caused in many parts of the city, especially the southern suburbs.

A bomb crashed in the compound of a hospital operated by the English Church Mission Society, but the staff and patients escaped injury. A house occupied by English nurses was demolished.

A Y.M.C.A. building and a residence in the English Methodist Mission Compound were damaged.

Japan's demands on French Indo-China for military facilities were ostensibly to gain bases for a drive against Kunming to sever China's outlets to Burma and Indo-China.

(The Japanese are engaged in taking over three air bases in Indo-China. The Kunming raiders may have come from one of these.)

PILOT OFFICER PRAISES HANNAH

'If it Hadn't Been for Him it Would Have Been Impossible for Me to Tell the Story," Says Pilot Officer Clare

London, Oct. 1 (CP Cable)— Pilot Officer Clare Arthur Connor of Toronto told his own story Monday of the bravery of Radio Operator John Hannah in a Royal Air Force bomber which won for the latter the Victoria Cross.

"If it hadn't been for him it would have been impossible for me to tell the story," said Connor, who himself won the Distinguished Flying Cross for the death-defying flight.

"After we were hit, I could hear rounds of ammunition exploding and cannoning against the armour plating at my back. I couldn't get in touch with the crew on the 'inter-Com.' Then I saw the navigator and gunner had been forced to bail out by fire and explosions.

"How Hannah escaped beats me completely. Yet he isn't seriously burned and hopes to be out of hospital before long."

Hannah Saves Pilot Officer

Hannah, at 18 the youngest man in the war to win the V.C., was wireless-operator-air gunner in the machine Connor was flying. Returning from an Antwerp raid, the bomb compartment was hit by a shell, starting a fire which spread rapidly and threatened to envelop the gasoline tanks.

Hannah forced his way through the fire to get extinguishers and found the navigator and rear gunner had been forced to bail out. He could have done the same thing but remained to fight the blaze although the plane's ammunition was exploding in all directions and the intense heat was almost blinding him. Finally the young Scot put the fire out and then helped Connor bring the damaged ship safely back to its base.

Clearance Papers Hard to Obtain For Gas to Japan

Galveston, Texas, Oct. 1—(AP)— The News says the big freighter Panamanian, loaded with about 65,000 drums of gasoline for Japan is having difficulty getting the necessary government authorization to sail from Galveston harbor for Japan.

Although the vessel had completed loading at Texas City and had taken bunker fuel here, she had not obtained her routine clearance papers from Galveston Custom House Monday night, and had not obtained authorization from Washington to take her gasoline cargo out of the United States, the News said.

Other troubles of the big ship included minor damage to her rudder in a collision in Bolivar Roads Sunday night and picketing by the National Maritime Union of unlicensed seamen in protest against her taking a gasoline cargo to Japan.

Nazis Have Comic Explanation for Their Radio Silences

London, Oct. 1 (CP)—When British bombers fly over Germany, German radio stations cease operations.

Last week the Royal Air Force visits were so numerous that German radio stations were silent for quite a time, and now they are forced to find an excuse for these "silent nights", according to the British Broadcasting Corporation.

The German radio stations reported that the absence of short wave transmissions was due to "cosmic causes".

Advice to the Lovelorn'

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

A Spoiled Girl Friend

Dear Miss Fairfax:

My girl friend has a habit of treating everyone better than she treats me. When I escort her to a dance, she seems to get a big kick out of tormenting me by dancing with every Tom, Dick and Harry who comes along. But still I'm terribly fond of her.

Her excuse is that she had one unhappy love affair, and doesn't want to take anyone seriously. She's just out for a good time. How can I make her really care for me? She is a grand person in spite of her cynical views on life.

J.

Perhaps you're spoiling her. She may be one of those persons who never realize how much they care for a faithful friend until he or she begins to fall away. See what a good dose of indifference will do for this young lady.

Is Sixteen Too Young to Marry Twenty-Two?

Dear Miss Fairfax:—

I've asked a girl of 16 to marry me and she has consented. I am 22 years of age. Do you think I'm too old for her, and will a girl of that age settle down and be able to run a home well? I do like a neat and well-run home. She is accustomed to that kind too, but the question is whether she's old enough to undertake it.

Worried

Our grandmothers married at 16 and got away with it, but it is a doubtful question when it comes to the modern girl. In this day and age there are so many more distractions than in grandmother's day. Don't you think at 22 you could afford to wait a little while? You must be a pretty bright boy to be able to maintain a home at so young an age. I'd advise you to wait a year or two.

Brutal Father

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I have been married about nine years to a very mean man. He has even threatened to do bodily harm to the children and me. He's one of those men who's never sorry for anything, while I am just the opposite and cry very easily. How can I adjust myself so that I can be of more value to him?

He will never sympathize with me, but let someone else talk to him and he will smile and try to give comfort whenever he can. He says I'm to blame for anything that happens to me. Just one encouraging word from him would do me so much good, but he says he wants to get rid of me. He begrudges me everything but still he wants me to dress well.

He is so mean that when our little baby, who is just learning to walk, goes to the cupboard and touches things, he slaps her as hard as he can. How can I make him want to share his things with the children an me instead of taking everything for himself?

So Worried

Unless this domestic situation has got on your nerves so completely that you find it hard to distinguish between the dad's grouches and downright brutality, he does not, from your account, sound entirely normal to me.

Anyone who'd slap a year-old baby for touching things may have a nervous wreck on his hands before the child is much older. And, of course, it's more than likely that the child will grow up hating the sight of him. In your place I'd try to take some sort of training so you'd have a little money of your own to fall back on.

Books on Gardening

Dear Miss Fairfax:

Where can I get books on gardening? Aren't there seed houses which put out books of this kind? It seems to me I've heard of them, but not being interested at the time I didn't take down the addresses.

E. J. S.

There are hundreds of books on the subject which you can get by consulting your public library. Write to the firms which advertise seeds, bulbs and plants for their catalogues.

GOOD MANNERS

MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

Your Handshake Tells Others A Great Deal About You

Do you realize how clearly a handshake indicates character? The nervous person hardly puts his or her hands in yours before it is jerked away. The self-conscious person gives you a hand as lifeless as a dead fish. The over-enthusiastic person almost crushes you with the warmth of his or her cordiality.

Avoid these extremes. When you shake hands, do so cordially, with just enough pressure to convey appreciation, and just enough reserve to indicate poise. A perfect handshake, accompanied by a smile, is a social asset that no one can afford to ignore.

One Week-End Guest Gifts

Dear Mrs. Beeckman,

Will you please tell me if it is proper to send a gift after spending a week-end with a friend? This woman I especially have in mind has almost everything she could wish for, but it would be so much pleasure for me to send her a nice gift.

I have sent gifts on other occasions, but have been told it was not the proper thing to do.

Claire

It's entirely proper, and very generous-thoughted, to send a gift to our week-end hostess, as a symbol of our appreciation of her kind hospitality.

You do not tell me whether it was your hostess or someone else who told you "never to do that again". If it's someone other than your hostess, that someone else is wrong in her advice. If it was your hostess who said that, I am sure that she sai dit casually, meaning that she did not wish you to be over-generous to her, or wishing most kindly to imply that she enjoyed having you with her so much that she did not wish you to feel that you should also feel that you should give her the pleasure of a gift.

I am wondering if perhaps your gifts to your friend have been a bit on the expensive or too-consequential side. Perhaps this is what is in your informant's mind. If this is true, you might reconstruct your idea of gifts that you have thought appropriate to her and indicative of your sense of appreciation, and try sending her simpler, less expensive gifts, perhaps something that you have made for her.

Table Manners Tip

When you eat soup, you should dip the spoon away from you. When you eat ice cream, cereal, and indeed everything except soup, the spoon is toward you. Perhaps this difference is because, when you dip the soup spoon away from you you can more easily rest the spoon on the inner rim of the soup plate, thereby releasing a drop of soup that may be lingering on the underside of the spoon.

Failure at College Traced to Lack Of Self-Discipline

By Garry Cleveland Myers, Ph.D.

Many entering college now will never graduate. As we see our sons and daughters and the sons and daughters of our neighbors going off to college, car loads, bus loads, train loads of them, we little sense the disappointments awaiting a large proportion of them within the next six months or few years.

I refer to the tremendous number who will fail at college, who will not go back after the mid-year or June examinations this year or during the next three years. In some colleges, from a quarter to half of those who enter the freshman year won't be able to graduate. Of these failures, the greatest number fortunately, occur during the first year, even the first semester.

Face-Saving

It is curious how many of these college failures are able to slip back home almost unnoticed. For the mental health of the youth and his family, it is well that this is so. Nevertheless, the effort at face-saving is sometimes so intense as to cause for greater psychological damage to the youth and his parents than if a clear breast of the facts had been made in the community right away.

Not for all who fail at college is the effect disastrous. For some, indeed, it proves a spur to honest and effective effort in a more suitable field. But for many, the effect on the mental health of the youth and parents also may be serious.

Graduate students looking for a good field of research for a master's or doctor's thesis, should make a careful study of what happens to the college failures years later, also to the many failures in professional schools, as in law, engineering, medicine.

Failure Causes

Who does fail at college? Many lack sufficient preparation, mental ability to do college work, or effective methods of study.

Some fail because of physical and emotional ill health. Not a few of these emotional cases come from broken homes or from homes that don't enjoy happy family relationships.

Then there is the large, if not the largest group, who fail for want of sufficient self-discipline to work hard and use their time well at college. Their failure comes chiefly through their parent's failure at bringing them up during their earlier years at home.

Though many college doors are still open to practically any high school graduate, few youths who rank below the upper half or even third of their class in high school will succeed at college. In support of this statement are considerable objective data. There is an appalling number of students who rank in the lower half of their high school class and who because of the misguided ambition of their parents, go to college, destined to fail or barely graduate. The mortality among them is terrible. And the heartaches!

Solving Parent Problems

Q. What do you think about ridicule and sarcasm in the classroom?

A. They are about the most savage and destructive practices any teacher can engage in. For the sake of justice, personality and mental health they should be outlawed.

Q. Is it good to have a child who takes music lessons play for company?

A. Depends on the company, how the child feels about it, and what your purpose is. If your aim is to encourage the child in his music efforts; if having him play does this; and if the company are not bored and understand, it might prove excellent. But if your purpose is to exploit the child, don't be so selfish and childish.

QUINTE INSTITUTE

The September meeting of Quinte Institute was held at the home of Mrs. Carman Clapp. Mrs. G. Connor, president opened meeting. Letters and other business were discussed. Mrs. Atkins and Mrs. H. Grills were appointed delegates to the Institute convention to be held in Belleville.

Mrs. W. Gray, convener for legislation then took over the meeting. Community singing was enjoyed. Mrs. George Connors gave a very forceful and educational paper on "Equal rights for women."

Mrs. S. Grills sang "That old wooden rocker" in her usual pleasing manner. Vera Grey gave a humorous reading "Making men propose." Mrs. T. Brown gave a very capable synopsis of the last war beginning 1918 up to the present time. Canada is spending $200,000 a day on war and is standing shoulder to shoulder with the motherland in her time of need. "The Maple Leaf" was sung very heartily.

Mrs. Parrott introduced the guest speaker, Mr. George Reid, Belleville. Mr. Reid spoke of the children coming to Canada to live under the good old Union Jack. They will be lonesome and lost in a strange land among strange people and different customs. It is the duty of Canadians to make them feel at home and happy. They are just little Britons and should be made to feel they are just one big family. A great many will never return to the old land, it is up to Canadians to make them good British subjects.

Real patriotism is not talking but working. There is a work to do, a job to finish to the end. Women have equal rights let them stand shoulder to shoulder with men, as many are already doing, to win this war for right.

"We are not in this war for gains," said the speaker, but for democracy, so every man, woman, and child can worship as they please. General Smuts of South Africa, is one of England's greatest soldiers today, an example of British liberty. What are, Germany and Italy today? Lands of liberty? No. Catholic and protestant alike are not free to worship as they please. Nazism doesn't care for religion or liberty. Hitler must not win, and only with God's help is Britain going to win this great cause.

Mr. Reid is a very enthusiastic speaker and was given a sincere ovation at the conclusion of his address.

Mrs. Leeming gave a reading "We always get along." Mrs. Gray thanked all those who so kindly helped with her program.

The meeting closed by singing the National Anthem and Grace. Mrs. Clapp and her conveners served a very dainty lunch.

DR. DAFOE'S COLUMN on the Quintuplets and the Care of Your Children

Changing The Baby

There wasn't room yesterday to give you all the tips on this subject.

If your baby is a girl, the extra part of the diaper should be folded at the back, when she is lying on her stomach, and in front when she is lying on her back. If the baby is a boy, then always have this extra pad in front.

When you pin the diaper, be sure and hold your hand between the baby and the napkin. Push the pin right through the folded napkin, and then close it and be sure that the safety pins you use are of good quality, so they can't come open by themselves. The fitted diaper should be snug, but not too tight. After you have changed the baby a few times, you will soon know the right tightness to have it.

I always advise mothers that when the diaper is in place, they should take another napkin, and fold it around the baby, high up on the abdomen. Over this the child's shirt should be pulled down. As the child gets older, it is a good idea to pin the diaper to the shirt to keep it in place.

It is a wise mother who watches the solid diapers she removes from her child. From these she can learn a great deal about the physical condition of the baby. For instance, if the marks left by the urine are too highly colored, she will know that her child isn't getting enough water to drink.

At bath time each day, be sure and wash the child carefully. In this routine the technique is different for boys than for girls. In the case of a girl, be sure that you always clean from front to back. As the child gets older, wash carefully after each bowel movement. If, when you are attending to your girl baby, you see any swelling or discharge, be sure and call the doctor, for it might be the beginning of pelitis.

Care of the diaper after it has been removed is important. It should be rinsed and dropped into a pail kept for that purpose. This pail should contain a warm boracic acid solution—a tablespoon of boracic to two quarts of water. Of course, before the diaper is dropped into the pail, it should be flushed in running water. All diapers should be washed once a day and hung out to dry in the sun. When dry, the diaper should be well shaken, and put away in a clean place.

It isn't necessary to iron diapers, but if you have time for it, well and good, for the heat of the iron further sterilizes the diaper.

No Beauty Without Soap

By HELEN FOLLETT

There's no such thing as keeping the facial coating too clean. Sebaceous glands are sending forth a film of oil which picks up atmospheric dust. Unless there is a thorough overhauling twice a day the dust is ground into the pores an blackheads form. When they are present there is a chance of pustules appearing. That condition is enough to break the heart of any beauty seeker.

Soap is the queen of cosmetics. It is the enemy of bacteria, ever present. A soapy cleansing before going to bed, followed by a tepid rinsing, a gentle drying and a brisk tapping with a soothing cream are nuts an raisins for any complexion. A girl who goes to bed with a dirty face deserves her beauty griefs.

Soap is the queen of cosmetics

Out, Spot!

If there are signs of pimples, use tincture of green soap. Mix a little with water, rub it in lightly with the finger tips until you have a rich lather. Green soap is not green, by the way; it is yellow. Remove with warm water. Because of the alcoholic content it may make a sensitive skin feel drawn; then it is necessary to use a cream afterwards. In the morning cleanse with clear, tepid water, dry, dust the skin surface with powdered boracid acid or apply a solution of baking soda one teaspoonful of soda to a cup of water.

Chiropodists caution the customers against using sharp instruments on their, little pink toes. A favorite diversion is to lift the cuticle about the nails using the manicure scissors for the purpose. Naughty. A wound on the foot can cause trouble because the shoe prevents contact with the air. Just the place for germs to congregate, have a picnic.

Corns, calloused spots and thickened cuticle should be frictioned with mineral oil. If correctly fitted shoes are worn these blemishes will not appear. They are caused by pressure and friction.

NEWARK BEARS DEFEAT ORIOLES TO WIN BUNTING

Bears Will Meet Louisville Colonels for Little World Series

7-GAME SERIES

Hank Borowy Hurls Five-Hit Ball in Stopping Opposition 3-2

Newark, N.J., Oct. 1 — (AP) — Newark Bears, who came with a rush in the last half of the International League season to finish in second place and then carried on through the Governors' Cup playoff, will meet Louisville Colonels of the American Association in the Little World Series starting tomorrow night at Louisville, Ky.

The Bears eliminated the fourth-place Baltimore Orioles last night with a 3-2 victory behind excellent pitching of Hank Borowy. It took them seven games to win the final series, the cup and $4,000 prize money. Now they represent their league in the Little World Series for the third time in four years.

Just as Newark's pitching was the main factor in the Bears' comeback after a dismal early-season record, it was Borowy's pitching that carried them to victory last night. The former Fordham University star, 22 years old and a big league prospect, hurled five-hit and its second over the Orioles ball for his third play-off triumph The hits came in five different innings and the only earned run by the Orioles was Art Graham's pinch homer in the ninth.

These Can Enjoy World Series

Pittsburg, Oct. 1.—(AP)—Frankie Frisch pulled Pittsburgh's floundering Pirates into the National League first division and promised a 1941 pennant contender, so the management today rewarded him by adding a year to his contract.

The old Fordham Flash signed for two years when he took over the driving reins last spring, and now he's assured of holding out at least through 1942.

President Bill Benswanger thought extension of the contract would give Frisch assurance of front-office satisfaction with his work.

AUSSIES AT MALAYA

Singapore, Oct. 1—(CP-Reuters)—The Royal Air Force far eastern headquarters announced today that units of the Royal Australian Air Force, equipped with modern fighter and bomber planes "of outstanding performance," are now stationed in Malaya and form "an important part of the air forces of this country."

The announcement said that "as a result of these powerful reinforcements, the defences of Malaya have been greatly strengthened."

THE HEIGHT OF SOMETHING OR OTHER

The height of something or other — probably absurdity — was reached when Max Baer was presented with the world's white heavyweight champion's belt after scoring a victory over Pat Comiskey in the first round of their "battle." Announcer Harry Balcugh is shown announcing Baer as the winner of the fight.

SERIES EXTENDED TO FIVE GAMES

Junior All-Star Lacrosse Team of Ontario Defeats B. C. Team in Fourth Game

Vancouver, Oct. 1 (CP)—Ontario and British Columbia will fight it out tomorrow night in the fifth and deciding game of the Canadian junior lacrosse championship series for the Minto Cup but there is a decidedly eastern tinge to the odds on the series final.

After losing the first two games by scores of 16-13 and 23-21 the easterners came back to capture the next two, 19-11 and again 19-12 in the fourth match last night.

Final contest will be played at New Westminster, B.C., tomorrow night.

The British Columbians blamed their two losses mainly on the fact their star goalie, Crick, was seriously injured when crushed in the nets by Ontario's charging stickmen.

Crick was taken out of the game last Friday night after being rushed into the net and posts numerous times by the visitors and played the final quarter only after having his ribs and hips taped. He played the first three quarters of last night's affair before he was relieved.

Jack Gair led Ontario to victory with five goals in a fine display of sharpshooting. Johnny Hewitt and Tom Madsen each netted three times. The leading British Columbia scorer was Jimmy. Lang who fired three goals. Sam Kabatow and McCall counted twice each.

Lineups:

British Columbia: Goal, Crick; defence, Eastman and McClure; rover, Shaw; centre, Arrell; wings, Kabatow and Moody. Subs. Yeadon, Riddell, Lea, McCaghey, Phillips, Lang, McCall, Nesbitt.

Officials: Jimmy Gunn and Harry Gilmore, both of Vancouver.

U.S. SAILOR ALLEGEDLY DETAINED BY JAPANESE

Shanghai, Oct. 1 (AP) — A sailor from the United States cruiser Auguster was reported to have been detained by a Japanese gendarme Saturday night and allegedly beaten at gendarme headquarters before officers from the warship effected his release. The Shanghai Press said the sailor apparently had been drinking when taken into custody. After his release, it was said, he required medical treatment for face and body injuries.

Burrard Blue Bombers On Way East to Play For Lacrosse Title

Vancouver, Oct. 1—(CP)—Coach Les Dickinson and his Vancouver Burrard Blue Bombers left here Saturday night for Montreal to make their bid for the Canadian Senior Box Lacrosse Championship and the Mann Cup, as one of the strongest teams ever to represent British Columbia in the Dominion playdowns.

Dickinson, who has coached two other Mann Cup teams, the North Shore Indians in 1932 and Richmond Farmers in 1935, was informed just before leaving of the cancellation of a scheduled sudden-death game in Winnipeg against the Manitoba representatives which necessitates the through trip to Montreal for a best-of-three semi-final series with Montreal Indians on October 3 and 4.

Burrards, who are composed mainly of players brought up from the junior and juvenile ranks, present threatening power in every department and will be fighting to retain the championship and trophy won by their intercity rivals, New Westminster Adanacs in 1939. The Blue Bombers dethroned the Adanacs in the inter-city finals here this year.

The winner of the Montreal Vancouver semi-final will meet the winner of the St. Catharines-Brampton series in a best-of-five series for the Canadian championship in Toronto starting Oct. 7.

MYSTERY TO MICKEY

Detroit, Oct. 1.— (AP)—Mickey Cochrane, who managed the 1934-35 pennant-winning Detroit baseball teams, said today he had not been approached by the Cleveland Indians' management regarding a possible appointment as manager if Oscar Vitt resigns.

Now a manufacturer's agents, Cochrane said: "I have not been considering my return to baseball", adding, "I'd have to get a pretty concrete offer first."

KAYOED IN PENNANT CLINCHING GAME

Howell, of the Cleveland Indians is out in the box after chasing a foul and falling over the wall. This was only one of the casualties, the others being caused by various missles thrown from the stands. The Tigers won this crucial game 2-0 and clinched the American League pennant.

Cornwall Flyers To Strengthen Team

Cornwall, Ont., Oct. 1 —(CP)— Officials of Cornwall Flyers of the Quebec senior hockey league announced Monday night the club's lineup will be bolstered this season by the addition of four outstanding players from other teams.

The four are Conny Dion, a member of last year's Sherbrooke Red Raiders and a likely netminder for the Cornwall team this season; Earl Kelly, formerly a centre with Joliette Cyclones; George Ritchie and Jim Drummond, defencemen. Ritchie played with Oshawa Generals last season and Drummond was with Toronto Goodyears.

Club officials also said they are still negotiating with other outside players.

HANEY BACK

St. Louis, Oct. 1.—(AP)— The day after ending their best season in six years, St. Louis Browns of the American Baseball League today signed Manager Fred Haney to pilot the club again in 1941.

"We were well pleased with his job this year, and I am happy to announce he will manage the Browns again", said President Donald F. Barnes. Terms of the new contract were not disclosed, except that it was for the usual one year.

Little Benny's Note Book

This morning I woke up of my own free will without anybody calling me, thinking, G, I'll surprise them, I'll be all up and dressed before they call me even once, boy they wont be able to hardly believe it.

And I jumped out of bed ambitious and hurry up got dressed, and pop was shaving his face in the bathroom, and I waited to see what he would say when he saw me, not being anything, and I thought, G, he's too busy to even notice what's happening, and I said, Good morning, pop, it's brite and early, isn't it?

It's early, and if you're brite, you'll take advantage of the fact instead of using the exter time for dawdling, pop said.

Being the wrong answer, and I quick got washed including my neck and was the first one down to breakfist, and ma came in and sat down without saying anything special, and I said, Good morning, ma, do you feel all right?

Why yes, thank you, naturelly, is there any reason why I shouldn't? ma said, and I said, Well, you're up pretty early in the morning, aren't you?

No earlier than usual for the lands sakes, such an idea, ma said, and I said, Well anyways, here I am already.

I'm sure you're welcome, cant you drink your milk so none of it drips on your chin? ma said, and I said, Maybe my hand is a little shaky on account of me getting up sudden instead of gradual.

Being a real hint only ma didn't take it, asking me how I got such crazy ideas instead of asking me why I got up sudden, and I started to think of all the exter sleep I missed by not waiting to be called, and the thought made me so mad I decided never to try it again all my life.

Proving if you dont give people credit they wont be any more useful than they can help.

BAKER REHIRED

Detroit, Oct. 1—(AP)—Walter O. Briggs, owner of the Detroit Baseball Club, announced today that Del Baker had signed a contract to lead the Tigers again in 1941. Salary terms were not divulged.

Baker became Detroit's manager in the middle of the 1938 season, replacing Gordon (Mickey) Cochrane. He piloted the Tigers to a fourth place finish in 1938, to fifth place last season and to the American League pennant this year.

Cincinnati's Tight Pitching Against Detroit's Hitting Makes Teams Evenly Matched

Tigers Are Favorites for the Series but Reds Think it is Their Year

FREY MAY PLAY

Neither Manager Would Name Starting Pitcher for First Game Wednesday

(By Gayle Talbot, Associated Press Sports Writer)

Cincinnati, Oct. 1—(AP) — The Cincinnati Reds of the National League and the Detroit Tigers of the American, couple of worthy champions, will pile into each other before a jam-packed crowd of 33,000 at Crosley Field here tomorrow in the opening game of the 1940 world series.

They will battle for two days here, shift to Detroit for three more shots at each other, not stopping for a day of rest, and then roll back here next Monday to settle the argument.

The title is settled by four out of seven, and most of those who followed baseball think the Reds and the Tigers are likely to go the limit. They appear to be evenly matched—Cincinnati's tight pitching against Detroit's distance hitting. Though it is far from conclusive, the most popular opinion is that the Reds are due to give the National League its first championship since 1934.

It is difficult to say why the Reds are a popular choice. Perhaps sentiment has much to do with it. They took a quick, though gallant, beating from the New York Yankees a year ago. They recovered from that licking, which was almost humiliating toward the last, to come back and capture their league bunting again by a margin that left no doubt.

Combines Meet Columbus Grads In City Wednesday

Not since the days of Harry (Red) Batstone, Harry Sniderman, Pinky Clarke and other well known Bell Telephone baseball players has a major Toronto baseball nine appeared in Belleville but on Wednesday afternoon the Columbus Grads, intermediate winners of the T.A.B.A., play the South Hastings "Combines" at the Belleville Fair Grounds in the O.B.A. semi-finals of the intermediate series. The Columbus Grads won the initial game of the series at Toronto on Saturday, by a score of 8 to 2, but the Combines feel they can knot the round with a home-diamond victory Wednesday.

The Toronto Columbus Grads boast of several senior baseball players on their roster, including Carmen Bush, their pitching-manager, Red McDowell, Jack Stewart and Vetore, while "Lefty" Moszynski is their ace portside hurler, who may get the pitching assignment of the visiting Toronto Grads here on Wednesday.

The advancement of the "Combines" into the intermediate O.B.A. semi-final series marks the farthest advancement a local district baseball nine has made in the provincial playdowns since the days of the old Belleville Nationals of senior diamond fame. Manager "Doc" Empson, of the Combines, is flirting with the idea of starting Chuckie Barriage, his diminutive right hander, against the hard-hitting Grads, Barriage having pitched the local nine into the semi-finals versus Deloro. Ideal weather conditions should encourage a large gallery of baseball fans out for this important provincial baseball play-off, that brings the Toronto Columbus Grads to Belleville versus the "Combines" at the Fair Grounds.

DUNDAS BOMBERS MAKE THE LEAP TO SENIOR RUGBY

Team Will be Known This Year as the Hamilton Alerts

OPEN WITH BEACHES

Team Has Added Number to Championship Team of Last Year

(By Tommy Moore, Canadian Press Correspondent)

Hamilton, Oct. 1—(CP) — The scourge of eastern intermediate football in recent years, Dundas Red Bombers have moved into senior company lock, stock and barrel this season, a move which should finally provide the answer to the often-asked question: "How good are the Bombers?"

They haven't really been pressed for the last three seasons in which they won the Ontario Intermediate Championship three times. The only thing new about them for their debut to senior play is the name. They'll be known as Hamilton Alerts.

Their coach, Eddie McClean, says the move is just an experiment—but he hasn't lost a chance to strengthen them for the coming campaign. Alerts open the union season against Beaches in Toronto Saturday and that should be a severe enough test for any experiment.

McClean has picked off three men from the Interprovincial Union Tigers to bolster his 1939 team. The three—George Mountain, Johnny Agnew and Hardy Awrey—played with Tigers for four years and all are first-class footballers. Ron Waterman, formerly of McMaster University, also has thrown in his lot with the Alerts after starting the training season with Tigers.

Count on Gibb Brothers

McClean is counting heavily on the Gibb brothers — Walter and Oddie. Walter is a professional baseball player and will relieve at quarterback. McClean believes he will hold his own with any passer in the league after some of his rough edges have been smoothed. Oddie is the kicking and plunging half voted the most valuable player with Dundas in 1939.

Mountain and Agnew will provide the senior experience along the line. They'll be helped by such outstanding intermediates of other years as Ray King, Harold Gray, Johnny Travele and Jack O'Breza. Howard Awrey will team with his brother Hardy on the backfield and will be used mainly on end runs.

Others on the Alert Club include Wilnonis, who worked out with the Tigers earlier, Southwick and Withers, both former Tigers, Cook, Cousins, Clark, McDonald, Menet, Fleming, Champ, Toth and Boles and the Passmore brothers, Alex and Stan.

Looking them over there aren't many names the senior football fans will recognize. The bet around the club's east-end Hamilton headquarters is that they'll be a very well known group by the time the season ends.

Sports Roundup

(By Eddie Brietz)
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

Cincinnati, Oct. 1.—(AP)—This fine old city is baseball crazier than it was when we shoved in a year ago . . . . Mebbe it's because the Reds haven't already lost a pair to the Yanks. . . .At any rate, if the fever is any worse when we move on to Detroit, we're going to head for the nearest storm shelter and stay there for the duration. . . . Even the sober-faced Deacon Bill McKechnie is going around wise cracking (the Deacon wasn't feeling so pert when he brought the boys home after those first two games in New York last year) . . . . There is a feeling around town the Reds are going to take the series in five or six games and the feeling isn't based on the fact the Tiger pitchers are whipped down, either . . . James J. Carroll, the big St. Louis Bookie, is here quoting the Tigers 2-3 favorites and stands to clean up a fortune if the Reds drop out again.

Billy Kelly, sports editor of the Buffalo Courier-Express, may have scored a beat if what he wrote the other day pans out—that Detroit may swap Buck Newsom during the winter because some of the Tigers fans have soured on some of his antics.

The team that lands old Steve O'Neill
Will come out on top in the deal.

GEORGE PAVISH EASILY DEFEATED BY MIKE DOMERKO

First Time Wrestler Has Been Defeated in Local Ring in Two Years

LARGE ATTENDANCE

Valdez Pulled Ligaments in His Arm and Unable to Finish Bout With Allen

After two seasons of undefeated wrestling activities in a local ring, the reign of George Pavish, the ferocious and pugnacious Macedonian, came to an abrupt end at the Hume arena last evening when he met (much to his sorrow today no doubt) the 231-pound Mike Domerko, former Syracuse football lineman. Pavish tried all of his Sunday unorthodox ring efforts, unscrupulous attacks, villainous efforts and made faces at Domerko sufficient to frighten even the more brave, but all of this failed to impress the goliath-like Domerko, who absorbed all of Pavish's unorthodox efforts and won the main bout to dethrone Pavish in consecutive falls.

Strange as it may sound Domerko brought his rugby football knowledge into play in defeating Pavish, because on both occasions Domerko softened his heretofore villainous opponent with the fast and sudden application of hard and driving flying tackles, and on both occasions left Pavish languishing on the floor an easy victim for a full old-fashioned press. "Big Mike" timed his work perfectly as he won both falls within seconds of 20 minutes after entering the ring for the first and second rounds. There wasn't any more and confidentially Pavish was just as well satisfied.

Weathered Attack

The increased number of patrons were rather forlorn in the early stages when Pavish opened with an unscruptious and ferocious attack; employing fists, elbows, gouging knees and any other method of illegal ring effort known in the business, or even out of it. Domerko weathered these attacks and when he finally gained the upper hand and moved into a period of retaliation the crowd sensed "here is our man." Domerko did not fail them and that's why you see so many gleaming faces on Front Street today enjoying an expression of satisfaction.

A rather unfortunate accident occurred in the semi-ginal bout when Pedro Valdez, always a favourite in a Belleville ring sustained a severe arm injury at the hands of Jimmie Allen, former Canadian amateur champion, and was unable to finish the third round, after each had gained a fall. Displaying speed, stamina and agility, these two boys put on a sterling bout, Valdez winning the first fall as he pinned Allen with an armlock and press following the application of several hard flying mares after 19.35 minutes in the first round. Allen gained a rolling double arm scissors on the Mexican early in the second round and for nearly 20 minutes subjected Valdez to a continuance of severe punishment which ventured so far that on several occasions Allen pleaded with Valdez to "give up," but the Mexican stuck it out and lost the fall with a double armlock press. Valdez's arm was so badly mutilated and the ligaments strained that it was impossible for him to continue and Allen was awarded the bout.

Local Boys Applauded

Two local lads gained the applause of the patrons as Jimmie Mitchell, a local Greek boy, stayed eleven minutes with Jimmie Allen, the Canadian champ, before he fell victim to a reverse rolling head scissors, while Roy Doherty, of Shannonville, lacked experience when he lost the curtain-raiser to Tom George. Doherty meant well and was patting George on the back as a hoax, which boomeranged, as referee Cliff Faux was doing the same thing at the same time. Mitchell showed willingness and gameness in his bout with Allen, it being the first time Mitchell had ever wrestled a top-notch grappler, especially a champion. Professional wrestling will continue at the Hume arena next Monday night with three more outstanding bouts.

FOOTBALL TEAMS HARD AT WORK BEFORE OPENING

STOREY, SELKIRK OUT

Brilliant Players of Argos Join Squad in Heavy Workout

By The Canadian Press

The football practices take on a grimmer note this week. There are only a few days of grace left to iron out loose ends that may spell the difference between victory and defeat when the east gets its season under way Saturday.

There was none of the usual Monday-night frolicking at the training camps. Toronto Argonauts, Montreal and Ottawa Rough Riders all went through heavy drills and the Riders had a new injury on their casualty list today because of heavy going.

Flying wing Ted Edwards suffered a twisted ankle during a brief scrimmage drill. X-rays will be taken to determine the extent of the injury but club officials expressed hope that it would not keep Edwards out of the lineup against Hamilton Tigers Saturday.

With Murray Griffin and Stan O'Neill, two of the backfield stars, completely recovered, Coach Ross Trimble sent the Riders through some new running and passing plays.

The Argos got a 20-minute pep talk from Lew Hayman, who wasn't at all pleased at their showing against Beaches Saturday. After that Hayman sent them into a heavy session of blocking, running and calisthenics.

Red Storey and Earl Selkirk, two veteran backs who did not play in the 12-3 loss to Beaches, returned to work but there still was no sign of Bill Stukus, the flashy quarterback who quit after Hayman shifted him to a blocking-back position.

Bill Hughes put his Montreal Big Four entry through a dress rehearsal of blocking and pass defence, paying particular attention to a defence of a short-pass play he thinks Argos will use against his club in their opener. There were 31 men in uniform. Hughes hasn't decided yet what 24 he will dress against Argos.

Baseball Experts 'Slightly' Wrong

Usually in The Associated Press yearly poll, the "by-liners" come reasonably close to telling which team'll be where when the season ends—but not this baseball year.

The consensus in the American League was 100 per cent wrong, and they hit on only three teams in the National League. Here's the poll—and how the teams ended.

National League

Experts picked: St. Louis, Cincinnati, Brooklyn, Chicago, Pittsburgh, New York, Boston, Philadelphia.

Final standings: Cincinnati, Brooklyn, St. Louis, Pittsburgh, Chicago, New York, Boston, Philadelphia.

American League

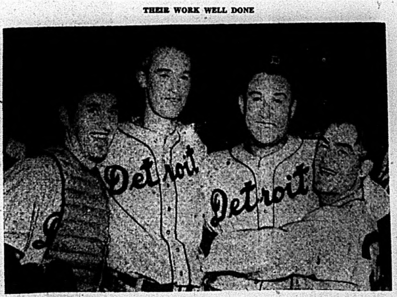
THEIR WORK WELL DONE



Having assured the Motor City of the 1940 American League pennant and the chance to battle the Cincinnati Reds for the series, these four can call their day's work well done. LEFT to RIGHT, "the batteries," Catcher Sullivan and Rookie Pitcher Geibell, Rudy York who poled out the homer that put the game on ice, and Manager Del Baker, who piloted the Tigers through a tough season to the top of the American heap. Geibell is unable to play in the series as he didn't join the Tigers until after the Aug. 31 deadline.

Had Paul Derringer or Bucky Walters piled their original baseball positions and continued to at those positions this year's world series—and last year's too—might have been an entirely different affair. Originally Derringer commenced his baseball career as a catcher, while Walters played third base for Boston and the Phillies before he was induced to give pitching a trial. Incidentally Walters' proper name is Walter, without the "S", but sportwriters repeatedly added the letter "S" until today Bucky accepts the new spelling of his name. As a third baseman batted balls continued to roll through Bucky's bow legs with alarming regularity until Jimmie Wilson, who was manager of the Phillies in 1934, persuaded Walters to take a fling at pitching, as Bucky possessed a world of speed. The rest is history. As for Derringer the catcher, well his minor league team was trailing 10 to 0 one day and in desperation "Tom Paul" cast aside the catcher's equipment and hurled no hit ball for the remainder of the game. He never caught again.

Both the Tigers and Reds are bewailing injuries, something that is prevalent prior to most world series inaugurals, usually used as a publicity decoy and little heed paid to. It is generally conceded that the Cincinnati Reds are the best defensive ball team to come out of the senior circuit in some years. For instance the Reds are leading the National circuit in fielding and boast Ripple and Craft as two outfielders who have fielded 1000. during the regular season. Much credit is given the pitching staff of the Reds, but looking behind the scenes we find Manager Will McKechnie, one of the shrewdest bosses in the baseball business, has as his helpers Coaches Jimmie Wilson and Hank Gowdy, two ace catchers of their respective major league eras. Perhaps to Wilson and Gowdy should go the lion's share of success enjoyed by Walters, Derringer, Junior Thompson, Joe Beggs, who the Yankees sold "up the river" last fall and other Cincinnati pitchers who have the advantage of advice from McKechnie's two assistants.

Over in the Tigers' camp, like the majority of American League clubs to gain world series prominence in recent years, Del Baker's Detroits lean more towards offensive. True enough the Tigers have Rowe, Newsom ,the veteran Tommy Bridges and Smith as outstanding moundsmen, but the Tiger fans await the appearance of York, Greenberg, McCosky or Gehringer at the plate to put on their power act and deliver the goods. Actually the analysis of the Tigers' 1940 success can be attributed to their stout hearts, which made up for numerous other shortcomings of the club. Detroit, as rabid a baseball city as one could wish for, is enjoying its sixth American League championship, having won in 1907, '08 and 09 under Hughie Jennings and in 1934 and '35 under Mickey Cochrane. In 1935 the Detroits won their only world series pennant. Although it is generally conceded that for a change the Cincinnatis are slight favourites this year, but remember that spirit of determination and those stout Tiger hearts that won the bunting in the most torrid American League race experienced in years.

Admittedly a versatile nine of baseball players, the South Hastings "Combines" have their backs to the wall and will have to put their versatility into practice at the Fair Grounds on Wednesday when they meet the Columbus Grads, champions of the T.A.B.A. A loss Wednesday means elimination and even though the first game of the world series is scheduled for the same day and hour, local fans can well afford to abandon their radios in favour of the actual game itself. A couple of badly played balls by the Combines' outfield last Saturday in no way assisted the South Hastings cause in Toronto. Errors of omission do not appear in the box score, but sometimes are more costly than actual miscues of commission and such was the case in Toronto, Carman Bush has a sturdy band of apple-knockers that will take a lot of beating before they say 'uncle', but Doc Empson's crowd are not discouraged and all they ask is a little moral support and the attendance of the fans to encourage them on to what may yet become a provincial championship in reality.

Wrestling patrons left the Hume arena last night quite satisfied they had been well repaid for their attendance—they were present to see the ring reign of the detested Geo. Pavish brought to an end. And the end came abruptly at the hands of Mike Domerko, former Syracuse football lineman. Domerko absorbed all the punishment Pavish could pile on him and after weathering some rather unscrupulous attacks Domerko applied some pressure of his own, handed out several good old fashioned flying tackles and left Pavish helpless and defeated in straight falls. The fans were satisfied. It was unfortunate that Pedro Valdez was forced to concede the third and final fall to Jimmie Allen in the semi-final, but Allen really gave Valdez the works with a continuance of arm-twisting locks, that ultimately resulted in a helpless right arm dangling from the Mexican's side and he was in no fit condition to continue. Roy Doherty and Jimmie Mitchell, the local lads included on the program were appreciated in their efforts also.

ADD SPORT EYE .. ..SIX

Fred Haney and Frankie Frisch have been resigned to manage the Browns and Pirates respectively and can enjoy the world series without worrying about next year's salary. Del Baker and Bill McKechnie are certain of their jobs, but poor old Oscar Vitt is peering into a clouded future. Rumours have "Black Mike" Cochrane at the helm of the Indians next year, but if the Clevelanders couldn't take a verbal drubbing from Vitt, the players had better start revolting against Mickey now. This fellow Cochrane can really blast.

Kenesaw Mountain Landis, Commissioner of Baseball, announced today that Umpires Bill Klem and E. Lee Ballanfant would work the world series starting in Cincinnati Wednesday. The National League alternate is Larry Goetz.

Emmett Ormsby and Steve Basil were named by President Will Harridge as the American League umpires, with William Grieve as alternate.

Welterweight Title Declared Vacant

Baltimore, Oct. 1.— (AP)—Asserting that it was "time to stop the tieing up of boxers and smash monopolies", the Maryland State Boxing Commission declared Henry Armstrong's welterweight championship vacant today.

Stanley Scherr, Commission chairman, said the move was directed against the "New York Boxing Monopoly" in general, and that by taking this stand Maryland became the first State to oppose the "powers that be".

The action came, Scherr declared after he had been advised by Eddie Mead, Armstrong's manager, that the titleholder could not fight anywhere without the consent of Promoter Mike Jacobs of New York.

HOW TO OVERCOME ITCHING PILES

If you are annoyed with itching piles or rectal soreness, do not neglect the same or run the risk of an operation. Any itching, soreness or painful passage of stool, is nature's warning and proper treatment should be secured at once For this purpose get from J. S. McKeown or any druggist, a package of Hemroid and use as directed. This formula, which is used internally, quickly relieves the itching and soreness and aids in healing the sore, tender spots. Hemroid is highly recommended, is easy to use and it seems the height of folly for anyone to risk an operation when a simple remedy, which is so pleasant to use may be had at such a reasonable cost.

INDIANS TO BE REGISTERED

Step Taken Because Many Unable to Obtain Work Without Cards

Ottawa, Oct. 1 (CP)—Registration of all Indians is proceeding, Chief Registrar Jules Castonguay said today. It is being carried out by Indian agents.

Because of the wandering habits of many tribes, particularly in the north, the lists may not be complete for two months, he said.

Acting under the regulations which gave him power to decide on methods of registering postponed classes, Mr. Castonguay made known his decision to register those confined in prisons and mental institutions only upon their discharge.

Many Indians, it was said, who were exempt from registration at the discretion of the Chief Registrar, were unable to obtain work without registration cards.

Under the registration regulations as at first drawn, Indians were exempt from registration together with certain other classes. Later the regulations were changed to provide for registration of all classes upon the decision of the Chief Registrar.

Registration of Indians will eliminate an anomaly which resulted in several Indians being hailed to court for non-registration.

VISITOR SAYS BELLEVILLE GIRLS BEST DRESSED

He's been everywhere and he keeps his eyes open. When he praised the way Belleville girls dressed we asked him whether it was their hats or their dresses that impressed him.

"Well," he hedged, "that well dressed impression just seems to start from the ground up." So we looked them over from the ground up and we saw what he meant.

It was the Nugget shine on their shoes, of course, just as we had suspected. It just goes to show that the first step in well dressed appearance is a smart, lasting Nugget shine.—Adv.

58 FEEDING CENTRES OPENED

London, Oct. 1 (CP).—Lord Woolton, Minister of Food, announced today that 58 emergency feeding centres have been opened in bombed sections of London to meet the needs of persons whose homes have been damaged.

AT THE BELLE

"Pride and Prejudice"

Greer Garson and Laurence Olivier picked up where they left off five years ago as reigning favorites of the London stage for their first co-starring film, the picturization of Jane Austen's romantic comedy, "Pride and Prejudice," which comes today to the Belle theatre for an engagement of four days, and was selected specially for the Belle theatre's eleventh anniversary show.

They form the perfect screen romantic team with Miss Garson playing the lovely but prejudiced Elizabeth Bennet and Olivier as the proud Darcy. The amusing story in which Miss Austen poked fun at the haughty society of the early nineteenth century is woven around the five unwedded Bennet daughters who live in a provincial English town. They are a constant worry to their fluttery mother whose one ambition in life is to marry them off to suitable husbands.

When two wealthy and aristocratic young gentlemen come to town in the persons of Mr. Darcy and his friend, Mr. Bingly, Mrs. Bennet sets out to land them for her daughters. They are repelled by her lusty vulgarity, since she was a shopkeeper's daughter, but Darcy falls in love with Elizabeth despite her family and Bingly finds himself smitten by Jane. Mrs. Bennet's meddling breaks up both romances.

Darcy, caught between his pride of family and love for Elizabeth, finally decides that Elizabeth's love is the more important of the two. He nobly comes to the rescue when Lydia, flightiest of the daughters, creates a scandal by running away with an adventurer, Wickham. With the Bennets to be disgraced, he forces Wickham to wed Lydia, and Elizabeth forgives him.

Hilarious comedy performances are given by Edmund Gwenn and Mary Boland as Mr. and Mrs. Bennet, Edna May Oliver as the crochety old dowager, Lady Catherine de Bourgh, and Melville Cooper as her librarian, Collins. Miss Garson's delightful sisters are played by Maureen O'Sullivan as Jane, Ann Rutherford as Lydia, Marsha Hunt as Mary and Heather Angel as Kitty. Others featured in the notable supporting cast are Bruce Lester as Bingley, Frieda Inescort as Miss Bingley, Karen Morley as Charlotte, Edward Ashley as Wickham and E. E. Clive as Sir William Lucas.

Robert Z. Leonard and Hunt Stronberg, famous director-producer team of such success as "The Great Ziegfeld," "Malteam" and "The Firefly," were again associated in making "Pride and Prejudiced."

AT THE McCARTHY

"The Boys from Syracuse"

Allan Jones, Martha Raye, Joe Penner, Rosemary Lane, Charles Butterworth and an excellent supporting cast of funmakers, in the musical-comedy laugh hit of the century, "The Boys from Syracuse," the picture you must see, is now playing at the McCarthy Theatre. In addition the program includes Fox News Events, presenting the first pictures of widespread London raids, also the most sensational war films ever photographed —a rain of readly explosives loosed by Japanese airmen, shatters Chungking before your eyes, the horror of blazing destruction and havoc in China.

An all-star comedy, "Twincuplets" and a Walt Disney technicolor cartoon, Donald Duck in "The Hockey Champ" complete this excellent show for the enjoyment of all Belleville theatre folk. On Wednesday evening only in addition to the above, by popular request, a return engagement on the stage of Morgan Thomas and his band, presenting a variety of numbers and specialties.

AT THE CAPITOL

"I Can't Give You Anything But Love, Baby"

Public enemies, "muscling in" on the music business, set the lively comedy pace for Universal's musical farce, "I Can't Give You Anything But Love, Baby" which is now playing at the Capitol Theatre.

Generously filled with laughs, rapid-fire comedy and new songs, the picture features Broderick Crawford as the poetic gangster who turns to song writing in the hope of finding his long lost sweetheart. Crawford proves himself a first-rate comedian and keeps the gaiety of the story moving at high pitch.

Peggy Moran, a pretty screen newcomer, shares romantic honors in the film with Johnny Downs, and also joins him in singing three original songs. The melodies include "Day by Day," "Tomato Juice Song," and "Sweetheart of Public School 59."

A pair of clever negro entertainers, Jeni LeGon and "Sunshine Sammy," sing ond dance to the old time favorite, "I Can't Give You Anything But Love, Baby", from which the picture takes its title. Others who help make the film delightful screen fare are Warren Hymer, as a comedy gangster rival of Crawford, John Sutton, as an underworld "Emily Post," and Jessie Ralph as the mother who feels disgraced then her gangster son takes up music.

Comedy in the story hits a fast stride when Crawford kidnaps Downs and sets him to work composing music for sentimental poems. There is a temperamental actress, played by Gertrude Michael, who turns out to be the racketeer's missing sweetheart.

Hilarious action centers around a radio station and a swanky penthouse. A whirlwind finale includes a surprising double marriage. A decidedly novel twist comes at the end after the rival gangsters, Crawford and Hymer, surrender to police. The picture was directed by Albert S. Rogell for highest laugh value, and Ken Goldsmith was the associate producer. Elwood Bredell's photography fits the mood of the production.

"Treasure Island"

The generations of people both young and old who have been thrilled by "Treasure Island," Robert Louis Stevenson's famous story of pirate adventure, will find the vivid story-book experiences of their youth created on the screen in the picture....with Wallace Beery and Jackie Cooper and Lionel Barrymore.

NATURAL PEOPLE DOING OWN JOBS MAKE GOOD FILM

Canadian Screen Effort Directed at Getting Expression of Group, Acting Humanly, to Fellow Citizens

By Ken Clark Canadian Press Staff Writer.

Ottawa, Oct. 1 (CP)—Movies of the people by the people for the people, or every man his own Barrymore, might be the slogan of the Federal Film Board producing with the Director of Public Information the series, "Canada Carries On."

In the six films already produced —Atlantic Patrol, A Letter From Aldershot, Home Front, Front of Steel, Squadron 992 and Wings of Youth—not a solitary professional actor has been used.

As long as a man is doing his own job and is not asked to do anything silly, a spokesman for the Film Board said, he will do better in front of the camera and the microphone than any actor.

One performer in Wings of Youth even acted as his own cameraman. This was the young pilot who was selected to represent a student in the air training plan. To the strut of a wing of his plane was fixed a camera controlled by a string leading into the cockpit. The flier was told what he was to do and turned loose.

He did everything perfectly, when he banked or rolled he was instructed to pull the string and hold it taut until he had finished the manoeuvre. This sequence, as the pilot presumably did his first solo, is considered the high point of the film and not the massed planes, impressive as they were. The pilot, selected by Director Raymond Spottiswoode, Toronto, registered without the slightest self consciousness the emotions of a soloist until he found the magic of flying, laughed to himself and rolled again.

Object of Effort

"This," the spokesman said, "was one of the simple little things. It is all people, people, people, to get their report from one man to the other.

"What we are trying to do and began to get it in Atlantic Patrol, is a message from people to people. Not as something from above downward but as an expression of one group acting humanly, to their fellow citizens.

"In Atlantic Patrol, after all the spectacle—there is no other actor as good as the sea—we began to get it with a shot of a couple of stokers. They come up off watch and sit down by a ventilator to rest. They take grubby cigarettes from behind their ears and light up.

"We had more in A Letter From Aldershot in the sequence where the men in the picture speak directly to the audience. There was a little sergeant from Saskatchewan who said he was speaking to the people of the province and particularly to those from Regina and his wife and children. The muscles of his face and his way of speaking had nothing to do with film people, the thing was simply out of the man who said it."

This is the principle on which John Grierson, Film Commissioner; G. H. Lash, Director of Public Information; F. C. Badgeley, Stanley Hawes and Stuart Legg of the government motion picture bureau are making their war films. The bureau works with Directors Gordon Sparling and Jack McDougal of a Montreal motion picture firm (Associated Screen News) and with Director Spottiswoode (of Audio Pictures, Toronto).

CARMEL Y. P. U.

The regular meeting of the Carmel Y. P. U. was held on Wednesday evening, Sept. 25th at Carmel United Church with the President, Miss Hazel Hicks in charge.

It was opened with a song service. Hymn number 384 was sung followed by the responsive reading of psalm one. Rev. Mr. Davis then gave some very interesting events of his life out west, when on mission work among the non Anglo-Saxon people. The meeting was then closed with the Mizpah Benediction. Mr. Carl Haynes was in charge of the recreation period.

"Flying Blind" by VERA BROWN

CHAPTER THIRTY-THREE

Dudley waited. He watched the slumping Tex with unwavering eyes. "Pour him some coffee, when it's ready," Dudley said calmly. She pushed it aside.

"Drink that!" Dudley ordered.

"I can't. It's too hot."

"I said, get it down!"

Judith was on the other side of the room watching. Dudley's set face terrified her. She thought that he would never believe her—never believe she had not planned to see her ex-husband!

"Now explain yourself, Tex."

Tex was no longer the blustering bully he had been. But he blazed out at Dudley: "You've ruined me and you're going to pay!"

"So Sonia won't support you any more?" Dudley's voice was like a whip-lash.

Tex reared up in his chair, but he eyed the hidden gun, thought better of it, settled back with: "You're a coward or you wouldn't say such things without a gun!"

"A gun's the only language you'd understand."

"Do you think I'm crazy?" queried Tex.

"I'm sure of it!"

Tex thought for a moment. "That's a funny one. That's what Sonia said!" But his foggy thoughts drifted back to his desired plane. "I've got to have a ship, Dudley! I've got to!"

Dudley saw his opportunity: "Tell you what I'll do. If you go on the wagon, pull yourself together, I'll get a backer for you."

"No, it's no use. Nobody would take me. I want to get into the races next week at Miami. There isn't time!"

"Not if you want to go on being a rummy!"

Tex straightened up. The coffee was having some effect. "All right."

The capitulation was so sharp that Judith gasped. She tried to speak to Michael, but he motioned her to be quiet.

"Go down and sit in my car, Tex. It's in front. I'll take you to a hotel. I want to speak to Judith—alone."

Tex stood up.

The engagement ring lay on the couch where Tex had tossed it. It gleamed in the rays of the one lamp in the room. Judith held out her hands to Michael appealingly. He held out his arms to her. She came to him, sobbing.

"You trusted me!" Judith managed.

Dudley dropped his arms from her. "Sit over there. I want to tell you the truth. I didn't." She watched him with anguish. "I knew Tex was in town and, when you refused to see me tonight, I thought it was because you wanted to see him."

"That's what I thought. I waited for you to come home. Then I went down the street to 'phone. I knew by your voice that Tex was here."

He paused. "Tell me, Judith. You were working tonight?"

Her eyes met his squarely. "Yes." "Why did you let him in?"

"I thought it was you calling when I answered the 'phone. I told him I would not see him. He came and I let him in because he was making such a disturbance."

Her voice broke. "Then you 'phoned I should have told you. But I wanted to avoid another scene. I thought I could get Tex to leave quietly. I didn't want to embroil you—"

Her eyes were pleading frankly. He looked at her face for a long time. Then said, "I believe you."

She came to his arms swiftly. "Never doubt me, Michael!"

"I never will. I promise."

Judith stood on tip-toe to kiss him; and said, "You don't have to help Tex for me."

"I'm not." His arms were around her. "I'm doing it for one reason. Tex was a great flier. He can be one again, perhaps."

Judith kissed him again. "You're a grand person! But I was so frightened when you threatened to shoot Tex. It would have killed me to have involved you in a shooting."

Dudley chuckled. "I didn't have a gun, honey." He pulled out his flashlight, tossed it onto the couch. "I think I'm a pretty balanced person. But tonight, I knew how men feel when they want to kill." His voice broke. "I could have shot him in cold blood—and enjoyed it!"

They were silent in each other's arms until Dudley picked up Judith's ring and slipped it back on her finger. So ended happily the stormy events of that night.

Tex went south at the end of the week with a new ship as Judith and Dudley plunged into preparations for their coming wedding. Mrs. Van Mathas gave a dinner party for Michael and Judith the following week. Judith wore one of her new frocks, pale yellow. The party was perfect.

Michael had promised they would have a house in the country, but not for a couple of years yet. They'd live in his New York apartment when they were in America. Going home after the party, Judith snuggled beside Michael as he drove.

"I'll get a house outside Paris, darling. I'm determined you'll have your garden after our Bermuda honeymoon."

"I don't care as long as I have you," Judith shivered.

"Cold?"

"No, just afraid it can't last! Am I not being silly?"

Michael put a fleeting kiss on her ear as he drove. "I'm afraid myself, sometimes. I've hoped so long."

Michael did not come upstairs with Judith when they reached her apartment. It was late and he kissed her good-night at the downstairs door. "Two weeks from tonight we'll be in Bermuda, darling."

Judith hummed a little song as she walked the four flights to her apartment. Everything was in confusion, but she loved it. Suitcases, boxes, her new airplane luggage for the flight to Bermuda. She undressed slowly in a haze of happiness. The ringing of the telephone brought her back.

Michael must be calling to say good-night. But when she picked up the receiver, she heard the operator: "Miami calling".

Judith's heart turned to ice. She sat there shivering in her thin night gown. She waited, terror-stirred, for Tex's voice.

"I hated to call, Judith, but I had to."

"What's happened?" her lips were stiff.

"Bad?"

"Pretty bad."

She managed to add, "I'm sorry."

"Judith, he keeps asking for you." Lee's voice was husky as he said. "He's washed up, Judith, I'm afraid; it's awful the way he keeps calling your name."

"I won't come—I can't," faltered Judith. Even as she said it, she knew that she would. She had to. . . . And so she told Holt, she would fly to Miami.

She hung up, packed swiftly, and telephoned for a cab. But Michael Dudley—she must call Michael! He would understand! Her hands trembled. He answered gayly with, "Darling, you were sweet to call to say good-night." The sound of his voice almost broke her determination.

"Michael—" she began.

"What's wrong, darling?"

"Tex has been hurt—badly hurt."

For a moment Michael could not answer. "How did you find out?"

"Lee Holt 'phoned from Miami. He cracked up in the last race."

"Can we do anything?" Michael asked. He could hear the sob in her tense voice.

"He's dying."

"It can't be so bad."

"It is. Lee says he keeps asking for me. He wants me to come."

"You won't go?" Michael's voice was pleading.

"I've got to!"

"I won't allow it!"

"Michael, please try to understand."

"I'm afraid I do!"

"But he keeps asking for me! Lee says he can't live another day. Darling, believe me! I've got to go," she managed.

"You can't do this to us, Judith."

"It's my duty, Michael." She tried to make him see. "I was married to him once. I've got to! Can't you see?"

"No, Judith. If you do this thing, we're through!" His voice was hoarse.

"Michael!"

The buzzer sounded. Her cab was waiting.

"Michael, trust me! I've got to go now—the five o'clock ship—my cab's here—I'll 'phone you tonight."

Then she added, "I love you, Michael . . . always," as she hung up the handset.

x x x

On the long ride to the airport, Judith wept continuously. When she arrived at the waiting room she was fifteen minutes early. She went on into the restaurant. There Michael found her five minutes later.

"I was afraid I wouldn't make it," Michael Dudley said. He took her arm and they left the restaurant. Outside in the early morning, soft with the promise of dawn, Michael made his final plea. The ship was on the line, ready to go.

"I had to make one more try to stop you, Judith."

"Michael, I love you but I must. He keeps asking for me. He has nobody."

Dudley's voice was bitter. "Nor have I."

"Don't say that!" Judith caught his arm. Over the loud speaker, the station master was calling the Miami ship.

"I mean what I said," stressed Dudley, his eyes were cold. "If you go, we're through!"

"No, Michael, you can't mean that!" Her hand was in his. "Please! I need you so!"

He said nothing more, walked with her to the ship. He bent to kiss her goodbye; then turned away. He did not wait to see the ship take off. Judith strained her eyes to find him in vain. . . .

Eight hours to Miami. She leaned back, almost in a state of collapse. . . . Judith slept fitfully. The steward, feeling sorry for the sad-looking girl, brought her coffee, told her not to be afraid. He figured it must be her first flight. . . .

Toward noon she got up wearily, went back to the washroom to clean her face and fix her hair. The reflection in the mirror startled her.

At last the palms of Miami were in sight. . . . Then the ship was on the ground. At last!

When Judith stepped out she met Lee Holt. "Good girl!" was all he said. "We'll go straight to the hospital. I borrowed a car."

"How is he?" she asked.

"Bad."

Lee began to explain as they started for town. "I couldn't refuse him this, Judith. It wasn't much to ask." Not much to ask! My heavens, she thought, it was asking the rest of my whole life!

At the hospital they went directly to Tex's room. A nurse met them at the door. "He's asleep, Mrs. Aimes. It won't be for long. The pain is pretty bad. We try to keep him 'under' as much as we can."

Judith turned to Lee. "A telephone?" She went down the hall, put in a call for Michael. But he was not in his office. When she rejoined Lee, she was crying.

"It's awful. He suffered so. I don't want him to live! Not Tex! He'd hate it, never to fly again."

Shortly the nurse ushered Judith into Tex's room. He lay very quiet, swathed in bandages. Only his face was visible.

"Tex." She spoke his name softly. He moved a little and moaned.

"It's Judith."

"Judith?" His eyes lighted up. "I knew you'd come."

She stood beside him. As he looked into her eyes, his smile faded with a low, "It's curtains for me this time?" His voice was just a whisper.

She tried to make her voice light, but flooding tears made words difficult as she said: "You've been in tighter places that this, Tex. Keep the old chin up!"

He closed his eyes; finally he whispered: "I guess I knew it all the time."

U.S. GOVERNMENT FILES SUIT

Washington, Oct. 1 (AP)—The United States Government filed suit against the American Petroleum Institute and 22 major oil companies, charging unlawful monopoly, price fixing and conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Anti-trust Act.

Contending that the defending firms controlled virtually all of the crude oil available for the refining and put independents "at a competitive disadvantage," the Justice Department asked the Federal District Court for the district of Columbia to restrain the companies from acquiring oil reserves for monopolistic purposes.

WANT EMBARGO

Chicago, Oct. 1 (AP)—The National Council of Administration of the Veterans of Foreign Wars Sunday adopted a resolution favoring "absolute and complete" embargoes on food and military supplies to any of the Axis powers.

The resolution, directed to the President, said the Government "should intensify its own national defence program by making available to the British Empire such available military equipment as can be spared."

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Oct. 1 (CP)—When New York developed strength the Toronto exchange trading tempo stepped up in the second hour today on tightening prices but the early afternoon was sluggish again and only 66,000 shares traded in the first three hours. The industrial and gold share indices were stronger at noon while the base metals and western oils were unchanged to slightly lower.

Bell Telephone recovered Monday's loss and a firmer note was shown generally by the foods, senior oils and beverages. Fanny Farmer and the Loblaw issues did better.

In the gold list Kerr-Addison, Preston, East Malartic, Broulan and Malartic Gold Fields were strong and fairly active. Nickel stood out in the base metals with a gain of [illegible] points to 38½ and Steep Ro[illegible] added a few cents.

Home Oil advanced above the $2 mark, up 5 cents, and Pacalta firmed a cent or more. Other western oils were steady except for a loss of 10 cents for Okalta.

NEW YORK STOCKS

New York, Oct. 1 (AP) — The stock market got a good start on the new month today as buying in steels spread to other departments and lifted leaders one to around three points at the best.

Dealings were relatively active for a while, but profit taking on the upswing slowed the pace and, near the fourth hour, peak gains were cut here and there.

Among the better acting shares were U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, Youngstown Sheet, Chrysler, U. S. Rubber, Douglas Aircraft, Sperry, Dupont, Dow Chemical, Eastman Kodak, Johns-Manville, American Smelting, Anaconda, Great Northern, Pullman, American Telephone, Westinghouse, U.S. Gypsum, Montgomery Ward and the preferreds of American Woolen, General Steel Castings and Budd Mfg.

Tilting upward in the curb were Aluminum of America, Gulf Oil, American Cyanamid "B", Jones & Laughlin and Consolidated Gas of Baltimore.

Dome Mines and McIntyre, in the Canadian group, advanced fractions. Lake Shores Mines were easy while Hiram Walker and Distillers Seagram held unchanged. Canada 4s, in the bond market, advanced ½ point.

LIVESTOCK

Toronto, Oct. 1 (CP)—Cattle trade was again very dull up to mid-session on the Livestock Market today with prices about steady. Calves, lambs and sheep were steady. No price was established for hogs. The cattle holdover from Monday was 2,500 head. There were no sales of weighty steers.

German Mayors for 12 Cities, Towns Of Rumania

Bucharest, Oct 1 (AP)—German mayors and deputy mayors will be appointed for 12 of Rumania's largest cities and towns as part of new privileges granted Rumania's German minority of about 600,000, it was announced today.

A program to "Germanize" these cities, including Brasov, Timisoara, Arad, Sibiu, Sighisora and Resita, will be under the direction of Rima Andreas Scmitt, who has been appointed German Gauleiter (district leader) for Rumania.

It was announced German military experts shortly will begin training the Rumanian army in the Nazi technique of the use of tanks, airplanes and motorized equipment.

The "Tageblatt", mouthpiece of the German legation, said the appointment of Scmitt marks the beginning of a campaign to organize Nazis throughout Europe on "strategic grounds in accordance with their new position of the continent."

Limited Market For Storage Eggs Is Looked For

Toronto, Oct. 1.—It would not be surprising, says the Dominion Department of Agriculture, if there was only a limited market for storage eggs in Canada and if early winter shipments of fresh eggs to Great Britain are anticipated.

With the British Ministry lifting refrigeration restrictions on egg shipments from Canada, storage eggs are now said to be held in fairly firm hands. The holders, the department points out, seemingly fail to realise the big crop of well-grown, thrifty pullets that is coming into lay this fall generally across the country.

Much depends on the weather—unusually early and severe winter would undoubtedly curtail production—but on the average of the last three years, there have been surplus fresh eggs in December and increasing quantities in January. Prices to producers in January last year were the lowest on record. It is suggested, therefore, that holders of storage eggs would be well advised to take advantage of the present export opportunity and clear their floors of storage eggs as early as possible.

The Toronto egg market maintained a steady tone, with receipts clearing satisfactorily at unchanged prices.

Another advance was reported on the local butter market when buyers found offerings limited. Early sales were made at 24 cents per pound for the top grade Ontario product, but business turned over at 24 1-4 cents near the close of the market. Churning cream ranged higher at 23 cents to 24 cents for No. 1 grade, in truck country points, reflecting steady improvement in butter prices.

WAR IS BORING FOR 44 GERMANS

Crew of Freighter Arauca Now Into Port Everglades Marooned

Port Lauderdale, Fla., Oct. 1 (AP)—War is a boring business for 44 Germans who raced the freighter Arauca into Port Everglades last December to escape a pursuing British cruiser.

The chase was the only excitement the conflict has provided for the crew, who are now marooned in their haven and leading humdrum lives under rigid restrictions enforced by the United States Immigration Service. No one knows when they can return to their native land.

The Hamburg American Line, owners of the freighter, settled with the last of its creditors yesterday and now the ship is free to attempt to dash through the British blockade.

Cody Fowler, attorney for the line, had no comment on the ship's future plans. He said Capt. Frederick Stengler and the crew were aboard, and that most of its general cargo was still in its hold. Green hides and perishable cargo have been sold. The claims at one time totalled almost $500,000.

Fowler said most of the claims were compromised, but the largest, a claim for $114,652 by the Asiatic Petroleum Company, was paid in full some weeks ago.

Until the claims were settled two Coast Guardsmen constantly patrolled the deck to prevent departure.

The status of the crew is odd—they can be neither admitted to the United States nor deported. Marion M. Black, immigration service officer, who keeps an eye on the Germans, explained that they are in a position resembling that of shipwrecked sailors who reach a foreign port.

BRITAIN

Central London area disappeared toward the southeast amid a burst of anti-aircraft shells and followed by a patrol of Royal Air Force fighters.

One German plane, believed to have been the plane which earlier was reported to have strafed a train in a southeast London station, crashed in Surrey after a fight with a hurricane.

Three other raiders were reported shot down in Dorsetshire when fighters attacked a flight of about fifteen which crossed the southwest coast.

58 Emergency Feeding Centres

After a tour of bombed areas Harry Willink, special commissioner for rehousing the homeless told adults that "all those who can leave should."

Extension of the mother-and-child removal scheme to include 14 London Boroughs was announced by Health Minister Macdonald, and Lord Woolton, Minister of Food, announced that 58 Emergency Feeding centres have been opened for the homeless in London.

"More than 22,000 school children have been evacuated from London in the last two weeks", Mr. Macdonald said. "Many more ought to go".

He reminded mothers in the 14 hard-hit Boroughs that "by going out with their children they will not only be securing greater safety but will also be relieving the problem of providing shelter for those people who have to stay in London".

Intensification of London's preparedness comes at a time when German air raids seem, if anything, to be letting up slightly and when promise is held for stronger defences.

Observers reason that the government's efforts are not the result of any particular change in the situation but merely are an effort to get in the best possible shape before the cold weather sets in.

At the same time the Admiralty disclosed that British shipping had suffered its worst attack of the war in the week ending Sept. 23 during which enemy submarines sank 19 British vessels totalling 131,857 tons. The loss of three allied and five neutral ships brought the total tonnage loss to 159,288 tons—almost three times the previous weekly average.

Informed quarters, speculating on the reason for the sudden increase in losses, expressed belief the Germans might have pressed French and Italian submarines into service.

"We must be prepared for these things," they said, as part of Hitler's attempt to end the war before winter."

Warehouses Filled

British source did not rule out, however, the possibility the heavy losses might be just "a streak of luck," and said that after all they were not serious in view of the previous successes of convoys which have filled warehouses to overflowing.

The first German raiders sighted over London after daylight were lone raiders, flying at a high altitude. Anti-aircraft batteries in the northwest, southwest, west and south ends of the capital went into action and the sky was dotted with the cotton-like puffs of bursting shells.

Four persons were killed and seven injured in a north London district when high explosive bombs struck a residential area. Five persons were rescued from a wrecked bungalow.

Nazis Use Machine Guns

Other raiders were sighted almost simultaneously over other parts of England.

Two Nazi planes attacked a Welsh town, dropping incendiary and high explosive bombs. One raider was reported to have dived low through a cloud bank and strafed the area with machine guns. Raiders also were reported in the vicinity of a southeast coast town and also over two southwest coast towns shortly before noon.

London, meanwhile, with an unofficial toll of 5,000 dead and 8,000 wounded in almost incessant September air raids, received official assurances that a new defence system is being developed to meet night attacks—source of a majority of the casualties.

Articles in London newspapers quoted high official quarters that the new defence should be in operation in from one to three months. Whether the defence would be a new combat plan or a new night anti-aircraft weapon—or both—was not disclosed.

It came as comforting news to Londoners emerging from chill air raid shelters after their 24th consecutive night of attack in which bombs exploded in 27 scattered sections of the city. A few hit Central London but residence districts and suburbs again bore the brunt of the bombing.

An Air Ministry statement said German bombers destroyed a number of houses and caused casualties in a northeastern suburb but declared "reports indicate that damage generally has not been extensive nor the number of casualties large."

Attack Shipping Section

The shipping section of Liverpool, the Midlands and several other parts of the country, particularly southeast England, were attacked, the statement said.

Casualties, including several fatalities, were reported in an East Midlands town.

A Junkers bomber, lone rearguard of the night raiders, flew over areas south of London early this morning. A southeast London station employee said the plane dived to within a few hundred feet of the ground to machine gun a train. There were few persons in the train, which was standing in the station, and no one was hurt.

Strike at Berlin

London's anti-aircraft barrage, reinforced by cruising squadrons of fighter planes high over the bursting shells, kept most of the raiders back from the centre of the capital.

Although defence patrols of fighter planes have been used seldom at night, and hardly at all recently, in conjunction with the anti-aircraft, informed quarters said there was no indication they formed the new defence being developed.

Offensive squadrons of the Royal Air Force struck again at Berlin, German industrial sections and the "invasion ports". The flash of bomb explosions across the Strait of Dover glowed red through the mist and the shock of the blasts on the French coast 20 miles away rattled houses along the Kent cliffs.

German gun emplacements at Cap Gris Nez and the Port of Calais, still burning with the fires of British long range gun shelling during the day, were attacked heavily.

(German dispatches said the Berlin alarm lasted five hours and eight minutes, the longest the city has had.)

More People Evacuated

On the heels of a removal of trainloads of women and children from the hard-hit poor districts of London came official advice to reduce further the population as much as possible by transfers to the country.

The September estimates of 5,000 killed and 8,000 wounded in the capital indicated a great increase over the August toll, announced officially as 1,075 killed and 1,261 injured.

Harry Willink, special commissioner for Rehousing the homeless, toured residential sections and said afterward that all those who could leave London should do so.

The Press carried the news of a new defence means under banner headlines.

47 German Planes Lost

"We can hope to stop night raids—official," the Daily Express headline said. The Daily Mail and the Express quoted high official quarters that Britain soon would have "a complete answer to night bombing."

The Daily Telegraph said more conservatively that "there is reason to hope that in the course of three months or so we may be able to inflict somewhat heavier casualties in night raiding and if a certain proportion can be obtained the enemy may be expected to be discouraged."

Yesterday's R.A.F. and ground defences destroyed 47 German planes at a cost of 22 British craft, with 12 British pilots saved.

Figures on planes shot down during September showed the R.A.F. with a three-to-one advantage. German losses were 1,071 planes and approximately 2,700 fliers shot down. The British loss was 319 planes and 156 fliers.

NOT SINGLE CASE OF EVASION SEEN

Maj.-Gen. LaFleche Does Not Know of One Incident of Wilful Attempt to Evade Training

Ottawa, Oct. 1 (CP)—"Not a single case of a man knowingly making an attempt to evade his military training has come to my attention," Maj.-Gen. L. R. La Fleche, Associate Deputy Minister of National War Services said today.

Commenting on a report from Charlottetown that of 368 men called for compulsory training 100 had not turned up for their medical examinations, Gen. LaFleche said this situation undoubtedly was the result of a seasonal labor movement from the island to the mainland which occurred every fall.

Once notified he has been picked for compulsory militia training, a man has three days in which to present himself to the physician of his choice for medical examination. It then is up to the doctor to forward the examination and certificate form to the Divisional Registrar.

Male Refugees In France Placed In Work Groups

These Foreigners to Receive No Pay but Families Are to Receive 'Living Allowance'

Vichy, France. Oct. 1 (AP)—The Petain-Laval government decreed today that foreign male refugees between the ages of 18 and 55 who are unable to return to their own countries should be formed into work groups at the disposition of the Minister of Industrial Production.

The decree specified that the refugees should receive no wages, but that their families would be given a "living allowance."

Neutral observers expressed belief the measure was especially aimed at a large number of Poles who have been working in French coal mines and Czech and Spanish refugees.

The government also announced sequestration of "all goods, rights, and interests" of former Air Minister Pierre Cot, who is now in the United States. Cot recently was stripped of French citizenship.

PEAK RATE OF

Many of the leading newspapers in the United States were represented by the 25 newspapermen. They were accompanied by their hosts, who were headed by W. Rupert Davies, President of The Canadian Press, and were permitted by the Canadian Government to see all that they wanted to see. There are no restrictions upon what they write. It is understood all the newspapers represented intend to publish a series of articles on the tour.

Baldwin reported there are shortages of equipment as well as bottlenecks in aircraft engines, machine tolls and skilled labor, and said that the Empire Air Training Plan—"Canada's greatest war contribution," he called it—will not produce its first class of about 400 pilots until November and will not reach its peak rate of about 8,500 pilots a year until late in 1941.

Inspects Air Force

"Nevertheless, an inspection of air force, army and naval centres from Hamilton, Ont., to Halifax, N.S., showed that Canada's defence establishments have been tremendously expanded in a year of war, that her programs to aid Great Britain and to defend herself have been considerably modified, expanded and speeded since the German blitzkrieg of May and June, and that today the great majority of Canada's 11,315,000 people are wholeheartedly behind the Dominion's war effort. That effort is now passing its preliminary planning and plant expansion stage, and with increasing speed will commence to prove a factor in the war."

Breaking up his lengthy article into four divisions, the air force, the army, the navy, and industry, Baldwin detailed in costs and figures the tremendous expansion in Canada's armed services since the outbreak of war and outlined the swift advance of industry which he said by late next year will produce war equipment estimated at from $1,000,000,000 to $1,500,000,000 annually.

32 Training Schools Operating

He said that 32 of the air training schools are actually in operation, or seven more than scheduled to be operating at this time; 4,500 pupils are under training, 2,100 taking the pilots' course, 1,000 as observers, 1,400 as air gunners, and 7,500 as mechanics, service and maintenance men.

A great number of the schools' output will be needed as instructors of the next airmen, he said. Consequently "it is unlikely that more than 200 to 300 pilots will be available for duty overseas by the year's end." But this number "will increase continuously throughout 1941 until toward the end of the year or early in 1942, when all schools are in operation, the peak rate of 650 pilots every four weeks should be reached."

Needs Little More Time

In regard to the army, Baldwin told his readers of the formation of the Canadian Active Service Force and its disposition, including the fact that Canada has troops in Iceland, Newfoundland and the West Indies as well in Britain; of the Non-Permanent Active Militia and of the arrangements for supply and equipment.

He reviewed briefly the acquisitions to the Canadian navy and remarked that about 17,000,000 tons of shipping—3,000 ships—have been convoyed from Canada to Britain by Canadian and British vessels in the first year of the war, "with the loss of only 15 ships."

Limpus wrote that "An aroused and united Canada is deliberately stripping herself of planes, guns, and troops as her contribution to the Battle of Britain."

"She hasn't been able to do much so far," he said, "but she's just about ready to step into the breach and assume a sizeable share of the load," he said. "All she needs is a little more time.

"Canada, in short, stands today just about where the United States expects to stand at the beginning of next summer. Her factories have been rebuilt to a point where they are almost ready to pour out a flood of tanks, planes and munitions; her new air schools have been established and are all set to begin producing swarms of combat pilots; her army is organized for the training of the citizen soldiers heading for the newly established camps.

Everything Rushed Overseas

"And everything is being rushed overseas as fast as it is ready for action."

"We saw the potential cloudburst forming above the headwaters of Canada's military might," Limpus added. "We saw for instance 6,000 munitions workers laboring in a flaming inferno of a factory....We saw....three newly created Air Force Training Schools....And we saw the graduates of those service schools being rushed to Trenton to be turned into instructors to go out and train more warriors of the air.

"Still more, we saw whole platoons of brisk young officers receiving special instruction from capable regulars at Valcartier Camp, Que., and Camp Borden, Ont......

"And these things were typical of Canada as a whole. A Canada which is busy with a myriad items; guarding cocksure German prisoners, some of whom we visited....; sending food to Britain's less well-nourished captives in the Nazi camps; caring for refugee children; building up her coast defences; creating a navy out of nothing; training airmen for the whole Empire; rushing cadets through a shortened course at the Royal Military College at Kingston.

"Of course, everything isn't peaches and cream. You can't turn a super-peace-loving nation into a military power overnight without hitting a few rough spots."

AUTO IS BOMBED, MAJOR ESCAPES

Maj. Cameron, Assistant Provost Marshal of C.A.S.F. Provost Company in U.K., is Known in Kingston

Ottawa, Oct. 1 (CP)—A check of National Defence Department records revealed today that Maj. D. A. Cameron, Assistant Provost Marshal of the Canadian Active Service Force Provost Company in the United Kingdom who escaped serious injury when a bomb damaged his car, served with the Canadian forces throughout the first Great War.

Maj. Cameron suffered two fractured toes Somewhere in England yesterday when a bomb badly damaged his car. His driver escaped unharmed.

The Records Office, after going through files, said Maj. Cameron was born in Shanghai in 1891, enlisted in Lord Strathcona's Horse in 1914 either in Military District No. 13 (Calgary 5 or M.D. 10 (Winnipeg) and was last known to be in Canada when he was an instructor at Royal Military College, Kingston, Ont., from September, 1919, to October, 1920.

He transferred to the C.A.S.F. Provost Company from the Royal Air Force after the arrival of the Canadian forces overseas.

HEROIC ENGINEERS,

Official Announcement

The official announcement of the awards, which was published in the London Gazette, said of Lieut. Davies, "so conscious was this officer of imminent danger to the Cathedral that, regardless of personal risk, he spared neither himself nor his men in their efforts to locate the bomb.

"After unremitting efforts, during which all ranks knew that an explosion might occur at any moment, the bomb was successfully extricated. In order to shield his men from further danger, Lieut. Davies himself drove the vehicle in which the bomb was removed and personally carried out its disposal."

The announcement continued: "It fell to the lot of Sapper Wylie to do the actual discovery and removal of the bomb. Sapper Wylie's untiring energy, courage and disregard for danger were an outstanding example to his comrades."

The George Cross, ranking next to the Victoria Cross, is intended to reward civilians for acts of gallantry arising from enemy action or for other brave deeds.

There is a small military division of the cross to permit its award to members of the fighting services who have performed acts coming within the terms of its warrant.

Rescue Leader Honored

The George Cross was also awarded to Thomas Alderson, detachment leader of rescue parties at Bridlington, for consistent gallantry, enterprise and devotion to duty during air raids.

George Medals were awarded to a number of civilians, including air raid wardens, members of the Auxiliary Fire Services, and regular firemen. Included were Mrs. Dorothy Clarke, ambulance driver, and Mrs. Jane Hepburn, ambulance attendant, both of Aldeburgh.

O.B.E. Medals Awarded

The medal of the Order of the British Empire, military division, for meritorious service was awarded to Sgt. James Wilson of the Royal Engineers, who was senior non-commissioned officer of the bomb disposal section dealing with the St. Paul's time bomb.

The same award went to L. Cpl. Herbert Leigh, another member of the St. Paul's bomb disposal section, who assisted Lieut. Davies in the removal and subsequent detonation of the bomb.

Lieut. Davies' youngest daughter, Edith, 14, took a holiday from school to celebrate her father's honor but Mrs. Davies said other members of the family did not know about it.

Mrs. Davis herself was overjoyed when a reporter told her the news. She planned to wire her husband congratulations. She has had several telegrams and brief letters from him which have contained no reference to St. Paul's. He always tells her: "Chin up and everything's dandy."

R. A. A. F. AT SINGAPORE

Melbourne, Oct. 1 (AP)—Prime Minister R. J. Menzies today announced that squadrons of the Royal Australian Air Force had arrived at Singapore to relieve some squadrons already there for duty elsewhere.

Prime Minister Menzies declared Australia had a vital interest in the security of Singapore and it was most satisfactory that Australia had thus been enabled to further contribute to Britain's air strength.

MARY MARTIN 'IDEAL COMPANION'

Hollywood, Oct. 1 (AP)—Better not tell Richard Halliday, but—Mary Martin, his bride, has been chosen "ideal companion for the modern bachelor." The American Association of Bachelors—McClelland Barcley and Peter Arno, the artists, among others—timed their announcement well. Halliday is at sea—yachting. But so is Mary, of "My Heart Belongs" fame.

FLYING OFFICER KILLED IN ACTION

Otto Peterson, Lloydminster, Sask., Downed Three Nazi Planes Fighting Over England

Halifax, Oct. 1 —(CP)— Fo. Otto Peterson, R.C.A.F., a native of Lloydminster, Sask., has been killed in English skies, according to a cable received here by his wife, the former Helen Murray of Halifax. The 24-year-old airman had been fighting with the R.C.A.F. squadron in England, and was credited with downing three Nazi planes.

His latest victim was claimed on Sept. 9 when he and a Nova Scotia pilot, Flt. Lt. Edwin Reyno, a native of Herring Cove near Halifax, assisted in helping their commander, Squadron Leader Ernest McNab, from a "spot" high over England.

The letter describing the adventure was received by Mrs. Peterson yesterday, just a few moments after she opened the cable telling her of her husband's death.

Two Messerschmitt 109's closed in on the tail of the machine flown by Squadron Leader McNab, the letter said.

Flt. Lt. Reyno matched one and chased it off while Peterson swooped to attack the second. He "got it" with a burst of fire from his machine guns, he said in his letter. "In fact, it seemed to disintegrate in the air."

The cable received by Mrs. Peterson yesterday said simply that he had been "killed in action." Earlier she had received one saying that he was "missing."

Flying Officer Peterson was a graduate of the University of Manitoba and served with the R.C.A.F. in Halifax from November, 1939 up until last June when he went overseas.

TACTICS BEGUN

Red Army included the Grey and Simcoe Foresters, and the Green Army consisted principally of the Irish Regiment of Canada.

The departure took place with clock-like precision. Within a period of 40 minutes every man and every vehicle had moved.

Two army co-operation planes flew from Ottawa to aid the armies. When they first appeared anti-aircraft guns were manned, but it was determined that the planes were not "enemy" machines.

The three armies moved in perfect cohesion along the routes laid out in orders. The Blue Army headed west and south, orders calling for it to stop in Arthur at lunch and to spend the night at Paris.

Location of Armies

The Red Army travelled south, to be at Fergus and Elora for lunch and at Preston for the night. The Green Army was going on a route that would take it to Erin for lunch and to Brantford for the night.

Although the routes of the three armies came close together at one or two points, at no place do the groups come in contact with each other.

Each army was in regular formation with advance guard, main party and rear-guard, preceded by motorcycle scouting units. Motorcycle police of the Ontario Provincial Police cleared the way for the troops along the highways.

Thursday the cavalcade will move over the four-lane Queen Elizabeth Highway to Toronto and rumble northward on a final 70-mile trek back to camp.

Units Taking Part

Other units taking part include the 2nd Canadian Motorcycle Regiment, the 8th Field Company of Engineers, certain units of the 1st Tank Brigade, a road construction outfit, the 2nd Field Ambulance of the Medical Corps and details of the 2nd Casualty Clearing Station.

As outlined by Col. Holloway, the manoeuvres' main purposes are to give practical experience in mechanized transport, protection from air formations, tactics, supply, map reading, feeding arrangements, direction finding and administration.

At Hamilton special arrangements have been made in order to avoid disrupting traffic. The seven-mile column will split into four sections as it moves through the city.

Col. S. A. Lac, M.C. Camp Borden commandant, will be directing officer of the exercises.

100 Six-Ton Tanks, Reported On Way to Canada For Army Training

Rock Island, Ill., Oct. 1 (AP)—A shipment of approximately 100 six-ton tanks built more than 20 years ago was headed eastward today for ultimate delivery, reliable sources said, to the Canadian army for training purposes.

The tanks, stored at the government arsenal here since first Great War days, were loaded on flat cars yesterday. Arsenal officials refused comment, but informants said the lumbering vehicles—stripped of armament—were Canada-bound.

The tanks can muster a speed of only three or four miles an hour and thus are considered too slow for use as combat weapons. Col. F. P. Worthington, a Canadian tank officer visited the arsenal last week.

FRANK PEPPER JOINS THE NAVY

C.P.R. Telegraph Operator Will Report for Wireless Duty at Canadian Port

Operator and assistant manager of the Canadian Pacific Communications office on East Bridge Street, Frank W. Pepper, 21, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Pepper, Chatham Street left today for Kingston, where he will remain for a short time before proceeding to a Canadian port for wireless duty with the Royal Canadian Navy.

Frank has been with the C.P.R. telegraphs for the past six years, serving one year as messenger boy, while learning the intricacies and mysteries of the telegraph key and codes. He proved adept at his new profession and after twelve months was promoted to the status of operator and assistant manager, under Mr. Jack Hinchey.

For the past two months, Frank has been studying the wireless code and its operation in preparation for his service with His Majesty's Canadian Navy. He was very popular with officials of the company and with business men of the city with whom his profession threw him in daily contact. Mr. Hinchey, manager of the C.P.R. communications here spoke highly of his former colleague's ability and forecast a fine career for him in the navy.

Frank, who is a brother of the famous George Pepper, ex-Canadian motorcycle riding champion, who left for England some years previous to the war, will be succeeded by Clarence Cook, a Belleville boy, who has completed his apprenticeship as an operator and telegraph boy, and for the past few months has been employed as a relief operator at Brampton, Ont.

VETERAN HUNTER DIES SUDDENLY

Henry Sexsmith, Tweed, Found Dead in Hunting Skiff on Clare River

Tweed, Oct. 1—(Special)—Stricken by a sudden heart seizure, the dead body of Henry Sexsmith, 80 year veteran hunter of this village, was found in his boat in the Clare River this morning shortly after the aged man had left with a son-in-law, Cyril Latta, on the first duck hunting expedition of the season.

The boat containing the elderly hunter's body had drifted in the reeds of the river which is a tributary of Lake Stoco and was found by Thomas Beatty and Fred Purchase, Sulphide hunters returning from a hunting foray. Sexsmith's gun had been fired, and reloaded and lay in the boat near his body. He had left shortly after eight o'clock with Latta in separate boats and later had become separated in the winding reaches of the river.

Chief of Police Clare Hayes, and Coroner Dr. M. G. Dales were notified and following investigation of the circumstances, decided no inquest would be necessary. Cause of death was given as heart failure.

The elderly hunter had lived with a daughter, Mrs. Cyril Latta, of this village. Two other daughters survive.

The War Today

By H. M. PETERS
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

The Spanish government, vitally needing supplies which must pass through the British blockade, and seeing British strength unimpaired in the Mediterranean and the English Channel, today passed up the "opportunity" to join the axis in a military adventure that might be costly for the civil war-drained Spaniards.

Authoritative Fascist spokesmen in Rome, predicting that world opinion would regard the fact as a British "victory", acknowledged that immediate Spanish entry into the war was not an issue at conferences started between Premier Mussolini and Ramon Serrano Suner, General Franco's brother-in-law and Interior Minister.

That seemed to mean Spain did not intend to repeat Italy's mistake of entering the war at the wrong time. Mussolini obviously expected his enemies to fold up—and indeed France did—at the time of his declaration of war. Franco sees no possibility just now that he can take Gibraltar just for the asking.

Meanwhile the British authorities, seeking in all possible ways for means to conquer the night bomber, released hints that at least some success could be expected. It was not disclosed whether a new combat plane or a new night anti-aircraft weapon, or both, had been discovered but newspapers in London said in big headlines that official circles had indicated heavier casualties on Nazi night raiders could be expected before winter.

Need Is Pressing.

The need was pressing. Semi-official figures stated London suffered 5,000 killed and 8,000 wounded in September. New measures for the dispersal of the population were under way.

British fighters during the month scored a smashing success in clawing down 1,071 planes, with 2,700 German fliers killed or captured, while losing 319 British planes and 156 fliers. But it was emphasized that almost all these Nazi planes were shot down in the daylight and that destructive if inaccurate night bombing had scarcely been checked.

At sea the Admiralty announced that enemy submarines managed to sink 27 British, allied and neutral ships in a week, for a total of 159,288 tons, about three times the weekly average, and a spokesman saw this as part of Hitler's attempt to end the war before winter.

But it was a hollow success, the spokesman said, for the convoy system has already filled Britain's warehouses to overflowing, with new ones being built all the time, and London's millions are assured of winter food.

Berlin was pounded again by the Royal Air Force during the night, the raid coinciding with a statement by Richard Boyer, correspondent for the New York paper PM who returned from Germany to report that the man in the street in Berlin is discouraged and depressed over the prospect of a cheerless winter.

Fair Bags of Ducks Obtained By Hunters on Opening Day

Guns roared on the wild-duck front today as a battalion of opening day hunters laid down the inaugural blitzkrieg against the aerial formations of blacks, mallards and teals.

A few minutes before Old Sol poked a shining tip over the hazy horizon, blasts of gunfire were heard by city residents emanating from the direction of the bay and adjacent marshes.

While the feathered "enemy" attacks were not conspicuous by any massed formations, yet hunters returning early from the hunt reported fair bags. One party of two, had eight Bay of Quinte "Messerschmitts" to their credit. Another party hunting in another part, claimed they had shot their quota.

Although perfect weather, insofar as the layman is concerned, prevailed, it was anything but conducive to good hunting. Hunters stated that the calm sunshiny weather that characterized the opening day, is never productive of really good bags. A brisk wind, with a touch of stormy weather in the offing is more to the liking of the nimrods who search the bays, lakes and marshes for the elusive duck. According to reports of hunters, the green-winged teal appeared to be the predominating duck flying over the hides today, although a few blacks were in evidence.

While the hunters were hieing their way to the various duck-hides, the early dawn saw yet another hunting army make the long trek to the northern parts of the county where partridge are said to be plentiful. Out-of-season reports state the birds are much more numerous than in other years, and although press time was too early to secure any results, it is anticipated that some heavy "bags" will fall to the hunters' guns within the next few days.

Monday Was Exceptionally Busy Day For Moving Companies of City

'Twas moving day in the city Monday, the second heaviest of its kind since May Day heralded the coming of Spring. Expiration of leases and the desirability of change of domicile on the part of many residents kept moving companies busy all day and part of the night.

Although the most of the activity was confined to the city, a few new residents moved their effects from as far away as Toronto and Montreal, according to moving companies.

Houses are still exceptionally scarce in Belleville, especially in the lower-priced field. One landlord who had a house to rent at $18.50 per month, had as many as twenty applicants. Houses and apartments renting at $50 are as plentiful as the proverbial hen's teeth.

A number of private owners have invested money in the conversion of large roomy houses into apartments during the past season, and are experiencing little difficulty in obtaining lessees. A number of new houses have been erected in various parts of the city, but the demand for the lower, and medium-priced domiciles still exceeds the supply.

This is due in the main part, authoritative sources said today, to the influx of personnel of the Royal Canadian Air Force, and skilled labor from other parts of the province, who have secured employment in industrial plants of the city.

Red Cross Appeals for Prompt Donations to Put Campaign Over Top

While the general response to the appeal of the Canadian Red Cross Society in Belleville has been fairly good thus far, campaign officials urged residents today that they must give and give until it hurts if the quota of $8,000 is to be attained.

A number of canvassers have completed their collections but a greater number have as yet to turn their monies in, or complete their work. They are urged by the committee to complete this important work as soon as possible so that a correct compilation of returns can be arrived at.

According to officials the greater number of people, who give large amounts to the society, have made their donations, but those who can be relied upon to give small contributions, or whatever they can, have yet to contribute. These people are requested to make their donations as quickly as possible so that Belleville can hold her own with the numerous other communities of the Dominion which will "go over the top" in the present campaign.

The need for funds is urgent. The war is not being held up for the sake of drives for funds to enable the Empire to carry on its heroic battle against the enemy which now threatens her very existence.

Soldiers Doing Their Part

Overseas Britain's gallant airmen, many of whom are Canadians, are driving the foe from the battle-scarred skies of England. Ready and waiting on land are Canada's gallant sons in khaki. On the sea the Royal Navy augmented by the small but effective fleets of the "Lion's Cubs," patrol the submarine-infested sea-lanes unceasingly.

In London, and other parts of Britain, flaming death rains down daily and nightly, wreaking havoc and destruction upon buildings, property and innocent women, children and other civilians. The work of the Red Cross is increasing daily. Bandages, clothing and a hundred and one other articles are necessary each day.

Canada has never let down the Empire in the past. Belleville has never failed Canada. And Belleville must and will, officials are sure, again come to the aid of a stricken people, the heart-blood of the Empire and its own kith and kin in an hour when aid and succor is vitally urgent.

When the canvasser calls give all you can. The Red Cross appeals to you and you in its hour of need. The Empire calls, and the Dominions will answer again. Belleville's aid is as necessary as that of other cities, and as important. And it must never be said that the residents of this fair city "fell down" when its own sons and daughters are fighting in a desperate attempt to maintain their homes, liberty and freedom.

Give now, and give all you can.

Members of 34th Battery, N.P.A.M. Train With Enthusiasm, Earnestness

"The right o' the line the left o' the paybook, and the pride of the blinkin' army". Every gunner will recognize the famous artillery slogan of the last great war, and the boys of the 34th Field Battery R.C.A., Belleville's only non-permanent active militia battery is taking it up with enthusiasm.

Unheralded and unsung, the battery's non-permanent active militia unit began recruiting after its sister units in the city and district had attained almost their full quota of recruits.

But enthusiasm made up for any loss of training time. The gunners put their hearts into their work and by the time the two weeks' training period came along, they left for Petawawa with as much sincerity of purpose as did other units of the district with much more training time to their credit.

According to reports, their showing during the training period and at general inspection compared favorably with any other non-permanent militia unit at the camp.

Right now they are faithfully training. Behind them are the fine units of their Canadian Active Service Force "parents", the 32-34th and the 3-47th batteries of the 9th Brigade. Traditions, they know, will be maintained by these splendid units, and the boys of the N.P.A.M. are not going to let them down.

Proud of "Gun" Insignia

True, they are a youthful unit. But the spirit of "the guns" traditional of the British Artillery, since the days of battering rams, is being imbued in them daily. They are intensely proud of the "gun" they wear in their insignia. They know that the proud traditions of the artillery must be upheld, and this is exemplified in the enthusiasm and spirit shown in their training.

At their head is Captain W. E. Hare of Cobourg. On his breast gleams the ribbons of the last Great War. He is a gunner first and last and served with the First Canadian Siege Battery in France.

It was his gallant lads that formed part of that indispenable cog in the British war machine, the "heavies' that sent the huge 9.2's hurtling through the air toward the German lines to wreak havoc and destruction upon Hun railheads, lines of communication, gun emplacements and other points of importance.

Officers Belleville Men

Officers of the unit include Second-Lieutenants D. Frink, J. Goodman, Leo Morrison and H. E. Roland. The battery sergeant-major is Jack Stock, while looking after the records of the unit and the O.C.'s right-hand man is Orderly Room Sergeant G. L. Thompson, son of his Worship Mayor Glen Thompson, of Belleville. The "quarter-bloke" is B.Q.M.S. W. R. Muir.

All members of the other ranks are from Belleville with the exception of one, who hails from Trenton.

At present the battery is going faithfully through its training period, executing foot and rifle drill. No guns are available as yet, so actual artillery training is at present out of the question.

The boys have 25 more drills to complete in order to make up the annual thirty days of training as laid down by the Department of National Defence for N.P.A.M. units. They have already completed their period at camp, and expect to finish their annual training around Christmas.

List of Other Ranks

Following is a list of the other ranks of the battery:

E. Fry; J. Black; E. Clark; L. McKay; C. E. Buker; E. J. Halpin; J. R. Bryant; C. T. Buker; C. Howie; C. D. Sligh; W. H. Hutchinson; H. L. Kokesh; H. Anderson; W. G. Adams; B. F. Armstrong; A. A. Clarke; J. C. Cook; H. Ellis; F. L. Green; J. W. Hanna; W. J. McGeachie; G. J. Sedore; R. S. Shortt; M. Smith; C. H. Ritson; A. A. Ryckman (Trenton); R. B. Warren; J. W. Whallen; R. W. Armitage; R. A. Liddle; C. E. Nixon; A. Accerra; H. W. Beaumont; B. C. Goulet; F. Sligh; W. J. Lucas; J. Whiting; J. Jones.

Defence Minister Ralston Calls for Cheers for Air Force Establishment

Camp Borden, Oct. 1 (CP)—First graduates of the British Commonwealth Air Training scheme received their wings from Air Commodore George O. Johnson here yesterday. The large group represented all parts of Canada and other sections of the empire as well as the United States.

Among those who watched the ceremony was Defence Minister J. L. Ralston who, admitting he was violating strict military formality, took charge for a few moments and called for three cheers for the whole Air Force establishment.

Members of the Wings Parade were under command of Flt.-Lt. Wallace Barton, a native of Lindsay, Ont., who won the distinguished Flying Cross for valor over Dunkerque. Col. Ralston said all the graduates were candidates for that award.

After the wings ceremony the Camp Borden Command was turned over by Group Capt. A. T. N. Cowley to Group Capt. R. S. Grandy who had much to do with the latter training of No. 1 Fighter Squadron which now is operating in the defence of London under Squadron Leader Ernest McNab. Group Capt. Cowley referred to him as one of the "most famous pilots in Canada."

'Sustained Attacks' on Targets In Berlin Area Also French Coast Carried Out by RAF Bombers

London, Oct. 1.—(CP)—Royal Air Force bombers carried out "sustained attacks" on objectives in the Berlin area and in widely scattered localities of Germany and occupied countries last night, the Air Ministry announced today.

Objectives attacked included a munitions factory near Magdeburg, docks at Cuxhaven and Amsterdam, an aircraft factory at Rotenburg, and oil refineries at Leuna and Hanover.

Five planes were lost in the night's operations.

There were violent explosions in Berlin, Mannheim and elsewhere in Germany following the raids, the Air Ministry News Service declared in an additional summary of the air force's continuing attacks.

For over 3 1-2 hours heavy bombers, which had slipped past the German anti-aircraft guns, moved over the German capital, raining bombs on power plants which already had been damaged in previous raids.

The German "invasion bases" at Dunkerque, Calais, Ostend, Boulogne, Lorient and Le Havre were also pounded.

Flares Identify Building

The Air Ministry News Service said the West Power Station in Berlin, hit last week, was clearly identified by flares.

"A few minutes after the first stick of bombs had fallen there was a large explosion and numerous fires marked the success of the attack", it said, continuing with these details.

The Klingenberg Power Station also was "heavily bombed", railways were hit and a factory set on fire.

At the Mannheim railway yards the bursts of bombs were followed almost at once by a violent explosion and then by a whole "line of explosions so fierce and bright that our aircraft were lit up by them."

The fliers decided they had hit either ammunition trains or a series of dumps.

Oil Refineries Hit

At Hanover and at Leuna, east of Leipzig, they dropped their bombs on oil refineries, and at Leuna, already damaged in raids last month, the fliers saw heavy explosions and numerous fires, one so big the men could see it ten minutes after they had sped away.

At Hanover, too, the fires flared skywards, and at Ehrang the explosions in the railway yards were followed by vivid yellow fires. The same thing happened near Osnabrueck when the yards were attacked.

Over Limburg Holland, the R.A.F. dropped bombs on the Airdrome, and saw two large explosions and six smaller ones.

Attacks also were made on docks at Cuxhaven and Amsterdam, an aircraft factory at Rotenburg, on a munitions factory near Magdeburg and on yards and rail communications at Bremen and Brussels.

Longest Alarm of War

Berlin, Oct. 1 (AP)—British air raiders swarmed over western Germany last night and today and gave Berlin is longest alarm of the war.

The raids were claimed by the Germans to have been directed against populous industrial Western Germany and the Berlin suburbs, where several persons were reported injured by a heavy bomb which exploded near three apartment buildings.

(The Air Ministry in London had not issued its report on the raid.)

The alarm kept Berlin's residents in shelters five hours and eight minutes.

The Nazi propaganda machine told Germans that the British command sent over "flying novices who were getting their first training in raid tactics."

The "novices" were described as carrying "mostly flares and incendiary leaflets and a small number of explosives."

One bomb blasted out a crater in a street and smashed in the walls of apartment houses on both sides of the thoroughfare. No one was reported injured.

Steady Barrage Claimed

The British fliers met a steady barrage of anti-aircraft fire which authorities claimed compelled them to stay at a great height.

Raiders crossed and recrossed the capital. Defence guns thundered. Most of the activity appeared to be concentrated in the outskirts, where most of Berlin's industries are located.

It was the third consecutive night of alarms for Berlin's 4,000,000, who had to tumble out of bed before midnight to dash for shelters. There was a two hour and 10 minute alert Sunday morning and an alarm lasting and hour and 50 minutes Monday morning.

At one point during the raid, a missile was heard landing a few blocks away from the Associated Press office, but German sources claimed they had no report of a bomb falling in that vicinity and suggested it might have been an anti-aircraft shell.

Tokyo, Oct. 1—(AP)—Two of the prominent British business men arrested in Japan's July anti-espionage campaign have been given suspended jail terms and four others assessed fines ranging from 200 to 500 yen ($46 to $115), an authoritative source said today.

What punishment was given the seventh man convicted, if any, was not disclosed. Five others are still under examination, Domei said.

Militiamen Urged To Acquire Quantity Of Heavy Socks

By WALTER ALLEMAND
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Montreal, Oct. 1 —(CP)— The army still travels on its feet, don't let anyone kid you about that! This summer and fall 100,000 young men gave maternal care to tootsies encased for the first time in army boots and learned a few things.

Across Canada, numbers of the Non-Permanent Active Militia in camp discovered quickly that sore feet wiped away all the pleasures of militia life. And most of the sore feet were caused by lack of one essential—heavy socks.

The boys who go to camp in October and later under the National Resources Mobilization Act might as well take a tip from the militia and start acquiring heavy socks right now. It's not a bad idea to have a half-dozen pairs along.

Other essentials to take along are these: shaving kit and a mirror, soap, a couple of bathtowels, flashlight, handkerchiefs, bootblack and brush, pair of soft shoes, at least one sweater and either pyjamas or heavy underclothing to sleep in.

Wash day in camp is every day. Militiamen usually soaped and rinsed out a pair of socks daily and tackled the soiled handkerchiefs every three or four days. This was generally a cold-water job.

Shaving also is a daily duty and a cold-water affair too.

Spending money at camp was used, mostly for postage stamps, cigarettes and soft drinks at the canteen. Some found they saved money on $1.20-a-day army pay and others that they could spend as much as they do normally in civilian life.

General Antonescu Promises Probe Into Confinement

Bucharest, Oct. 1—(AP) — The British legation announced today the receipt of a written promise from Gen. Ion Antonescu, Rumanian Chief of State, for a "full investigation" of the cases of five Britons, including a Canadian, held for seven days by Rumanian secret police. The five were reported to have been arrested on charges of planning sabotage of oil fields.

The note spoke of the "illegality" of his arrest and reported beating by iron guardists and demanded full satisfaction.

(The Canadian arrested has been identified merely as "Tracey," but is believed to be Capt. John Treacy of Calgary and Chatham, Ont., an oil engineer known to have been living in Rumania.)

Why The Weather?

By Major A. H. Thiessen
Science Service Meteorologist

The air and the sun's heat! If we call the intensity of the sun's rays 1000 as it hits the top of the atmosphere at the equator at noon, then its strength at the surface would be only 612. This indicates how much is absorbed and reflected by the air. The radiation from the sun throughout the year varies less at the equator (612 to 517) than at any other place on the earth. It varies most at the poles, from zero for half the year to 494 at the North Pole when the sun is highest in June. This variation is due to the very considerable variation of the altitude of the sun. The sun's rays are less intense in winter, not only because they shine less directly, but also because they must penetrate a greater depth of air and are thus further depleted.

GREAT ADVANCES MADE BY CANADA'S MILITARY MACHINE

Lowell Limpus, Military Expert, Says Dominion Has More Men Than Guns at Present Time

INSPECTS PRISONERS

New York, Oct. 2.—(CP)—Lowell Limpus, military expert of the New York Daily News, one of a group of United States newspapermen who recently toured Eastern Canada, today wrote that Canadian authorities "realize that the land of the Maple Leaf has a lot more men than guns at present".

"Like us, a desperate Canada is playing for time", he wrote, in the Flow of Airplanes From U. S. Renews Confidence of Victory

Washington, Oct. 2—(CP)—Renewed confidence in ultimate victory by Great Britain in the air battle with Germany as a result of the flow of airplanes from the United States is expressed in a statement received here by the British Purchasing Commission from Lord Beaverbrook, Minister of Aircraft Production.

The statement said:

"The Ministry of Aircraft Production states that the flow of airplanes from the United States of America gives us renewed confidence in the triumphant conclusion of our long battle in the air.

"The Brewster fighter squadron is now in use. It is earning the praise of our fine pilots. The Douglas DD7 is also in action and the new Curtiss has arrived.

CREW MEMBERS SAFE

London, Oct. 2 (CP)—Twenty-eight crewmen of the 4,319-ton Norwegian vessel Vestvard, which was torpedoed Friday off the Hebrides, were safe in Ireland today after four days and nights in an open lifeboat. They reported one seaman was drowned when the crew had to crowd into a single lifeboat after a second torpedo struck the other of the two lifeboats the vessel had. The Vestvard went down in 10 minutes.

NAZI RADIO SILENT

Concentrate Attack on German Long Range Gun Emplacements

London, Oct. 2—(CP)—Britain's night raiders, taking advantage of lengthening hours of darkness, were reported today to have smashed anew at Berlin and to have struck elsewhere at industrial Germany and military bases along the Nazi-held continental coast.

The attacks, described as extensive, were spread over the invasion ports and "communications and oil targets" across the German frontier.

Other bombers attacked an oil plant and an electric power station at Cologne, a power station at Duisberg, an aircraft factory at Rotterdam and communications in Western Germany.

U. S. Army, Navy Officers Visit With Duke of Windsor

Miami, Fla., Oct. 2 (AP)—Senior United States army and navy officers planned a visit today with the Duke of Windsor in Nassau before setting out an exploration trip to find suitable defence bases on the outlying Bahama Islands.

Travelling in military planes, they stopped in Miami on the way to six British possessions in the West Indies where the United States will lease sufficient land to establish naval and air outposts.

Their stay on New Providence Island, where the Duke makes his home as Governor of the Bahamas, was expected to be brief, because the strip of land 185 miles from the Florida mainland provides scant space and insufficient harborage for military bases.

There was considerable speculation both here and in Nassau as to the location of the Bahamas base or bases. It was considered likely, however, that it would be strategically important to establish at least one base in the vicinity of the Crooked Island Passage, a highway for ships in the West Indies, Central and South American trade.

AUSSIES ARRIVE AT SINGAPORE

Sydney, Oct. 2 (CP Cable)—Arrival of a contingent of the Royal Australian Air Force at Singapore was disclosed today, leading the press to comment with pride that this represents an extenion of Australia's war effort to emphasize Singapore as the Commonwealth's first line bastion. At the same time it was announced that Australia is providing 37 training schools under the empire scheme, of which seven had been completed and 10 more are nearing completion.

British Sources Express Belief Zero Hour for Invasion Past

By DREW MIDDLETON
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

London, Oct. 2 (AP)—Military circles in Britain continue to preach preparedness against invasion, but neutral military observers and unofficial but reliable British sources expressed the belief today the zero hour for such an attack this year has come and gone.

These sources declare, however, that vast German concentrations of men and materials probably will be maintained in the English Channel ports along the Nazi-held coast of France and the low countries throughout the winter.

The threat of invasion, it was thought, would keep the home fleet—including some of the world's most powerful battleships—from turning south to fight Italy in the Mediterranean.

Unofficial British sources said Egypt probably would be the next important land battlefield of the war. They suggested that Germany may move troops and mechanized units to North Africa in the hope of concluding the campaign there by spring so the united powers of the Axis could be turned against the fortress of Britain.

"An attempt at invasion, of course, is always possible," military circles said—but they asserted the almost nightly British bombings of the "invasion ports" plus increasingly unfavorable weather, are whittling down the chance such an attempt could succeed.

Talk of "Indian summer" invasion danger is regarded by some as intended primarily as a warning to the nation's fighting services not to relax their vigilance. Some spells of better weather do come during October, but they do not last long.

"Germany wants a week—perhaps two weeks—of really fine weather if anything is to be done," one source said.

U.S. ARMY'S PEACETIME AIR ACE

Jackie Coogan to Serve As Civilian Instructor To Airmen at Trenton

Hollywood, Oct. 2.—(AP)—Jackie Coogan, who made a fortune as a juvenile actor in silent films, said today he would serve as a civilian flying instructor for Canadian airmen at Trenton, Ontario.

Coogan, 26, said he would leave Friday for Vancouver, to fulfill a two weeks' theatrical engagement, then go to Trenton.

(Royal Canadian Air Force headquarters in Ottawa said they had no record of Coogan's intentions.)

Someone pointed out Coogan would not be in the United States on October 16, registration day for the draft.

"I'm not trying to dodge the draft", Coogan said. "Guess I'll have to register ahead of time or by proxy".

Coogan has been flying 16 months and has 340 hours in the air.

Jackie said he did not intend to join the Royal Canadian Air Force.

GERMAN TROOPS MOVE INTO ITALY

Unofficial Reports Say This Army Will be Used for North Africa Army

London, Oct. 2 (CP)—Military circles said today they had "no reason to doubt" that the German high command has taken over direction of Italian operations in North Africa.

They said there is "no good reason not to believe" that Germany also has moved troops from Reich into Italy—probably to be used as reinforcements for the Italian north African army.

Italy has done little lately, one source said, except to build up a position at Sidi Barrani, Egypt, as an advance base and push some forces southeastward toward the Siwa oasis, which is 60 to 70 miles inside the Egyptian frontier.

These sources explained that Italy's offensive might be aimed either at Matruh or Alexandria from that oasis.

TOKYO INDIFFERENT TO PACT

Tokyo, Oct. 2 (AP)—A letter to the newspaper Hochi complained today of what it called lack of interest in the signing of the alliance among Japan, Germany and Italy.

"People read the big news indifferently as though it were three other countries," the letter said.

"Neither a lantern parade nor a flag procession has been staged in celebration of this great event.... The tripartite alliance is a stirring march for Japan—not an elegy."

The previous top September record was in 1926, when 9,621,756 tons were moved out of head of the lakes docks.

$20,000 Gold Brick Seized at Halifax

Halifax, Oct. 2 (CP)—The Halifax Chronicle caried a news page story today saying a gold brick, valued at $20,000 was reported to have been seized here "after completing a trans-Atlantic voyage undisturbed in the suit case of a refugee from Germany enroute to the United States."

The story said although official confirmation was lacking. "it was reported the valuable brick was smuggled from the Old Country and was discovered by accident and seized by port authorities here while the steamer was enroute to New York."

It added, "The clothing of the refugee was also actually lined with gold, according to reports, which state that on arrival at the American port, a search of the garments revealed 150 gold sovereigns in the lining."

IRON GUARDISTS KIDNAP BRITISH OIL DIRECTOR

A. Miller, Director of Astra Romana Oil Company, Spirited Away by Youths

British Legation Taking Very Serious View of the Incident

Bucharest, Oct. 2 (AP)—The British legation declared today that a band of youths, described as apparently members of the Iron Guard, had kidnapped the Director of the British-controlled Astra Romana, largest oil company in Rumania.

Up to noon, the legation said it had been unable to ascertain the whereabouts or fate of the director, A. Miller.

The legation said it had eyewitnesses to prove that Miller one of the most highly-placed Britons left in the country, had been kidnapped from the summer resort of Snagov on the outskirts of the capital by four young men in plain clothes.

Miller was said to have gone to Snagov to spend the night at a sports club maintained by Astra Romana. The kidnappers were reported to have driven up to the club shortly after midnight and forced Miller to enter their automobile.

The legation said it took a serious view of the incident, which followed the arrest of four other Britons—including one woman—and a Canadian on charges of planning sabotage in the oil fields. Premier Ion Antonescu has promised a full investigation of these arrests, which took place eight days ago.

Courageous Spirit Of British is Tonic Says W. A. Bishop, V.C.

Ottawa, Oct. 2 (CP)—Lack of sleep from incessant bombing raids maters little to the British people, Air Marshal W. A. Bishop told his wife today in a cable from "Somewhere in England."

"The courageous spirit here from high to low is a tonic," he said. Everybody laughs and is amused as always. Nothing can shake them."

The Air Marshal said he saw two "wonderful" air fights from his window. "t was wonderful and thrilling beyond words."

15 Ocean-Going Yachts Obtained For Patrol Work

Navy Minister Angus MacDonald Makes Announcement At Press Conference

Ottawa, Oct. 2 —(CP)— Further expansion of the Royal Canadian Navy through acquisition of 15 large ocean-going yachts, was announced today by Navy Minister Macdonald.

The vessels were acquired for conversion into anti-submarine patrol vessels the Minister told newspapermen gathered in his office for a press conference.

Only a fortnight ago the Navy Minister announced Canada had bolstered her navy through the acquisition of six over-age but serviceable, United States destroyers, raising Canadian destroyer strength to 13.

They were among 50 destroyers turned over to the United Kingdom in exchange for defence bases.

The yachts concerned in today's announcement are ocean-going ships of high speed.

Average Length 170 Feet

Average length of the vessels is 170 feet although some are as much as 260 feet and carry crews to the number of 50.

Most of them have already been commissioned and are now on active service.

The 15th yacht, once the property of the Duke of Sutherland, retains its original name "Sans Peur."

The total cost of the 15 vessels to the Canadian Government was approximately $1,800,000 and their conversion to naval use cost approximately $48,000 for each ship. They carry depth charges and guns.

Approximately 130 ships are now commissioned in the Royal Canadian Navy, including the six destroyers recently acquired from the United States, the seven destroyers previously in service, the auxiliary cruiser Prince Robert which is a converted passenger ship, and many minesweepers, auxiliary vessels, patrol vessels and anti-submarine craft.

Germany and Italy Deficient In Key Commodities Says Dalton

London, Oct. 2 (CP)—Germany and Italy, the latter especially, are deficient today in "many key commodities without which modern war cannot be carried on," Hugh Dalton, Minister of Economic Warfare, declared today.

After a year, he said, the British blockade is attaining "a remarkable degree of success."

As yet, however, Britain's opponents are "not so short of oil as I would like," he told a luncheon gathering of the National Defence public interest committee.

Besides oil, Mr. Dalton listed alloys, rubber, lead, copper and textiles as commodities "in which shortage of varying degrees has been created by us in enemy territory."

"We have evidence already that the Nazis have practically exhausted all the oil which they have looted from countries which they overran," he said. Now they are back where they were, with the additional handicap that they have to provision the overrun countries in order that their economic life may continue at all."

The German war effort died out in 1918, Mr. Dalton said, while Germany still had 1,000,000 tons of oil, adding that "today, the dying out figure would certainly be much higher."

"The position now is that if there is to be any continued economic life, even economic slavery, in the countries overrun by Germany," he declared, "Germans must provide oil for them from their own synthetic plants after the Royal Air Force have baptized them, or alternatively produce sources of supply in Russia and Rumania where they are getting less oil than they had hoped to obtain."

Mr. Dalton asserted he was "quite satisfied from a study of the facts that in Europe as a whole there will be no famine this winter," and that "there will be enough food to go round provided it is fairly shared out.".

Remarking that some believed "when the Nazis overran so many countries last summer the power of the blockade had been broken," the Minister said "I am glad to assure you that that is not correct."

He warned "certain neutrals with whom from time to time we have negotiations" against accumulating "large stocks of goods needed by the enemy."

Maria Anne Shields of Meaford Lost in Dense Bush Over Night

Meaford, Ont., Oct. 2 (CP)—Maria Anne Shields, 77-year old spinster was found alive today after an all night search throughout dense bush some 10 miles north west of Meaford. Miss Shields strayed from the home of Arthur M. Goudy, St. Vincent farmer, late yesterday. The aged woman suffered from exposure and loss of memory and could not tell the searchers where she was. She had not eaten for more than 18 hours. Her condition showed she had suffered from the cold damp night in a lonely bush.

Nearly 80 men took part in the search including dozens of farmers and members of the N.P.A.M. of "B" Company, Grey and Simcoe Foresters.

LITTLE GIRLS RAISE $11 FOR RED CROSS

The little Misses sold tickets on a handsome table doily which realized the above sum of money. The draw was made at the home of Joan's mother Mrs. Newman at 325 Dufferin Avenue last night, and the prize was won by a Mrs. Muirhead.

PLENTY OF PARTRIDGE IN NORTH HASTINGS

There is no dearth of partridge in the North Hastings woods, according to a group of Prince Edward County hunters who passed through the city last night after opening day's hunt.

They had good bags of plump birds, and stated they had little difficulty in securing their allotment. They shot the main part of the bag near Steenburgh.

District Apple Crop Shows a Decrease

A substantial decrease in apple crops in this district will relieve growers of part of the worry of securing markets, according to senior fruit inspector C. T. Stevenson.

The yield is a fair one, he said, but the fruit is productive of much more scab than the 1939 yield. This is due to early season rains which washed sprays from the young fruit before they had time to take effect.

Prices here for fall fruits compare favorably with those of other years, and it is expected winter quotations will be on a similar level to those of a year ago. Growers anticipate that Ottawa and Quebec markets which took much of the surplus fruit grown here will again function, although canning concerns here have signified their intention of preserving apples on a much larger scale than heretofore.

Two Automobiles Turn Over in Ditch

Hurtling over an embankment, two automobiles rolled over into the ditch while attempting to round Avis's curve, two miles west of Deseronto on Highway No. 2 shortly before 3.00 a.m. today. The vehicles were being driven tandem, the occupants of the lead car escaping with but minor injuries as the vehicle in which they were riding was a complete wreck, Provincial Constable Grayling announced after investigation today.

Solomon Borovoy, Kitchener, was the owner of the vehicles and was accompanied by Norman Levett, of Hamilton. The occupants were driving a Packard sedan, and towing a Pontiac coach. "We were blinded by the headlights of an approaching vehicle from the west and were upon the shoulder of the road and rolled over before we realized our difficulty," Mr. Borovoy reported to Constable Grayling. The lead Packard car was a complete wreck, but the occupants miraculously escaped without serious injury.

Rev. C. T. Olmstead Special Speaker At B. Y. P. U. Meeting

Rev. C. T. Olmstead addressed the senior B.Y.P.U. of Victoria Avenue Baptist Church Tuesday evening on the subject: "What is Your Life?" "Life becomes abundant when we surrender everything to Christ," said the minister. "Do not look for the easy path, the way of least resistance for, if our convictions are shallow our steps will be tottering. But if our convictions are deep-rooted our steps will be firm. Life is measured by our achievements for Christ. Proper discernment gives proper direction; therefore we must seek first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness and abundant life will be added unto us."

The Fellowship Group were in charge of the meeting, with Miss Edna Jobson in the chair. Scripture was read by Miss Jean Thompson. Miss Jean Cook gave two humorous readings: "Cleaning the Furnace" and "Peeking," while Master Jack Shaddock sang in his sweet young voice " I Shall Not Pass Again This Way." The closing prayer was given by Miss Jean Stevenson.

Vocational School Night Classes Attended by More Than 350 Students

More than three hundred and fifty young men and women from Belleville and district crowded their way into the Belleville Collegiate and Vocational School on Tuesday evening as the seasonal night school classes began with one of the largest registrations in the history of the institution. Judging the numbers of men in attendance which were much beyond the average school age, the classes this year will extend considerably over into the field of adult education and vouches much for the importance which potential students are attaching to the opportunity afforded to fit themselves for a place in industry.

The numbers of students registering in the war emergency classes including machine shop, welding and motor mechanics classes, showed a big increase from that of other years, while the typewriting and business practices class also proved popular.

Students entering the war emergency classes were warned by Mr. B. C. Sisler, Chairman of the Vocational Committee, that in view of the seriousness of the work entailed, there would be no fooling permitted. "There is no place in these classes," he said, "for any person who is merely putting in time and students must devote their entire interest to their classes or they will be struck off the lists. Absence from classes on three consecutive nights unless unavoidable through illness, would cause the student to lose his place in class," he said.

Welding, Machine Shop Classes Popular

Registrations in the machine shop and welding classes were so great that it was necessary to divide the students into groups who will attend classes on four nights out of the week. Each group will receive one and one half hours' training either Monday and Wednesday evenings or on Tuesday and Thursday evening. The same system will be used in the motor mechanics class but only on three days of the week. Other classes will meet on Tuesday and Thursday evenings.

Seventy-six students are enrolled in the machine shop class, 74 in the welding class, 58 in the motor mechanics class, 82 in the typing and business practice group, 17 in the drafting and 27 in the woodworking class. Many more students desired to register Tuesday evening but due to the number already enrolled, the Vocational Committee decided it would be impossible to handle students registering after Monday evening.

Included among the students registering in the welding class was Miss Alice Lowey, the only woman entrant in the war emergency classes. It undoubtedly took plenty of grit for Miss Lowey to register as the only girl in a class of 74 men, but she was determined to enter the welding class and was accordingly registered along with the men.

Pte. Joseph Collins of the Midland Regiment, appeared charged with assaulting Harry Vechter, Front Street, secondhand dealer, and causing Mr. Vechter actual bodily harm. Clad in the khaki of his regiment Pte. Collins entered a plea of not guilty and his case was enlarged until the next city police court sitting. "The man is noticeably mentally ill", Crown Attorney S. Gordon Robertson assured His Worship as medical examiners' official papers were produced to insure the commitment.

Two inebriates, who were arrested on charge of intoxication last night, pleaded guilty today and were assessed the conventional "ten and costs".

One of the men was a sailor lad, who had recently been discharged from the Canadian Navy owing to physical condition. When placed in the cell block last night, the ex-sailor lad locked himself in the solitary confinement cell and shouted—"all hands on deck, she's sprung a leak". A few seconds later he was in the arms of morpheus, sleeping peacefully.

Wanted in Toronto on a charge of stealing a motor car, a man whose name was given as Harry C. Delaney, Toronto, was arrested in Belleville last night. Delaney is being held for the Toronto authorities, who in turn hold a warrant for his arrest. He was apprehended by Provincial Police.

MISS ANNA M. GALLAGHER

Many citizens heard with deep sorrow of the death of Miss Anna M. Gallagher, who passed away at the family residence, 35 Bridge Street West, on Tuesday afternoon. She had not been in very good health of late, but her death came suddenly and as a shock to her friends.

The late Miss Gallagher was born in Belleville, a daughter of the late William and Elizabeth Gallagher and spent her entire life in this city. She was possessed of a bright and cheerful disposition and took a keen interest in many activities. She was much interested in the work of the church and Sunday School. For many years she taught a class of boys in St. Andrew's Presbyterian Sunday School from the time of their graduation from the primary department until they had reached young manhood and she was held in deep regard by them. As a member of the congregation of St. Andrew's Church she took a lively interest in church activities.

For many years Miss Gallagher was associated with the Hastings County Registry office staff as clerk. There she rendered devoted and wholehearted service in the performance of the duties which she was called upon to fulfil. She was still on the staff at the time of her death, but had been absent on leave.

There mourn her passing two sisters Mrs. John Rathman and Miss Carrie D. Gallagher of this city, and nieces and nephews.

Her sisters have the deepest sympathy in their bereavement. Less than three months ago, they were called upon to mourn the death of another sister, Mrs. John Grigor, who passed away at her home in Toronto.

LATE FERRIS WOOD, (Ameliasburg).

Tuesday afternoon the funeral of Ferris Wood took place from the family residence in Ameliasburg, Prince Edward County, and many friends were present. The service in the home was conducted by the Rev. G. A. Adamson, pastor of the Ameliasburg United Church, and the address was given by the Rev. J. D. P. Knox of Belleville. During the service two vocal solos in keeping with the occasion were rendered by Mrs. Milton Wood of Ameliasburg.

Interment was made in Ameliasburg Cemetery; the service at the graveside was conducted by the Rev. G. A. Adamson and the Rev. J. D. P. Knox.

The late Mr. Wood was a member of Lake Lodge No. 215 A. F. and A.M. and the last rites of the order were conducted at the graveside by Wor. Master Victor Bongard.

The bearers were Messrs. F. Johnson, G. Crosby, J. Black, W. Blakely, C. Cunningham and H. Cunningham.

MISS MYRTLE A. CLAZIE (Thurlow Township)

After an illness of four months' duration, Miss Myrtle Annie Clazie passed away at the residence of her cousin, Mr. Arthur Clazie, in the 1st Concession of Thurlow Township on Tuesday, October 1.

The late Miss Clazie, who was in her 60th year was born in Halton County, being a daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Clazie. For seventeen years she resided in Toronto and for the past thirteen years she made her home in Thurlow Township. In religion she was a member of the United Church and highly esteemed.

The funeral announcement is made elsewhere in this paper.

REGINALD JOHN VINNICONDE, (Crookston)

Madoc, Oct. 2 (Special) — On Monday, September 30, 1940, Reginald John Vinniconde passed away at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Vinniconde, at Crookston, Ontario. The deceased was in his fourteenth year, being born in England and coming to Canada only a few years ago. He had been a patient at the Belleville General Hospital for the past six weeks and had returned to his home at Crookston only recently.

MARY ETTA FINKLE (Sidney Township)

In the passing of Mrs. Mary Etta Finkle, Sidney township has lost one of its oldest inhabitants and the Front of Sidney, a resident, whose influence for good in the community in which she resided all her life, shall be treasured in the hearts and lives of countless numbers for many years to come.

In her ninety-fifth year, Aunt Ett (as she was known far and wide) possessed the breadth of vision, keen intellect and those commendable qualities of heart which won and held her friends throughout her long life and which she was permitted to retain until a short time before her death.

Mrs. Finkle was born on the 2nd of Sidney in the year 1845 and was the daughter of Reuben and Eliza Finkle Kelly, who were pioneers of the Quinte district.

In the year 1862 she was married to John Wesley Finkle and from that date until her death she resided at Bayside on the Front of Sidney.

For a period of twenty-two years she was postmistress at Bayside, and also operated a general store. An only son, Raymond Edgar Finkle predeceased her twenty-one years ago.

The bearers were Jas Harry, Clifton Rush, H. R. Hunt, Lewis Wilson, Arthur L. Burke and John Fletcher.

Interment was made in White's Cemetery.

CONSERVATIVES START CAMPAIGN TO REBUILD PARTY

Objective of Campaign is Membership of 20,000 in Association

WILL HAVE EMBLEM

By FRANK FLAHERTY

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Oct. 2 (CP)—In the midst of the bloody battles of war the National Conservative Party bestirs itself to prepare for the bloodless battles of ballots in the days to come.

Dominion Conservative headquarters today announced the start of a campaign to rebuild the Dominion Conservative Association on a nation-wide basis. Letters bearing the signature of the Association President, John R. MacNicol, Member of Parliament for Toronto-Davenport, are going out to about 2,500 Conservatives who attended the National Convention of the party at Ottawa in 1938.

Initial objective of the campaign is a membership of 20,000 for the Association. The long range objective is to invigorate the party so it can play its traditional role in Canadian democracy.

"Political organization should have as its objective the preservation of freedom and democracy and therefore must be directed towards maintaining a strong opposition capable of becoming a government when occasion demands," the organization's letter states.

"A strong opposition, based on patriotism can materially assist and co-operate in the paramount work of our nation today, which is to win the war and to make adequate preparation for the rehabilitation which must necessarily follow."

Association to be Permanent

A Dominion Conservative Association on a permanent basis has been the aim of leading members of the party for years. As long ago as 1936, soon after the party went out of power at the 1935 election, a constitution was drawn up for it. The constitution was approved at the 1938 convention and a start made towards the enrolment of members. The war and the necessity of turning party activity into the election campaign of last winter side-tracked the plan for the time being.

The Dominion Association is to be distinct from, but in contact with, the Provincial, constituency and local party associations. The prime movers in the drive are Mr. MacNicol, Miss J. E. Denison of Ottawa, Executive Secretary and Frank Lennard of Dundas, Ont., Treasurer.

Dominion Executive

The constitution provides for a Dominion Executive consisting of these three officers, the leader of the party, Provincial Conservative leaders, the Dominion organizer when one is chosen, two representatives from the Dominion Young Conservative Association, the Chairman of the Press Committee, the Chairman of the Caucus Organization Committee and representatives of Provincial Conservative Associations.

To add point to the National character of the Dominion Association a distinctive emblem, consisting of the map of Canada bear[illegible] the name of the association, has been chosen. The emblem is in blue, the party color—the outline of the map in light blue and the lettering in dark.

Members to Have Badge

As a new departure in Canadian political activity members of the association will be given a neat badge, also bearing the map and the letters "D.C.A." It will not be a gaudy button like those sometimes issued in election campaigns, but an inconspicuous dressy affair which may be worn on all occasions on a man's coat lapel or a woman's dress. The membership cards of the organization will also be in blue and bear the association emblem.

With the letter goes a printed brochure of about a dozen pages reviewing the role played by the Conservative party in Canadian history.

The brochure says the creed of the party is "duty, concord, loyalty—to safeguard the integrity of our empire, the unity of our Dominion and the peace, happiness and prosperity of all our Canadian people."

Held Provincial Meetings

The campaign in different parts of the country is to be timed to coincide with meetings of provincial Conservative associations. Mr. MacNicol plans to attend each of these meetings and speak on the objects of the association and the duty of Conservatives to discharge their responsibilities in the fight for democratic freedom.

Development of the association will probably be a prelude to the selection of a permanent national Conservative leader. At present Hon. R. B. Hanson, member for York-Sunbury, is acting leader in the House of Commons, having been selected by the caucus of Conservative members.

Hon. R. J. Manion, the leader chosen at the 1938 national convention, tendered his resignation to the caucus in May of this year.

SEASON CLOSED AT TOURIST CAMP

Falling Off of Nearly Thirty Per Cent From Registrations of Last Year

Despite the fact that tourist traffic in Canada was admittedly far below normal during the 1940 season, a fairly successful year was enjoyed at the Belleville Tourist Camp it was revealed yesterday by the caretaker as the camp was being closed for the winter.

According to the registration book there was a falling off of only 30 per cent. in attendance compared to last year with approximately 2,000 persons visiting the camp this season. Over 2,800 persons visited the camp last year however, and contributed $160 to the camp coffers in dues, while this year the receipts fell off to $110. The fact that the camp was opened later this year and was closed three weeks earlier than last season, however, possibly partly accounted for the decreased receipts.

Business throughout the early part of the season was almost at par with that of last year, it was revealed, but after July 15, when usually there is a noticeable uptrend in registrations, there was not the expected increase. This was due to the noticeable falling off in the numbers of American visitors while the fact that the receipts were lower than last year in proportion to registrations, was also partly accounted for by the fact that quite a large percentage of the visitors at the camp throughout July and August were members of picnic parties from whom no revenue is collected unless they use the cooking facilities provided for tourists.

The generosity of the Belleville Horticultural Society in providing flowers, making for added beauty of the tourist camp every season is greatly appreciated by those in charge, while the cooperation of the police department and also the fire department is likewise appreciated.

'PANZER' TACTICS OF MASSED ARMY HIGHLY PRAISED

Speed and Mobility of Large Army Demonstrated in Convincing Manner

MAINTAIN SCHEDULES

(By The Canadian Press)

Five thousand Canadian soldiers from Camp Borden left their overnight billets today for the second stage of mass manoeuvres which will take them to Hamilton and points along the shores of Lake Erie and Lake Ontario which they left Camp Borden yesterday to "defend."

During the first day's operations the troops, moving in three columns and employing "Panzer" tactics, travelled upwards of 100 miles in their movement to the "coastal" defence area.

Speed and mobility, the fundamental bases of successful modern warfare, were demonstrated in convincing manner during the day's mechanized movement and military authorities expressed their satisfaction with the conduct of the operations. They found a smoothness of cohesion and almost complete lack of confusion.

The schedules that had been worked out in advance were in the main accurately adhered to and the motorized equipment, including more than 500 vehicles, functioned smoothly. Actual wartime conditions were lacking but in many cases the columns were sent over dirt roads in preference to paved highways.

The flying columns of troops were received with enthusiastic cheers by thousands of civilian spectators as they made their way through the industrial and agricultural sections of the territory between Camp Borden and their night bivouac grounds. Farmers left their harvesting and fall ploughing operations to watch the long cavalcades, school children were released from classes and business people left work to wave their defenders on to success.

Airplanes Take Part

The three columns, each a self-sufficient army unit, comprised the Perth Regiment, which spent the night in Paris, the Grey-Simcoe Foresters, which put up at Preston for the night, and the Irish Regiment of Canada, which bivouacked at Brantford. In addition there was an armored vehicles section which camped at Kitchener. Each column was attended by men from the Second Cavalry Motorcycle Regiment, formerly the Governor-General's Horse Guards, who acted as a protective screen for the whole movement.

Royal Canadian Air Force planes took part in the manoeuvres and at one time were instrumental in displaying a weakness in one of the units. The column had stopped for lunch in an open field but was quickly discovered from the air.

Two casualties were reported during yesterday's operations. One young soldier suffered a pain in the side and was despatched quickly to a casualty clearing station for attention. In Brantford Sgt. Arthur Cull of the Irish Regiment was knocked down and seriously injured by an automobile near the infantry training centre.

After today's manoeuvres the troops will encamp at Hamilton and will leave tomorrow morning for the return journey to Camp Borden via Toronto.

CONFERENCE ADJOURNED

Cornwall, Ont., Oct. 2 (CP)—Negotiations towards settlement of the dispute between Courtauld's (Canada) Ltd., and the Cornwall Rayon Workers' Union were adjourned Tuesday until Friday to enable the union to gather further evidence for certain arguments, union officials said.

The negotiations followed a 24-hour strike at the Cornwall plant last Friday. Most workers returned to work next day but normal operation of the plant cannot be resumed until later this week due to interruption by the strike of several processes.

HOUSE BURNS AT POINT TRAVERSE

Residence of Mrs. Patrick Hogan Destroyed in Early Morning Blaze

South Bay, Oct. 2 (Special)—Fire of undetermined origin, destroyed the residence of Mrs. Patrick Hogan, Point Traverse, early Tuesday morning. An alarm was sounded at 3 a.m., and neighbors and fishermen rushed to the scene but managed to save only part of the household furnishings. Twelve hundred of flour, stored for the winter use, was destroyed along with much canned fruit, etc. The loss was partially covered by insurance.

High Winds

Commercial fishermen were able to retrieve their nets today. For four days all fishing craft have been held at their quays owing to high winds that swept across the lake. There was slight damage to some fishing gear which had been previously set in shoal waters before the blow. October is usually a month of high winds, say the fishermen, and they are taking precautionary measures against any loss to their equipment.

News Briefs

Mr. and Mrs. Willard Metcalfe, Cherry Valley; Miss Betty Allison and Mr. Mac VanDusen, Picton, visited friends at Point Traverse over the week-end.

Newspaper Warns Watchfulness Must Extend to Mediterranean

Manchester, England, Oct. 2 (CP)—The Manchester Guardian said said today British "watchfulness must now extend more and more to the Mediterranean, for on events there the Empire's future may depend."

The Guardian commented that "the R.A.F.'s successes during last month permit us to be confident about the future of the battle of Britain. Hitler may still order an invasion attempt but that he has not won aerial superiority makes it less likely."

"No field of war is more important to us than that in which we defend Suez and our fleet bases in the Mediterranean," it went on.

"We may have to send considerable reinforcements of aircraft to the middle east when Italy begins in earnest, particularly if she is aided by German bombers."

Remarking that Germany "is pressing Spain hard about Gibraltar," the newspaper warned:

"It is the triangle of Mediterranean doorways that the axis is after and diplomatic preparations seem about to end. We must look for a sudden enlargement of the struggle in this field which may leave the present Italian offensive looking like one of its smallest parts."

HELD FOR DESERTION

Pembroke, Ont., Oct. 2 (CP)—Basil Cadden of Pembroke was arrested by local police Tuesday and is being held for Royal Canadian Air Force officials at St. Thomas, Ont., on charges of desertion and theft.

Police here said Cadden was wearing an R.C.A.F. officer's uniform when arrested. He joined the R.C.A.F. last winter.

Mischka Saved From Big Bad Bears; Blitzkrieged for Riling Cage-Mates

New York Oct. 2—Mischka, the Central Park Zoo's irrepressible little sun bear, got into trouble again the other day.

Shortly after 3 p.m. with a great crowd thronging the picture-book menagerie, and scores of diners relaxing under the vivid parasols of John Kelly's terrace restaurant, a bedlam of yowls and snarls came from the near-by bear dens.

The trouble was easy to find, even without the noise. For already pop-eyed visitors were pressing forward toward the westernmost enclosure, inhabited since the zoo was remodeled, in 1934, by Mischka and a pair of Himalayan black bears, each six years younger than she but between three and four times as heavy.

It was simply that Mischka had riled the bigger bears and was beneath them, being pummeled and snapped at near the rocky rim of the den's pool.

Mischka was plainly no match for the others and spectators feared for her life. The sun bear was being dragged toward the rear of the den, leaving a smear of blood, the eyewitnesses said, when Head Keeper Richard O'Brien and two other keepers came to the rescue.

With long poles and a strong-squirting hose the men managed to separate the beasts. Meanwhile two patrolmen from the Arsenal Station kept the crowd back. Finally the bears were parted and taken through the steel door in the natural stone wall of the den to individual compartments out of public view.

Dr. Harry F. Nimphius, zoo veterinarian, was reluctant to discuss the matter, dismissing it as in the category of "two dogs snarling at each other." He said nothing of any consequence had happened and no animal had been hurt seriously.

For years Mischka who is now 14 years old but weighs barely 100 pounds, has been something of a problem child to menagerie authorities. On May 2, 1934, she escaped and engaged in such tantrums that Keeper Jimmy Hines was bitten and clawed, 100 relief workers were scared stiff and two emergency carrying boxes were virtually demolished.

As a result Mischka was exiled to Prospect Park. She returned in April, 1935, pleasing the late Head-keeper Bob Hurton, of whom she was a favorite. But in less than a month — on May 20, 1935 — she escaped again and for nearly an hour the quadrangle centered by the seal pool was in a riotous state. Even Mr. Kelly's hastily proffered cups of ice cream didn't help much; Mischka finally required some pacification by a patrolman's nightstick.

She is a bear with personality.

BOYS DO OWN HOUSEKEEPING IN THE ARMY

'Fatigue' Duty is Job Every Soldier Tries to Shun but Each Must Do Share

DETAILED FOR WORK

(By Jack Gray, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Oct. 2—(CP)—The army has a name for it—fatigue—but the gay blades who dodge the housework at home have many others.

The boys do their own housekeeping in the army. They found that out when they went to camp as members of non-permanent active militia units this summer. The best trick in the bag won't provide an outlet either.

There's fatigue work every day at a militia camp. A sergeant assigns details to clean up mess tents, look after sanitation, help out in the kitchens, scrub dishes, pick up cigarette butts and matches along the tent lines, and generally keep camp spick and span.

Washing dishes in the army is easy. The dishes are passed through a tank of boiling, soapy water—that's if the water's hot and there's any soap — until they are clean. They are rinsed off under a tap and put through another tank full of disinfectant, and then rinsed again.

Kitchen Fatigue Unpopular

Cleaning up the cook's shack is another matter. Great pans have obstinate bits of grub clinging here and there. Soup and tea tureens generally have tide marks in rings. It takes plenty of elbow grease to make them shine. Kitchen fatigue is highly unpopular.

Mess tents must be kept clean. Tables and benches have to be washed; waste paper, dead matches and odds and ends picked up. Potatoes and onions must be peeled, garbage cans emptied, personal clothes washed and hung out to dry, grass trimmed and weeds eliminated.

Three or four men generally are assigned to pass out the food for a company of 100 men at meal times. In most camps the men line up before a table outside the mess tent and are served cafeteria fashion. At each meal the orderly officer visits the mess to handle any complaints. There are very few and these usually are remedied speedily.

Every man who enters a militia camp gets a taste of fatigue, although it's likely to be peeling spuds on one occasion and doing picket duty the next.

HOME IMPROVEMENT LOANS UP

Ottawa, Oct. 2 (CP)—Home improvement loans up to Aug. 31 in towns and cities with a population of 5,000 or more numbered 84,379 and amounted to $35,193,258, Finance Minister Ilsley announced today. The loans were inaugurated in November, 1936.

Toronto headed the list of cities with 14,074 loans to date totalling $4,916,616 while 4,755 were made in Montreal for $2,637,607.

CORDELL HULL IS 69 TODAY

Too Preoccupied With World Affairs to Think About Birthday

Washington, Oct. 2 (AP)—Cordell Hull was 69 today and too preoccupied with world affairs to think about it.

The United States Secretary of State was born in a backwoods cabin in Tennessee but has an international outlook which belies the Provincial limitations of his early background

His white hair may be a bit whiter, his stoop more pronounced and his movements a little slower. But in general, Hull shows slight traces of the strain that has accompanied his 7 1-2 years as Secretary of State.

Building cooperation among the American nations for both military and economic defence, and helping Great Britain by measures "short of war" are now his chief considerations.

Menzies Gov't Has One Majority After Speaker Chosen

Melbourne, Oct. 2—(CP—Reuters)—Latest returns in Australia's general election today indicated that the Menzies Coalition Government will have a majority of one in the House of Representatives after a speaker has been chosen. In the last House it had a majority of nine.

The probable standing:

	New House	at Dissolution
Government:—
United Australia	24	25
Country	14	17
Government Total ...	38	42
Opposition:—
Labor	32	23
Independent Labor ..	4	9
Opposition Total	36	32
Total Membership ...	74	74

Polling was held Sept. 21. Counting is normally slow under the Commonwealth's proportional representation system, but has been complicated further this year by the necessity of awaiting the soldier vote from overseas.

Latest figures indicate the defeat of H. K. Nock, Minister without portfolio, in Riverina, the seat going to Labor.

CHOICE OF WAR

Melbourne (CP)—The British Empire must realize it chose war with all its horrors "rather than let brute force go from victory to victory unchallenged," said Professor Walter Murdock in a talk to the Australian people.

POLICE SEEKING JUDGE R. E. SAGE

Shooting in Judge's Office Leaves One Dead and Two Others Wounded

Detroit, Oct. 2 —(AP)— A statewide police search for Common Pleas Judge Robert E. Sage was under way today as a result of a shooting which left one man dead and two others wounded in the Judge's office in the county building.

Inspector Paul O. Whitman of the homicide squad quoted the wounded men as saying the 41-year-old Judge "seemed" to go suddenly haywire" during an argument last night with three partners in a business enterprise, drew a pistol from his desk, and began firing.

Ralph Nadell, 48, of suburban Birmingham, fell with a bullet through his head. Al Nadell, 39, his brother, and Maurice D. Smilay, 56-year-old Detroit attorney, suffered shoulder wounds.

By the time the police arrived Judge Sage, a veteran politician and a one time lumberjack and professional prize fighter, had fled, hatless and coatless, from the building.

Smilay said the four men had gathered in the Judge's office to discuss a court decision which threatened operation of Sports Park here. All were directors of the Park, he said, and Judge Sage had invested heavily in it.

During the argument which developed, Whitman quoted Smilay as saying, the Judge suddenly produced the pistol, cried "This will pacify everybody," and opened fire.

RICHES OF CANADA'S MINERALS

In mineral output alone, Canada, in the year 1939, produced $474,602,059 in wealth, a new record. This is nearly half a billion dollars in one division of the wealth-producing factors of the Dominion.

The importance of the mineral deposits is emphasized by the increasing production year after year. They are a challenge to Canadian enterprise and a prophecy of a great national future.

The value of metallic ores and metals amounted to over a third of a billion dollars. Coal, crude petroleum and other fuels, totalled over seventy millions. Asbestos, gypsum and other industrial minerals over twenty-five millions. Clay products, cement, stone and other structural materials over thirty-five and a third millions.

The outstanding contributors of mineral wealth in Canada were the gold mines and base metal mines, gold reaching the all-time peak of $184,115,951. Last year's gold output almost reached the entire mineral output of Canada in 1922, which was $184,297,242.

Records were made last year for copper, nickel and zinc of $111,855,164. Lead output was $12,313,768.

Last year for the first time in several years the output of iron ore was announced. Notable increases were shown in the fuel industries. Crude petroleum amounted to 7,826,301 barrels compared with 6,966,0084 barrels for the previous year. Coal production stood at 15,537,443 tons, an increase of 8.7 per cent. Coal output in the last half of the year amounted to 8,227,401 tons compared with 6,816,269 in the first six months of the year. Natural gas output rose to a total of 35,185,146 cubic feet.

Such is the remarkable record of the Canadian mineral industry. When this is taken \into account with the riches of other departments of the national economy, Canadians can see how goodly a heritage is theirs, a heritage which is important in a time such as the present when the resources of the nations are required to stand the strain of a struggle between democracy and Fascist-Nazi lawlessness and violence.

MILITANT SONGS

Militant songs have the quality of being the work of spontaneity and very often are the work of humble or unknown composers. In the Great War "Tipperary" came to be a marching song which rang across the English speaking world. Rouget de Lisle, a French officer of artillery, not a maestro of his time, wrote the famous "Marseillaise," sung first by a party of that name as they entered Paris in 1792. Under the Bourbons and Bonapartes the song was deemed so dangerous that it was placed under ban. Yet after a century and a half it has retained its power to sway. The tune, it is said, contains progressions so rare in popular songs it is difficult to understand its general acceptance. But the fact remains that it has been popular for generations and even the collapse of France this year will not end it. Poet-laureate songs have rarely, says the New York Times, found a hearing in wartime. In the United States during the World War the famous George M. Cohan composed "Over There," which became the most popular song of America in 1917-18. Today in the world crisis another famous American, Irving Berlin, has composed "God Bless America" and it bids fair to take the lead of anything of the kind in the U.S.

One of the great songs which goes back to the days of Edward the First and Robert Bruce for its inspiration is the great "Scots Wha Hae Wi' Wallace Bled," by Robert Burns. That will remain one of the immortal songs of the ages—a war hymn written by one of the greatest of poets.

TRIPLE TREATY NO SURPRISE

Whatsoever the course of events as a result of the new triple Axis Alliance of Germany, Italy and Japan, it has been well enough known for a number of years which way the Japanese Government was looking. News of the treaty did not cause surprise, even the reference to division of spheres of interest though the claus[illegible] Germany, Italy and Japan agree to collaborate and mutually support each other with all and any economic, political and military means, should they be attacked by any Power not at present involved in the European or the Chinese-Japanese War," was quite pointed. Of course the reference was to the United States and it has been felt by many that this was a warning to the United States against support of Britain by the sale of armaments. To some it looked like a Hitler project worked up among the three totalitarian powers as the two western Axis powers see their scheme for speedy roundup of the western democratic world going awry. It was so pointed that it might show the very evident and anxious desire of Hitler or Japan to do something about the kindly relations of the United States for Britain or of the future of the Western nations' possessions in the Far East.

Adolf Hitler, who it is believed had a great deal to do with the work which went before the signing of the triple pact between the German-Italian Axis and Japan last week, can have little satisfaction in the results for there are no signs of weakness on the part of the United States or of Britain. Mr. Sumner Welles, Under-Secretary of State for the United States, declared Saturday in plain words that the United States Government intended to continue to furnish the fullest material support and aid to Britain in the form of supplies and munitions.

It is another evidence that Hitler cannot read the democratic mind. He cannot intimidate the freedom-loving peoples of the world.

MUSSOLINI AND GREECE

By EUGENE LENNHOFF
(United Correspondents)
(E-22)

Further proof of the extent to which Mussolini apes his German master in everything he does is provided by the latest Italian tactics against Greece. Beyond all doubt Mussolini is now anxious to secure his share in the so-called "new order" in the Balkans. Not long since he was first in the field, but after his seizure of Albania on Good Friday in 1939 as a first step towards the fulfilment of his dreams, Stalin and Hitler were quicker in defining their "spheres of interest". Hence Mussolini is now stretching out his hands against Greece. The Italian press is adopting a more and more hostile attitude towards the Greeks. This press campaign is on exactly the same lines and is just as mendacious as the campaigns launched by Goebbels in turn against Austria, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Norway and Holland shortly before the invading columns were set in motion.

Greece, which lies in the periphery of Europe, but is now suddenly thrust by the Italians into the forefront of European politics, is the naval power among the Balkan states. This has materially affected both her economic structure and her foreign policy. Economically the country differs widely from its neighbours. Cereals play a very subordinate part in Greek economy, only 11% of the soil being under the plough. Greece consumes more bread than she grows, and grain accounts for one quarter of Greek imports. The staple products of Greek agriculture and export are tobacco, olives and wine. Greek economic life has its centre of gravity in maritime trade and shipping. For this reason the country attracts Mussolini, not as an economic asset, but as an extremely important factor in Axis naval strategy. Greece occupies a key position in the Eastern Mediterranean, the decisive position indeed, in the southern part of those waters.

Has Strategic Position

Greece is, so to speak, the Portugal of the Eastern Mediterranean. Just as Portugal flanks Gibraltar, to Greece flanks the Straits, the Dardanelles and the Bosphorus. Even to-day she still secures Britain's air communications with the other Balkan powers. Her strategic position is of very great importance in two ways — the country is a Mediterranean as well as a Balkan power. In this latter capacity she played a big part in the Great War. It was from Salonica that the western powers intervened in south-eastern Europe, from Salonica that they rolled up the enemy's Balkan front after their final victory in the west.

Mussolini has long had his eyes fixed upon the island of Corfu and the rich Greek province of Northern Epirus (with Janina). Possession and fortification of the west coast of Epirus would enormously reduce the value of Corfu and Cephalonia as Greek and British naval bases. Not that this in the least diminishes Mussolini's desire for Corfu. The Italian press is constantly declaring that as long as Greece remains in possession of Corfu and of the other Ionian islands, the Adriatic is only theoretically an Italian sea. It must, however, become and remain Italian, "Mare nostrum".

The annexation of Albania has greatly improved the prospects of an attack on Greece. Before 1939 two roads already connected southern Albania with Epirus. Since the annexation the Italians have built further military roads as far as the Greek frontier. Finally, two roads lead from Korcha in south-eastern Albania, one to Grecian Macedonia, the other to Salonica.

Mussolini is trying to make propagandist capital out of the presence in Epirus of an Albanian minority, which until 1913 belonged, with Albania itself, to Turkey. For a long time the Duce has been sending members of his Fifth Column into Greek frontier districts, where they act as trouble-makers and agents-provocateurs and make propaganda for the return to Albania of "the frontier province of Cimuria".

Press Stirred Up

The Greek authorities not being disposed to tolerate these dangerous activities, Italian propaganda deliberately stirs up the Italian press to faked "outbursts of indignation" against the "oppressive measures" of the Greek government. Foaming at the mouth, Italian newspapers rave about the "sufferings" of the Albanian minority, though these sufferings exist only in the minds of journalists. They embellish their false charges with remarks about the alleged "unneutral" attitude of Greece towards the Allies. One of the most notorious of Balkan brigands, who was killed in a private affray in Italian Albania, is described in official quarters in Rome as a "glowing Albanian patriot" who is the "political victim of British agents and their Greek friends" — on no other evidence than that the murderers escaped into Greece.

The Greeks, who already hate the Italians, will only be stiffened in their resistance by these dangerous manoeuvres. They have never forgiven the Italians for depriving them of the Dodecanese Islands in the Aegean, which they value not only for their strategical importance, but for their wealth of fruit, tobacco, wine and olive oil. The feeling is all the stronger because the Italians treat their Greek subjects on the islands with extreme harshness. For example, the inhabitants of Rhodes, Kos, Patmos, Karpathos and the ten other islands are not allowed to dress in blue, because blue is one of the two colours in the Greek national flag.

Relieving Asthmatic Attacks

Now that the cause of many cases of asthma has been found—sensitiveness or allergy to some food or other substances, and also nose and throat defects—there is less written about treatment of the asthmatic attacks. True, there is much being written about the treatment of severe attacks by breathing in pure oxygen, and the use of ether enemas

What about the ordinary attacks that last from minutes to hours and make life miserable for patient and family?

There is nothing so quickly effective in relieving asthmatic attacks as epinephrine, extract of the adrenal gland. Within five to fifteen minutes after an injection of epinephrine under the skin, the attack gradually subsides and the patient is perfectly well again.

Dr. M. B. Cohen, in Ohio State Medical Journal points out that it is now necessary to use the large doses of epinephrine usually prescribed ,that is 10 to 15 minims (drops). This does sometime causes reactions that are more alarming to the patient than the attack itself. He therefore suggests that but 3 to 6 minims of the usual 1 to 1000 solution be injected under the skin. "The attack will subside in most cases in a few minutes; if it does not, the dose should be repeated in 20 minutes.

What can be done to prevent attacks of asthma while the cause is being sought?

Dr. Conen states that in many cases injecting 4 or 5 minims of epinephrine under the skin every three or four hours, day and night, will prevent asthmatic attacks and less of the epinephrine will be needed than if the physician waits for the coming of the attack before giving it.

I have spoken before the use of a stronger solution of epinephrine, 1 in 100, instead of 1 to 1000, used as a spray up into the nose, or inhaling the fumes from a handkerchief on which a few drops of this stronger solution have been poured. While this method is not quite so effective as the hypodermic method with the weaker solution, it may be sufficient to relieve light attacks.

ROBBING THE HUNGRY

By WALTER TSCHUPPIK
(F-21)

According to messages from the United States the Hoover Relief scheme on behalf of countries now groaning and starving under German occupation is to be subject to two conditions. First, the German government must agree to restore the food stocks already transported from these countries to the interior of Germany and, second, it must sanction a system of American or international control in the distribution of all food sent from the United States.

Germany has carried away from all these subjugated territories enormous quantities of food—cereals, cattle, butter, fats, sausage-meat, sugar, tinned foods, coffee and tobacco—in order to supplement the German ration. Hitler is undoubtedly ready to reduce the subject peoples to absolute starvation, if he can thereby save the Germans from the worst results of his policy of 'guns before butter'. If, however, circumstances compel him to accept the American conditions, he will resort to all kinds of deception and will attempt to hoodwink the American Relief Committee, as the government of imperial Germany did in Belgium in the winter of 1915.

Little has been published about the methods used by the German authorities of that day in order to lay hands on American supplies expressly intended for starving Belgium. At the present time, when there is a danger of American humanitarianism once again being victimised by German duplicity, the following exposure of the methods adopted by the Germans twenty-five years ago, may be of interest. These revelations are based upon the statements of a well-known grain exporter at that time operating in Belgium and Holland and a witness of the methods by which the Germans filched from the hungry Belgians the food sent from America.

Although Mr. Hoover—President of the Relief Committee then as now—and his advisers were satisfied that theft and fraud were out of the question, most of the American wheat found its way to Germany.

Until August 1914 the grain trade between North and South America and the European continent passed through the Belgian port of Antwerp. When war broke out, the big grain-importing firms of Weil, Hermanos and Co., Bunge and Co., Lehmann and Co., all with offices in South America, transferred their businesses to Holland. As soon as ever Belgium, after being looted by the Germans, was faced with famine and the first American supplies arrived, large-scale speculators seized a golden opportunity of growing rich by smuggling imported grain into blockaded Germany. Their method consisted mainly in substituting forged certificates and bills of lading for this American grain, all of which (many thousands of tons) arrived in sealed bags stamped with indications of their American origin. Although Germany had signed a treaty with the United States, solemnly promising that not a bag of American corn, nor a single coffee-bean should be forwarded to Germany, the German authorities made no effort whatever to punish those responsible for passing through obviously forged bills of lading and other papers, while German officials smiled benevolently upon goods passing into Germany under false declarations.

How It Was Done

The fraud was perpetrated as follows: first, the American goods were assembled in warehouses and silos. Thence they were forwarded to smaller localities, where they were repacked and furnished with bills of lading, all-bearing pre-war dates—July, August, or September 1914. On the strength of these forged papers and certificates, not only of grain, but of rice, cocoa and coffee, found their way to Germany. The expert from whom we have this information said: "In Antwerp and throughout Belgium all the warehouses were plundered to the last grain of corn. Every day huge barges arrived at the Rhine and Ruhr ports of Duisburg, Dusseldorf, Ruhrort and Mannheim laden with American supplies stolen from the Belgians. This was, of course, only possible because the grain trade had passed from the hands of well-known wholesale importers into those of smugglers, mushroom speculators and profiteers who willingly conspired with the German authorities. Suddenly the market was flooded with offers of grain, flour and other foodstuffs, such as coffee, cocoa, etc Many small and hitherto insignificant firms suddenly began to ply a brisk trade. These firms first smuggled the corn to secret places, stored it there, put it in new bags, not marked as of American origin, purchased old waybills or, in the case of larger consignments, bills of lading bearing a pre-war date, declared the new, camouflaged goods to be identical with the original and then proceeded with the papers to subordinate German authorities in Belgium and procured export licences, either issued to them freely or bought by a friendly handshake, during which a banknote would pass from one owner to another. The grain or other produce, together with the export licence, was then sold by Belgian smuggler to the German buyer. Thousands of tons of grain, flour, fodder, coffee and cocoa reached Germany in this way. While the regular trade in foodstuffs in Belgium lay idle all through the war, this form of business flourished until 1917 and quite a number of these traders grew rich on it."

There is a danger that the procedure may be repeated in the winter of 1940, and on a much larger scale. German propaganda announces— according as to whether it is intended for home consumption or for America—either that Germany herself has ample supplies of food for the winter, or that the whole continent is doomed to starve. But, in view of the fact that Germany is unserfed despite the looting of Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Holland and Belgium, Hitler will certainly leave nothing undone to get hold of American supplies. His whole regime and policy are based upon constant deception and breaking of promises. Why should he not make similar promises to the American Relief Committee, engaged as he is in a life and death struggle? He will, of course, accept—if necessary—all America's terms, but he will observe none of them. Humanity's assassin may bring off a triumph of deception, were blind and credulous humanitarianism to lend him its aid.

Germans Learn About War

There is a report from Berlin that slightly wounded soldiers have been seen on the streets of the German capital for the first time within the past few days. It confirms other reports that have trickled through from time to time telling how German officials have been careful to keep from the people any indication of their heavy casualties in this war. All sorts of devices have been employed to keep the badly wounded away from the civilian population.

The German High Command is ashamed of its wounded heroes. Ashamed—or afraid—to let the people of Berlin and other German cities know that their men have been killed and wounded by the thousand. They set off air-raid alarms when convoys of wounded pass through a city or town on their way to a hidden hospital. A dictatorship cannot afford to let the people know the grim facts of war—its prestige rests on glittering uniforms and smart parades, not on the sight of blood-stained wounded men. He knows the people cannot stand such sights.

That's one reason why we think the R.A.F. should take more time off from bombing "military objectives" to giving civilians in German cities a taste of what Londoners have been enduring.—Ottawa Journal.

Australian And Canadian Wool

(Canadian Wool Grower)

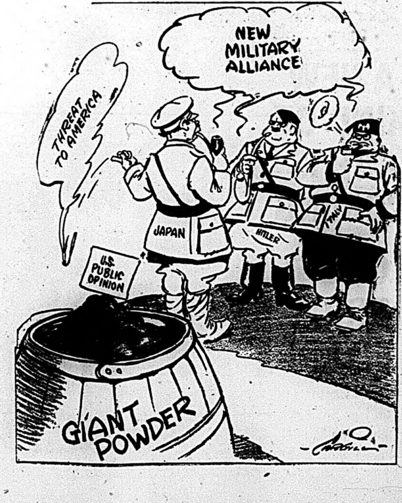
The vast plains of Australia carry 110,000,000 sheep, yielding annually 1,010,000,000 lbs. of wool worth approximately $200,000,000.

Although Australian flocks comprise less than 1-6th of the world's sheep, they produce more than one-quarter of the world's wool requirements and maintain an industry with a capital value of $3,800,000,000. And this remarkable development, from a few sheep, brought out by the first colonists for meat, to an industry of world pre-eminence, has taken place in less than 150 years.

In 1792, when there were 105 sheep in Australia, each sheep produced an average of 3 lbs. of wool compared with the present yield of 9.17 lbs., which gives an annual production of 3,338,000 bales of an average weight of approximately 303 lbs. per bale. Of this quantity, 84 per cent, is merino and represents 57 per cent of the world's production of this class of wool, and 72 per cent of the world's export fine wool. The balance of the clip comprises crossbred wool of high standard, varying from half-blood to carpet wools and representing breeds such as the Border Leicester, English Leicester, Lincoln, Corriedale, Polwarth and Downs type.

Granting that the general feed and climatic conditions in Australia may be more conducive to sheep raising than our Canadian conditions, nevertheless, the comparative development is nothing short of odious. Canadian farms and ranches carry only slightly more than 3,000,000 sheep—the same number as 70 years ago. If sheep are profitable and a good thing for Australia, isn't it about time we came to our senses in Canada where there is ample room for development. Any of the so called obstacles — dogs, predatory animals and fences can be overcome by collective effort.

"THREE LIGHTS FROM A MATCH"



SPANISH ENVOY REACHES ROME

Roman Newspaper Says Spain's Position is That of Being Vigilant and Watchful

Rome, Oct. 2.—(AP)—A Fascist source declared today that immediate Spanish entry into the war will not result from conferences started this morning between Premier Mussolini and Gen. Francisco Franco's Minister of the Interior, Ramon Serrano Suner.

The talks were said to have "a very important aim—already reached—of reinforcing, clarifying and making precise the identity of views between the Nationalist Spain of Gen. Franco and the two victorious Axis powers."

The source claimed that no pressure had been brought to bear on Spain to enter the war now.

Sumner reached Rome at 10 a.m. from Germany where he conferred with Hitler and other Nazi leaders.

Il Popolo Di Roma declared Spain already is "in the political system" of the Axis powers and added:

"Spain's position as it will remain for the present is that of being vigilant and watchful over all that happens in the European world, ready at the opportune moment to use her rights and achieve even with arms her aspirations."

San Jose, Costa Rica, Oct. 1 (AP)—The Costa Rican foreign minister suggested to other Central American governments today that Central America take the lead in a joint inter-American appeal to Spain to remain neutral in the war.

Budapest, Oct. 1 (AP)—Reports that Hungary may be asked to enter a military alliance with the Axis brought the comment in official quarters today: "It is not yet entirely clear what the Axis powers desire in this respect."

"Hungary is so close to the Axis," these quarters said, "that any invitation to join the military pact would undoubtedly be respected."

REAR ADMIRAL HARWOOD HONORED

Knighted for Part Taken as Commander of British Cruiser Squadron When Graf Spee Was Destroyed

London, Oct 2.—(CP)— Prime Minister Churchill lunched with the King today at Buckingham Palace.

At a ceremony in the Palace, the King formally conferred the Insignia of Knighthood on Rear-Admiral Sir Henry Harwood, who commanded the three British cruisers in the battle against the German pocket battleship Admiral Graf Spe off Uruguay last December. Sir Henry's forces, the Exeter, Ajax and Achilles, forced the Graf Spee into Montevideo Harbor where it later was scuttled.

The King also received Air Secretary Sir Archibald Sinclair.

Minarets of Alexandria To Remain Unlighted During Ramadan Feast

Alexandria, Egypt, Oct. 2.—(AP)—For the first time in history, the minarets of Alexandria will remain unlighted during the holy period of Ramadan, starting this week when the new moon is observed.

The Defence Administration, "because of the present circumstances" of Mediterranean warfare, today prohibited the traditional illumination of mosques in Alexandria, Port Said, Suez and Ismailia as well as the firing of cannon to symbolize the end of daily fasting.

Towns and villages of interior Egypt are not affected by the order.

MORE MOTHERS, CHILDREN BEING REMOVED

London, Oct. 2.—(CP)—Systematic removal of mothers and children from the London area is being extended to six additional boroughs, Malcolm MacDonald, Minister of Health, announced today.

More than 10,000 mothers and children already have been taken into the country from eight other boroughs hard hit in the almost incessant Nazi air attacks, he said.

Two thousand more were departing today, leaving nearly 100,000 still in the affected area.

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE—

The liver should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily. If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You get constipated. Harmful poisons go into the body, and you feel sour, sunk and the world looks punk.

A mere bowel movement doesn't always get at the cause. You need something that works on the liver as well. It takes those good, old Carter's Little Liver Pills to get these two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up". Harmless and gentle, they make the bile flow freely. They do the work of calomel but have no calomel or mercury in them. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills by name! Stubbornly refuse anything else. 25c.

The Birth of Printing and Its Growth Described by J. O. Herity

Kiwanis Club Hears Informative Address on the Press and Its Progress Since Invention

TESTS CLUB'S I. Q.

The evolution of the newspaper from the time of the discovery of the printing process by the Chinese centuries ago to the modern presses was informatively described by Mr. J. Owen Herity, dean of the district's after-dinner speakers, to the Belleville Kiwanis Club at their weekly luncheon yesterday.

From a tribute to the cleverness of the Chinese nation which not only discovered the printing process, but paper manufacture and later gunpowder, Mr. Herity took his listeners down the path of printing and newspaper progress from the movable types of Johann Gutenberg, discoverer of the first printing process, to the roaring rotaries of the present day.

An interesting interlude to Mr. Herity's address came when he passed pieces of paper to the clubmen and asked them to write their opinions of the ten most important inventions in the world. He then compared them to his own list which consisted of: the wheel, plough; loom; press; furnace; steam engine; harvester; telegraphy; electric motor and the internal combustion engine. The clubmen agreed with the speaker in some of their answers but fell down in others.

Fourteen years after his discovery, Gutenberg, a German, produced his famous "Gutenberg's Bible" a "beautiful piece of artistic work, in three colors with beautifully engraved borders and the finest characters" the speaker said. Approximately 45 of the original 300 copies are now in existence.

Printing was introduced in England 36 years later by William Caxton, who learned the process in Germany. He printed 100 books in the following 15 years.

Year of Anniversaries

Pointing out 1940 as a "year of anniversaries in the printing business", Mr. Herity told the clubmen that 400 years ago the first printing press arrived in the western hemisphere at the city of Mexico; 300 years ago the first press operated in Massachusetts, and 200 years ago the first newspaper on this continent was printed in Boston. It was called "Public Occurrences" and was suppressed because it was believed too revolutionary.

The first press operated in Canada in 1751 in Halifax when Bartholomew Greene printed the Halifax Gazette, a very small sheet. Then came the Quebec Gazette in 1763 while the first paper in Ontario, the "Upper Canada Gazette" was printed in Niagara Falls in 1793 by a man named Roy.

Belleville's first newspaper, "the Anglo-Canadian" was printed in 1831, the speaker said, but it lasted only a few months. Next came the "Phoenix" composed of paper made of rags. Later in his address, Mr. Herity read humorous excerpts from a copy of the "Phoenix" loaned to him by Mr. Hope McGinnes of this city.

Paper in those days was expensive, costing 20c the pound. In 1890 three inventions, which revolutionized the printing process came into being with the manufacture of paper from wood pulp; mechanical type-setting, such as the present day linotype, and the rotary press.

Have Quality

Since those days, however, newspapers have greatly increased their size. They have never had such quality as they have at the present day inasmuch as they are getting away from the old party style of publishing and are taking more independent views. The discharging of news in the democratic countries where the freedom of the press is apparent, is a very useful function.

Newspapers have been accused of making mistakes, Mr. Herity said, but "to me it is a wonder that more mistakes are not made due to the hurry and haste of gathering information from all parts of the world." Accuracy is an important part in the work of a news reporter, he added, "in my newspaper days I always instructed my reporters to be accurate above all things".

The speaker was introduced by Kiwanian Cliff Bargar while club appreciation was expressed by Kiwanian Eddie Shapiro. Announcement of the annual club bingo was made by Kiwanian John Tripp.

Guests at the luncheon included Dr. Lester Riggs, South Dakota, Edwin C. Hood, Galt; E. Richards, Toronto and Edgar Bateman, Belleville. Three new members were installed in the club. Acting President Dr. "Dick" Flynn was in the chair.

Unpainted Homes Await Thousands In New York City

New York, Oct. 2 — Despite the settlement of the painters' strike, thousands of Manhattan and Bronx families had to move into unredecorated apartments yesterday, real estate operators reported.

The strike was ended last Friday when the painters and contractors agreed to submit their differences to arbitration by Mayor La Guardia, but no work was done Saturday and only a handful of unionists were called in to work. Under the rules of District Council 9 of the Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators and Paperhangers, A. F. of L., Sunday work must be paid for at double the regular hourly rate.

George L. Allin, president of the Real Estate Board of New York, said the necessity for painting apartments after people had moved in would not only be "annoying" to the tenants but an added expense to the landlords. Painters can make more rapid progress in an empty flat, and Mr. Allin estimated that the difference in cost between such painting and painting an occupied apartment would be about 25 per cent.

He said some families would find it impossible to move into newly constructed buildings because the floors had not been waxed and varnished, but that relatively few buildings were in this condition. Other realty men said they knew of no new buildings that could not be occupied on schedule and a union spokesman said virtually all painting in such buildings had been carried on under independent contracts negotiated while the general strike was in progress.

One management official said some tenants had indicated their intention of going to hotels at their own expense until the work of decorating their apartments could be completed. All of the 12,000 members of the district council will be at work today trying to make up the time lost in the last month.

CONSTRUCTED FIRST OF CLASS OF STAR BOATS

Isaac S. Smith of Port Washington Dies in the Adirondacks

DESIGN POPULAR

Port Washington, L.I., Oct 2.—Isaac E. Smith of this place, well-known builder of Star Class boats, died after a heart attack at his Adirondacks Summer home in North Creek. He was 82 years old.

Mr. Smith was a son of the late Stephen B. and Mary E. Smith of Port Washington, and was born when the couple went to Illinois in 1858. When he was a small boy his parents returned to Long Island, and some years later he engaged in the boat building business, which had been followed by his ancestors.

In 1911 he built the first Star boat, from plans by Willian Gardner, famous designer of the Vanity and the Resolute. The boat, christened the Little Dipper, was built for George Corry, now called father of the Star class. It was the fastest boat of its size on local waters and soon a class was started that carried to other clubs along the Western Long Island Sound, and now has fleets in almost every country in the world.

One of the most famous skippers of the class in Adrian Iselin 2d of Westbury, former commodore of the Port Washington Yacht Club, who has raced his Ace all over the world. Mr. Iselin is the vice president of the International Star Class Yacht Racing Association, by which the class is known.

At the last count, nearly 2,000 Star owners had applied for membership in the class.

"Ike" Smith, who was interested only in building a perfect boat, never sailed one in all the years he was building.

DEFENCE MINISTER PRAISES C. N. R.

Hon. J. L. Ralston Thanks Mr. Hungerford for Cooperation in Moving Troops

Ottawa, Oct. 2.—(CP)—Hon. J. L. Ralston, defence Minister, has expressed appreciation for co-operation by the Canadian National railways in the recent transportation to the Atlantic Coast of a large contingent of Canadian troops en route overseas, the Defence Department disclosed Tuesday night.

The troops were moved to the coast from various parts of Canada between August 17 and August 24. Col. Ralston said in his message to S. J. Hungerford, president and general manager of the C.N.R., that a large number of refugees were arriving at the same port during that period, but notwithstanding the heavy traffic, the troops arrived there on time.

In his reply, Mr. Hungerford said Defence Minister's appreciation would please the railroad's officials and employees. He said that during a recent inspection trip over western lines, he found everywhere that C.N.R. employees were deeply willing to do their part in Canada's war effort.

Rosh Hashana Or Jewish New Year

This (Wednesday) evening at sundown will mark the termination of the Jewish year Five Thousand Seven Hundred, reckoning as from the creation of the world and Jews throughout the world will automatically usher in Rosh Hashana, or the New Year, which continues for a period of two days.

The Jewish New Year differs in many essentials from the three pilgrim festivals, chief among which is that its message is less for the nation than for the individual, whom it urges to cease from folly of sin and to turn his gaze instead upon the realities of life. This lack of any special historical or national significance makes it the most universal as well as the most personal of all celebrations. Which heart is not stirred by the contemplation of man's frailty compared with the Divine Omnipotence?

The Jewish New Year has always been a means of inspiration to the Jew. Attending divine service in the Synagogue, listening to the heart rending prayers of the rabbi—each individual knowing in his heart that he stands before the Almighty coming up for judgment. Many prayers rendered before Rosh Hashana were composed during the Crusades, that inferno of Jewish suffering which began in 1096 when the fanatical Peter the Hermit headed a rabble of 200,000 of the most stupid and savage refuse of people, who mingled with devotion the brutal licence of rapine and drunkenness. At their head, says a chronicler, marched a goose and a goat in whom all believed the Holy Spirit had settled. Contemporary historians have estimated that in the cities of the Rhine alone over 12,000 Jews were killed between May and July of the year 1906. Is it to be wondered that the main theme of these penitential prayers is of oppression and martyrdom, exile, of the vanity of earthly life and the glory of the future? That the merit of the fathers should play an important role is only natural.

However, it is fallacious to regard this day merely as a solemn occasion, clouded by introspection, for it retains also of the joyous nature which characterizes the other observances of Judaism. Not only are greetings exchanged happily with our friends for "a good year" but we are expected to usher in the celebration with a joyous spirit. Perhaps this Rosh Hashana may at least bring faith and life in the hearts of those presented in darkened Europe, where brute force has eliminated the Jew and his place of worship. Those persecuted people cannot now in new desperate plight, observe the Rosh Hashana as others living under the flag of democracy, but hope will as always run high, not only with the Jew, but those of other denominations that the New Year will bring an end to persecution and the elimination of brute force and that as a new era of freedom, peace and the brotherhood of man will rule the world.

Claims to Have Extracted Substance From Human Cancer To Produce Cancer in Animals

If Discovery Proves Itself and Process Can be Reversed Medical Science May be Able to Prevent Cancer

By RENNIE TAYLOR
(Associated Press Science Writer)

San Francisco, Oct. 2. (AP) An experiment which may mean that the cause of cancer has been found was reported Monday from Stanford University Medical School.

Dr. John Frederick Menke, research surgeon, announced in Science, the publication of the American Association for the advancement of science, that he had succeeded, apparently for the first time in any laboratory, in extracting a substance from human cancer that would produce cancers in experimental animals.

The experiments were not sufficiently convincing in Dr. Menke's mind to warrant the definite conclusion that a cancer-causing factor had been found. Other experiments are under way which will determine finally whether this is true.

Mystery of Medical Science

The cause of cancer has been one of the foremost mysteries of medical science. For years experimenters have known that many substances, particularly coal tar by-products, some kinds of paraffin and certain compounds containing sex hormones, would produce the malignant growth.

But scientists never have learned exactly what substances within these otherwise harmless compounds was the real agent of cancer.

If Dr. Menke's discovery finally proves itself, and if the process he uses can be reversed, it means that medical science in the future may be able to prevent cancer.

At present cancer is treated only after it appears. There is no point in trying to prevent it in healthy persons, simply because doctors do not know the exact nature of the disease they are trying to prevent.

The Experiment

Two small human breast cancers were ground up and covered with a fat-dissolving liquid, and allowed to stand in a refrigerator. The liquid then was drained off and distilled. The small amount of substance which remained after the dissolving liquid was evaporated off was injected into mice. Several months thereafter, cancer appeared in the mice.

To strengthen the evidence that this new growth was cancer, a bit of it was transplanted into other mice. It continued to grow and to manifest itself as cancer.

Extra Beauty Care for Arms

By HELEN FOLLETT

Short sleeves are a blessing and a joy when we are outdoor girls, flirting with Mister Al Fresco. But watch out that your arms don't get weather beaten. What with freckles, sunburn, tan and goosie flesh they can get in pretty bad shape. (Not that any one is likely to suffer from all of these troubles at once).

It's just as well—since summer is always followed by winter when freckles aren't pretty or seasonable—to keep the skin surface of the arms protected with an oil when one loiters at the bathing beach. A little extra attention won't do a bit of harm. Here is a suggestion for a neat treatment that will keep the flesh soft, the surface of good coloring. It will knock goose pimples into nothingness.

Massage with cocoanut oil. Up and down, round and round. Keep on using more and more as it disappears. Wring large turkish towels out of hot water, wind around the arms, give them a good steaming. Pat on borated talcum after the steaming. Say prayers and hop into bed.

To reduce over-developed arms, clinch the hands tightly, place them forward on a line with the shoulders with a strong muscular effort. Back and forth many times always with the muscles tightened.

x x x

Every woman who is getting together a beautifying equipment should include a full length mirror. She'll never let her figure go to seed. It is the only means by which she can see herself as others see her.

Regarding the ensemble will lead one to maintain good posture, to hold in the tummy, to tuck back the hips, keep the spinal column tall. The grand luxury, of course, is the triple mirror which provides an all-around survey.

The woman who devotes ten minutes each day to calisthenics will retain her youthful lines until she stands among the "ancients and honorables."

Fashion Flashes

SPEND NIGHTS in a comfortable nightie. The model we have in mind has no trimming but it is lovely. Made in satin, it has a high waistline and bodice held by crossed self-bands. Graceful skirt.

THE DOVE OF PEACE is used to trim a lovely housecoat. Of black velvet, its wide sleeves are trimmed with flying doves done in chalk-white beads. Doves over the wide skirt too.

BOUND TO GO OUT often at night is a lovely shirtwaist frock of tissue-thin silver or gold lame. The bodice is made with a careless open collar and patch pockets. The high-waisted skirt is finely pleated all around. Long sleeves, turn-back cuffs.

SEEING SPOTS is the season's favorite fashion disease this year as leopard and ocelet register new successes. Dress up a plain frock with a narrow belt and ornament of spotted fur, or wear a plain cloth coat with a leopard muff or hat or handbag.

SET OFF your simple hats with those new hatpins that are balls of fur. Nice to use when you want to give a wintry touch to an autumn hat. We've seen them in mink, red, blue and silver fox, in leopard and in Persian lamb.

FIRST PRIZE for an ensemble must go to a handsome affair, a full length coat of gold-colored red wool with curved yoke of nutria. With the coat is worn a simple silk dress the exact color of the fur.

Order of Service Host Should Follow at Dinner Is Told

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. When serving dinner, how should the host, who is serving, pass the filled plates? And where should they stop? 2. Where should the hosts sit? 3. Should the dishes be passed for second servings, or should the plates again be returned to the host?

THANK YOU

1. If the host is serving both meat and vegetables, he asks each guest before he carves their preference as to cut of meat, "medium" "rare", "well done". Then he adds the other food items of the course and passes the plate to the guest. He serves first the woman guest of honor (the woman at his right). Then the woman at his left, then the other women at table, according to age. The last woman served is the hostess. Then he serves the men guests, first the man at the right of the hostess, then the man at the left of the hostess, and so on around the table. This form gives appropriate compliment to each guest. If the host carves the meat only and his wife is serving the vegetables at her place, the host passes each plate, after he has placed the meat on it, to the hostess for her to complete the serving.

2. The hostess sits at the head of the table and the host opposite her, at the foot.

3. The second helping is accomplished as is the first one. The guest passes his or her plate to the host, and the host returns it, either to the right or left.

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I am to have a formal wedding very soon and of course that means a wedding rehearsal. I have been told that it is incorrect for me to take part in the rehearsal. Is this information correct?

H.

Yes, this is correct. The bride-to-be is present at the rehearsal but she asks a friend to take her place as a "proxy" in the ritual.

Bridegroom Returns the Toast

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I am to be married in the near future, and I am troubled as to how I should reply when a toast is proposed to the bride. Will you please tell me?

D.B.

When the best man (or someone else) proposes a toast to the bride and bridegroom it is the bridegroom who responds to this toast, thanking the "proposer" in behalf of the bride as well as himself.

Give Shower Prizes to Bride?

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

When games and contests are played at a shower given in honor of a bride-to-be, is it proper that the guests winning prizes give them to the bride?

E.

Some times this is done, but to me it does not seem necessary or fair. I don't see why the person who wins a prize shouldn't keep it! If the hostess thinks that this question may arise at her party, I think she would be wise to provide a guest of honor prize, (or perhaps it should be called a guest of honor gift) and then let the winners of prizes feel comfortable in keeping their "winnings."

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Young Wife's Problem

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 22 years of age. A year ago I married and was so happy, and now I'm living apart from my husband. He is 23 years old. I am expecting a blessed event in a month or two.

In the past three months my husband started running around by himself, and didn't provide the necessary food for me as he always had his meals with friends with whom he happened to be. I told him if he wasn't going to stay home at all and provide the necessities of life I might as well leave. And he said to go ahead. So here I am back with my family.

My friends think I ought to get him to be with me when the baby comes, as the baby will need him. Others say if I go through this ordeal alone I will never want him to come back. I still love him dearly, and if he really wants to come back it would be hard for me to refuse.

My folks have helped me so that I have all the baby's things together, as my husband hasn't given me much money. Please give me your advice.

Unhappy Wife

By all means, try to have your husband with you when the baby is born. Perhaps that may awaken in him some sense of responsibility, so that he will stop behaving like a school-boy, now that he has assumed the obligations of a married man. Also, try to keep as cheerful as possible during these last days, so that you will have a normal and happy baby. Here's hoping for the best.

A Difficult Choice

Dear Miss Fairfax:

How does a man know when he's in love with the right girl? I know two very nice girls and know I could spend the rest of my life happily with either one. But how can I decide which one I love the most? I think both women are in love with me. You might say that neither is the right girl, and I should wait until the right one comes along. I know I could never meet more lovely, charming girls than these.

I'm in my last year at the university, and want to be married right away after I graduate. A fairly good job is assured me. Please help me.

Senior.

Inasmuch as there are two girls now, either of whom is equally charming to you, don't you think that you're liable to meet one or two more who would seem desirable, after you finish college? A young man, it seems to me, about to acquire a college diploma, would do well to wait a while before he aspires to that more important document — a marriage license.

Three-Year Age Difference

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 18 years old and have been going around with a boy who is 15, for a couple of months. We enjoy the same things and get along swell. He seems so grown up and appears to be at least 18, and we've grown very fond of each other.

I'd like to know if you think I should continue going with a boy three years younger than myself, even though he doesn't think it makes any difference, and keeps asking me for dates. He's just the kind of a boy I like, because he doesn't drink or smoke, and says he never will.

Undecided

A boy of 15 seems pretty young to me to be having dates with a girl three years older. There are some girls who can have a wholesome type of friendship with a younger boy, but for mercy's sake, spare the youngster, and don't let him lose his head and make love to you.

PINE GROVE BRANCH W. I.

The monthly meeting of the Pine Grove W. I. was held Thursday, Sept. 26, 1940, with 14 members and 1 visitor present. Mrs. M. Dafoe was hostess and the president, Mrs. F. Heasman the presiding officer. After the usual opening, the secretary brought up the matter of waste material, and it was decided to bring all waste material to the next meeting. Mrs. W. Lough is to go as delegate to the Area Convention in Belleville for the 1st. day and Mrs. W. Rodgers, delegate for second day.

An invitation was received from Stirling Institute. Plans were made regarding the items of program to be provided. A quilting is to be held in October. A $2.00 donation was promised for a refrigerator for the "Hostess House" at the Trenton airport.

Mrs. F. Finkle, convener for the program, was unable to be present, but she had prepared the entire program which Mrs. Meale conducted. The numbers included a reading "New Friends and Old," written by Mrs. Finkle, read by Mrs. Meale. A reading "Grudges to Grind", Mrs. F. Campbell; readings "A Memory Test", Mrs. Frederick; "You Find Your Own", Mrs. H. Dafoe; "Broken Friendship", Mrs. Rodgers; "Be A Friend", Mrs. Heasman; "The Obligation of Friendship", Mrs. Vanderwater.

It was requested by the ladies the secretary convey to Mrs. Finkle their many thanks for preparing such an interesting program.

The meeting closed with the National Anthem. Lunch was served and a social time spent. Proceeds of lunch were $1.50.

TRY A LIQUID SEASONING
For Your Next MEAT LOAF
WHEN making your next meat loaf we suggest that you try this new recipe given to us by a mother noted for her cooking. She uses minced beef, bread crumbs, a little grated onion, some salt and pepper and a teaspoonful of H. P. Sauce. "In my opinion," says this lady, "it is the H. P. Sauce which gives this meat loaf such unusually delicious flavour." That's why H. P. Sauce may be called a liquid seasoning for meat loaves, meat pies, soups, stews, gravies, macaroni and many other dishes.

This thick, fruity sauce has great flavouring strength. Only a little is required in cooking or when served with meat, fish, fowl, salads, sandwiches and so on. H. P. is the Empire's Appetizer from Old England.

3 out of 4 Jam and Jelly Champions use CERTO

Mrs. George Collett of Fort Frances, Ont.—Prizewinner at Rainy River Valley Fair—writes: "I feel my success at exhibiting has been due to the use of Certo. There are many definite advantages. First—it is a time-saver. Second—it is a saver of fuel. Third—Best of all it saves the anxiety and time of testing as to whether your jam or jelly will set. You are assured of success before you start."

Under the label of every bottle of Certo there is a book of 72 tested recipes for jams and jellies. Different fruits need different handling, so Certo gives you a separate recipe for each fruit . . . Be sure to follow each recipe exactly. E20

So Quick and Easy!—It only takes a very short time to make a batch of Certo jam or jelly. For jams you need give only a one-minute to two-minute full, rolling boil—for jellies only a half-minute to a minute. Mrs. Wm. Clark, Prizewinner at Estevan Fair, knows how quick and easy the Certo way is. "It saves time and work over a hot stove," she writes.

So Economical!—Since very little juice has time to boil away, you get about half again as much jam or jelly from an equal amount of fruit. "I get a greater quantity than I would have, had I used the long-boil method," writes Mrs. E. B. Dalziel, Prizewinner at Brampton Fall Fair.

So Fresh and Bright!—In this short boil you retain all the fresh, natural taste and colour. The old-fashioned long boil affects the taste and darkens the colour. As Mrs. Lunn, Prizewinner at Oxford (N.S.) Exhibition, writes: "The shorter boiling keeps the fresh fruit flavour and colour."

So Sure!—With Certo you get tested, easy-to-follow recipes. Follow them exactly and you can be sure of results. Miss Mary Ruediger, Prizewinner at Didsbury (Alta.) Fair, agrees: "The finished product is perfect. You cannot go wrong with Certo."

CERTO is concentrated FRUIT PECTIN . . . the natural jellifying substance extracted from fruit in which it is most abundant.

In the face of severe opposition and criticism he convinced the air council to put eight synchronized machine-guns on the British fighter planes and thus gained for them a marked superiority over the Nazis.

Ambassador Grew May be Recalled

Increasingly bad relations with the Japanese confronted the United States after Japan had moved into French Indo-China (1), probably with the blessing of the Axis Powers which would welcome anything to divert the attention of Great Britain from the war and to slow U.S. aid to the English. While German Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop and Italian Foreign Minister Count Galeazzo Ciano conferred in Berlin, it was announced that a German-Italian-Japanese military alliance has taken place. Following this alliance the United States may acquire usage of the powerful British base at Singapore. Following Japan's move into Indo-China with the possibility that her next step may be toward the oil and rubber of Dutch East Indies (2), President Roosevelt slapped an embargo upon all exports of scrap iron except to Great Britain and nations of the western hemisphere. It also was reported U. S. Ambassador Joseph Grew may be "recalled" from Tokyo.

Despite Fact Reds Enter Series Badly Crippled Experts Call Cincinnati to Win From Tigers

Lombardi and Frey Not Likely to See Action for First Two Games

PITCHERS SELECTED

Buck Newsom and Paul Derringer Will be Hurlers in First Contest

By GAYLE TALBOT

(Associated Press Sports Writer)

Cincinnati, Oct. 2 (AP)—What may prove one of the toughest, last-ditch battles in World Series history starts today on Crosley Field here, with the Cincinnati Reds meeting the Detroit Tigers before a sell-out crowd of 33,000. If seats were available, the audience would be twice as great.

Rearing back and whistling his pitches across for the "ancients" of the American League was Buck Newsom. It was the first World Series game for the talkative ace of the Tigers, and he had a big load on his back.

Opposed to him, in all probability was Paul Derringer, the big "Oom Paul" of the National League champions. A crafty veteran, with a little of everything, including the finest control in the game, Derringer promised to be a full match for the Detroit star.

The cry "Play ball," was scheduled for 2.30 p.m. E.D.T. The Reds were favored by a majority of baseball observers, probably on the basis of the law of averages which says that a league which has lost the series since 1934 is bound to crash through some time.

The Reds went into the series badly crippled, and the professionals were laying modest odds against their chances. Yet they still drew a majority vote among the men who write baseball and who follow it all season. The writers reasons were obscure, but they stick to the Reds. President Ford Frick of the National League said: "This is the first time I haven't even been nervous."

Detroit Lineup Intact

It was a strange situation, all right. The Detroit lineup was intact, with Hank Greenberg and Rudy York glowing with health and ready to sock their home runs. Greenberg, to be doubly cautious, even spent a voluntary half-hour late yesterday shagging flies in Crosley Field. There wasn't an ache or pain in the Detroit camp.

realized the worst. Ernie Lombardi their big, long-hitting catcher, still was limping painfully on his sprained ankle and it looked as if he might not get in the series at all. With Lombardi out, the Reds had one real hitter left—First Baseman Frank McCormick.

Frey Won't Play

The Reds also were shy the services of their steady second baseman, Lonnie Frey, whose big toe was smashed by a lethal weapon (a water cooler lid) only a few days ago. Frey was hurting at every step yesterday, even after the toe of his shoe had been cut away, so it looked doubtful that Manager Bill McKechnie would take a chance on him.

All of which meant that the Reds entered the series seriously weakened. Their replacement for Lombardi was Jimmy Wilson, a veteran backstop who hasn't played regularly for over two years. Jimmy however, is as full of pep and varnish as a sophomore halfback.

To take Frey's place at second they had Eddie Joost. He can field fully as well as Frey, but his hitting leaves much to be desired. The National Leaguers were not worried particularly about Joost's ability to fill in for Frey, but they said this left the Reds very shorthanded in the matter of pinch-hitting. They said this made it practically impossible for McKechnie to put in a batter for shortstop Billy Myers who hasn't hit the size of his hat this year.

Sports Roundup

(By Eddie Brietz)

Cincinnati, Oct. 2.—(AP)—It looks as though it's going to be a long, hard series, ladies an gentlemen, with the Reds winning in six or seven games.

Those who pick the Tigers do so because of their power and the long Cincinnati casualty list. . . . The Tigers have the power, all right, but we have an idea those injuries are of the "football injury" variety. . . . You know, a star halfback runs a fever Friday night, then goes out there Saturday and runs his head off. . . . Anyway, we're not figuring on having to get up and fix our own breakfast until the middle of next week.

GUNNING FOR THE SERIES, TOO

Confident of winning top honors in the World Series, Tommy Bridges, Rudy York and "Schoolboy" Rowe are shown "chewing the fat" about what they are going to do after the series. Tommy is showing his teammates the new rifle he intends to use hunting this fall.

JOHNNY FERRARO SERVES NOTICE OF RETIREMENT

Montreal Big Four Team Will be the Loser by Retirement of Backfielder

BILL STUKUS OUT

Quarter for Argos Ends Four-Day 'Strike' and Reports for Training

By The Canadian Press

In stock market jargon, Montreal fell off several points on the Interprovincial Football Union exchange today while Argos preferred bounced higher under heavy buying.

The run of the Montreal entry in the Big Four was started last night at almost the some time as Argo stock became a favored trader. It was the presence of one man and the absence of another that made the difference.

Bill Stukus ended a four-day "strike" and came back to the Argo lineup on, as had been expected, Lew Hayman's terms. Bill, probably the best quarter-back in Eastern Canadian football for two seasons, went into a blocking-back position. Hayman's preference for Annis Stukus, Bill's brother, and Bobby Coulter as the team's signal callers led to the brief retirement.

Bill Hughes had really had almost too much smooth sailing with his Montreal club. He struck his first bump last night when big Johnny Ferraro suddenly announced that he was through as a player after 16 seasons, the last six in Canada.

To Help Coaching

The big fellow, around whom Hughes had planned his offensive, said he would help coaching if he were needed but as for playing: "I've had 16 years of it. And you've got to call it quits some day." This apparently was the day for big John.

His leadership of Argos stronger than ever with the return of Stukus, Hayman sent the club through a stiff scrimmage drill in preparation for their opening against Montreal Saturday. The workout was Argos' best of the season. Only three regulars missed it.

Ottawa Rough Riders, whose only trouble this season has been the odd injury they seem to run into at every workout, went through a three-hour drill—and popped up with another casualty. Moynahan, the veteran snapback, suffered a broken nose but he'll be ready for Hamilton Tigers Saturday.

Coach Ross Trimble concentrated the workout, after some preliminary calisthenics, on passing and plunging. Orville Burke, Tony Colab and Harry Griffin shared the passing work.

MURRAY HOWELL GOES TO INDIANS

Baltimore's One-Man Powerhouse Led Int. League in Batting With .360 Mark

Baltimore, Oct. 2.—(AP)—Baltimore's Orioles warbled a pretty tune finishing second to Newark in the International League playoffs, but, just now, the birds couldn't manage an off-key chirp. The nest was robbed.

Player deals, options and—terrible climax — yesterday's drafting of Murray Howell by the Cleveland Indians have literally wrecked the Club. About all they left was second baseman G. Corbett and Mrs. Jack Dunn, the owner.

When the Indians grabbed Howell, they took Baltimore's one-man power-house. The husky 205-pounder led the International in batting this season at .360, banged out 36 doubles, 20 homers, and batted in 119 runs.

Last season, his first with the Club he finished second in the League with an average of .342. Under the International's agreement with the majors, the "draft" price for Baltimore's ace left-fielder was a mere $7,500—and you could hear Baltimore fans yowling for miles.

First baseman Nick Etten and Pitcher Tommy Hughes were sold to the Phillies; Shortstop Skeeter Newsome was bought by the Red Sox; third-baseman Bill Nagel and Centrefielder Eddie Collins returned to the Athletics, and Rightfielder Stan Benjamin, Pitchers Roy Bruner and Dale Jones and Catcher Joe Kratcher returned to the Phillies.

Rumor Foundry

This one is only guaranteed for 30 minutes, but it's red hot here . . That Phil Wrigley wants Larry MacPhail to became generalissimo of the Cubs next season . . . (Just listen to that flatbrush roar!)

Another rumor; Kirby Higbe of the Phils has been sold to the Cubs and Hugh Mulcahy will be the next to go.

Somebody has suggested Walter O. Briggs of Detroit should be designated as the "owner of the year" . . . He lost 90 ball players and still won the pennant.

Louisville Colonels Ready for the Bears

Louisville, Ky., Oct. 2 (AP)—Gunning for an opening Junior World Series victory tonight, Louisville Colonels of the American Association and Newark Bears of the International League today prepared their most potent lineups for the clash.

Both limbered up with light workouts at Parkway Field, home of the Colonels where the first three games will be played.

Firing from the mound for Louisville will be cagy to Pressnell, tied with six other pitchers for the most series victories. He registered three wins in Milwaukee's 1936 triumph over Buffalo.

Opposing Presanell will be Steve Peek, lanky right-hander who won 14 and dropped four during the regular season.

This is Louisville's sixth such series and Newark's fourth. The Colonel have won the classic twice —in 1921 under Joe McCarthy and last year under the present manager, Bill Burwell. Newark won in 1932, defeating Minneapolis, and in 1937 against Columbus.

Oscar "Lefty" Judd Will Get a Fling in Big Time Next Spring

MANY BROUGHT UP

Reds Get Outfielder for Draft Price They Once Offered $25,000 For

Cincinnati, Oct. 2—(CP)—Oscar (Lefty) Judd, hurler with Sacramento in the Pacific Coast Baseball League and product of Guelph, Ont., sandlots, has been drafted by Boston Red Sox of the American League.

The southpaw who once starred as an amateur in Western Ontario, was one of 13 minor leaguers brought up to the majors through the draft last night. The players cost $7,500 each if they came from a double-A club and $6,000 from class A or A-1.

Many experts think that Judd would have made the big time long ago if it had not been for his lack of control since joining professional ranks. He is noted for his ability to strike out batsmen.

Cincinnati Reds of the National League saved $17,500 and may have obtained the prize plum in the annual draft.

They chose Mike Christoff, outfielder for Oakland in the Pacific Coast League, for whom they once offered $25,000 and two players. The bid was turned down when Mike was leading his loop in home runs early in the season. He went into a slump but wound up hitting better than .300, so he still may be an excellent buy at $7,500.

Others Caught in Draft

Other minor leaguers brought up through the draft were:

Second baseman Floyd "Pep" Young, released by the Pittsburgh Pirates to Atlanta of the Southern Association (A-1) Monday; Pitcher Bill Swift, another ex-Pirate, from St. Paul of the American Association (AA); Al Sherer, pitcher, from New Orleans of the Southern; and Thompson Livingston, catcher for Springfield, Mass., in the Eastern League (A), all of Brooklyn Dodgers.

Reuben F. Melton, star pitcher for Columbus in the American Association, by Philadelphia Phillies.

Peter Suder, third baseman for Binghampton in the Eastern, on option from Kansas City of the American Association, by Philadelphia Athletics.

Outfielder Murray Howell of Baltimore in the International, by Cleveland Indians.

Although this business of the world series in baseball started some 37 years ago, there have only been 36 winners simply because there was no series played in 1904. Annually since then, however, baseball's classic, the world series, has been the fitting climax of the respective season's play in the National and American Leagues. When the Cincinnati Reds and Detroit Tigers clashed today in the Ohio city it marked the third time the Cincinnati team has participated in the post season classic, despite the fact the Cincinnati "Red Stockings" were the first professional baseball team in the history of the game. As for Detroit, the Bengals launched upon their sixth world series today and strangely enough both clubs have won but one previous series honors. Cincinnati won the series in 1919 (that was the year of the famous Black Sox), while Detroit lost their first four starts, only to win in 1935 under Mickey Cochrane.

Reviewing past world series meetings we find the American League has triumphed 23 times to the National League's 13. The last time the National League representative won was in 1934 when the St. Louis "Gas-house Gang" ran rampant over the Tigers. Detroit gained revenge over the Cubs by winning four games to two in 1935 and incidentally since that series the National League has won but three games in the past four series. The New York Yankees won the last four series quite handily, beating the Giants four games to two in 1936 and four games to one in 1937. Since that the National League contenders have not won a single game in the fall series. For statistic's sake the Yankees have won eight world series in eleven played, the Giants beating them in 1921 and '22 and the Cardinals (or rather Pepper Martin and Pete Alexander) in 1926. Incidentally prior to 1900 the fall classic was known as the Temple Cup series, but that was before the inception of the American League, as we know it today.

Which brings us up to the present. In 1940 they'll tell you that Cleveland had a better pitching staff than Detroit, but who won the American League? In the same breath keen ball fans say the Cincinnati Reds are the zenith of defensive ball, but what defence is there against home runs? (Perhaps a tangle of London balloon barrage cables, but little else.) The Reds boast of "Oomp Paul" Derringer, Bucky Walters, Jim Turner, Junior Thompson and other good moundsmen, as well as a flawless outfield, but the pressure this fall is going to be on the Reds' pitchers, rather than on the shoulders of Rowe, Newsom or little Tommy Bridges. The Detroit hurlers won't have to face such powerhouses as Rudy Yorke and Hank Greenberg, to say nothing of Gehringer or McCosky. Actually the 1940 world series takes on the same atmosphere as has the past half dozen or so—that is to say it will be American League power versus National League defence. So take your choice and let the chips lay where they fall.

Oshawa is doing quite well by itself in fall play-offs this year, George Campbell's Motor City "mushballers" getting into the provincial O.A.S.A. finals versus Guelph via the committee room and re-play route. However, the Oshawa boys eliminated a Toronto team, which tends to make most every sport in Eastern Ontario happy about the whole thing, but we are more firmly convinced than ever—that the Shell "Oilers" of Belleville, when at full strength, are the best intermediate "A" softball team in Ontario today. For Mr. Campbell's information we might say—"Belleville beat Guelph in the provincial finals in 1935,"—there's a target for the Oshawa team to shoot at. In baseball circles the Oshawa seniors eliminated Toronto and now meet Niagara Falls in the senior O.B.A. finals. Here it looks like Niagara Falls to win, but again the old Central League hopes will be pinned on Peg Hurst's gang to bring a senior title east.

Do you remember when Dr. Lee Richmond, who pitched the first perfect major league baseball game on record died at Providence, R.I., 11 years ago today. On June 12, 1880, Richmond, hurling for Worcester's team in the National League set Cleveland down with no runs and no hits. No opposing batsman reached first base.

The Detroit Tigers boasted of five .300 or better batters in their lineup as they took to Redland Field this afternoon. They were, Greenberg, York, McCosky, the veteran Charlie Gehringer and relief catcher Billy Sullivan. On the other side of the diamond only the two McCormick's are in the covetted batting bracket, now that Lombardi is on the injured list. Even giving the Reds superlative pitching, good defence and smart base running they seem to lack the punch somewhere along the line. So it looks like Cincinnati's defence versus Detroit's power house attack in the series this year.

Flashes & Dashes — Member Oscar "Lefty" Judd of the old Guelph Maple Leafs?....Well old Ossie was sold from the Pacific Coast League to Boston today... This will be Judd's third shot at the big top....Coming events cast their shadows before them.... Yesterday the White Sox beat the Cubs 5-3 in the first game of the Chicago City series......The veteran Ted Lyons pitched and batted the Pale Hose to a win.... Mebee the Windy City series has nothing to do with the world series, but it's an American and National league representation, if that means anything towards the future.....King Clancy was elevated to a regular position on the arbiter staff of the N.H.L., the egotistic Bill Stewart having assumed a higher than mighty attitude and refused a contract, which was tendered him....Breathes there a man with soul so dead who never to himself hath said—"no matter how good I am there's always some person to take my place"....FLASH —Doc Empson just called to inform us today's Toronto Grads versus Combines ball game doesn't start until four o'clock.

AT THE CAPITOL

"All This And Heaven Too"

In line with its policy of presenting the finest of the new crop of film entertainment, at regular prices, the Capitol Theatre will show "All This And Heaven, Too," Warner Bros. picturization of the sensationally successful Rachel Field novel. Bette Davis and Charles Boyer are co-starred in the film which opens next.

As one of the most important pictures on the 1940 schedule, Warner Bros. have produced "All This And Heaven, Too" on a lavish scale, sparing no efforts in making the brilliant, absorbing novel come to vibrant life on the screen. Made under the personal supervision of Jack L. Warner, vice-president in charge of production, Hal B. Wallis, executive producer, the film was directed by Anatole Litvak, whose deft artistry in handling deeply romantic themes is well-known to motion picture audiences. From the brilliant co-starring team of Miss Davis and Boyer down to the smallest character "bit", the film has been cast with minute care.

Out of Rachel Field's gripping pages comes the immortal story of a young French girl, her background shrouded in mystery, who enters the home of one of France's great noblemen, the Duc de Praslin, as governess to his children. How strangely the destinies of these two, the little governess and the great lord, become interwoven forms the fascinating theme of this great story.

Casey Robinson who was responsible for the screen treatments of such recent Bette Davis successes as "The Old Maid" and "Dark Victory" wrote the screen play based on Miss Field's novel. A brilliant musical score by Max Steiner accompanies the dramatic action of "All This and Heaven Too."

To complete this extraordinary attraction there is also shown the Universal News, colored cartoon and the final chapter of "Buck Rogers."

AT THE McCARTHY

"The Boys from Syracuse"

One of the most lavish, tuneful fun festivals ever filmed, also the most delightfully different shows ever devised "The Boys from Syracuse," now playing at the McCarthy Theatre, is the talk of the city —you must see it.

The featured cast includes Allan Jones, Martha Raye, Joe Penner, Rosemary Lane, Irene Hervey, Charles Butterworth, Alan Mowbray, Eric Blore and Samuel S. Hinds. As a stage play, "The Boys from Syracuse" was on Broadway for a year at $5.50.

The hit songs include "This Can't Be Love," sung by Rosemary Lane, "Falling in Love with Love," sung by Allan Jones, "Sing for Your Supper," sung by Martha Raye, "He and She," sung by Martha Raye and Joe Penner, "Who Are You," sung by Allan Jones, (written especially for the picture), also "The Greeks Had No Word For It," sung by Martha Raye.

Latest Fox News events, an all-star comedy and a Donald Duck comedy cartoon, "The Hockey Champ," is also now showing at the McCarthy.

An added attraction this evening only, on the stage at 8 p.m., presents the return engagement of Morgan Thomas and his band in a program of variety band numbers and specialty selections, which promise to be highly entertaining.

"I Was a Captive of Nazi Germany"

The next attraction coming to the McCarthy Theatre, "I Was a Captive of Nazi Germany," is a true story of Isobel Lillian Steele, Toronto-born girl who after her escape from Germany into Switzerland, found friends who, to show to the rest of the world the terrible life that exists behind the Nazi political life, produced the striking motion picture, "I Was a Captive of Nazi Germany," placing the girl who lived to tell her own horrible adventure in the featured screen part.

AT THE BELLE

"Pride and Prejudice"

Jane Austen's romantic novel, "Pride and Prejudice" has been made into one of the year's brightest comedies, starring Greer Garson as the lovely but prejudiced Elizabeth Bennet and Laurence Olivier as the proud and wealthy Darcy. A funnybone tickler of the first water, the film had an appreciative audience chuckling from first reel to last when it opened at the Belle Theatre where it is now playing.

Getting full value from Miss Austen's fun poking at the extreme dignity of the social whirl of England's early nineteenth century, the story deals with five unwedded but willing Bennet daughters and two handsome bachelors who come to town. One of the bachelors and the catch of the season is Darcy. His pride in family prejudices Elizabeth against him from their first meeting and although he falls in love with her he can't stand her provincial family. In the end, of course, his love for Elizabeth overcomes his pride but only after an exciting and quarrelsome love affair.

The unusual romantic aspects of the picture are gaily played for every laugh by an outstanding supporting cast. Principals among the laughmakers are Mary Boland, Edna May Oliver and Edmund Gwenn. Elizabeth's sisters are charmingly played by Maureen O'Sullivan, Ann Rutherford, Marsha Hunt and Heather Angel. Also seen to advantage are Bruce Lester, Frieda Inescort, Edward Ashley and Karen Morley.

With an always amusing and sometimes hilarious story, beautiful costuming and eye-filling period settings, Robert J. Leonard has given the film splendid direction. This is a "must see" picture for the entire family and particularly for those who enjoy comedy at its best.

IF IT'S ABOUT YOUR EYES . . . SEE McFEE

Central figure in a Parisian murder scandal, Bette Davis finds peace with Jeffrey Lynn in "All This, And Heaven Too," the Bette Davis-Charles Boyer co-starring film, starting next at the Capitol.

The War Today

(By J. M. Peterson, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Punch the other day ran a cartoon showing the war "going south for the winter" and today there came a report from London that the German High Command has taken charge of Italy's stalled push into Egypt, aimed at the Suez Canal.

While Britain will not feel confident that danger of invasion across the English channel is over for the winter until Indian Summer has passed, signs continued to pile up that the empire is increasingly concerned in guarding its interests around the Mediterranean and even farther east, to the oil fields of Iraq and the great port to India.

Rumors are reaching London that German troops are moving into Italy with the aim of eluding the British Mediterranean fleet, landing in Africa and making a determined attempt to wrest the Suez Canal from Britain. Axis propaganda directed at the Arabs —who have shown little liking for it — is declared to have been redoubled.

The French forces in Syria still are an enormous question mark, not yet demilitarized and apparently stalling for time with an Italian armistice commission seeking to control the country. Neighboring Turkey watches that situation like a hawk.

British Stand Guard

British troops stand guard in Palestine and Egypt, backed by important numbers of Australians, New Zealanders and Indians. The South Africans have important numbers in Kenya. Unestimated numbers of reinforcements, and much equipment, have moved in. Should the French in Syria throw in their lot with Britain, this would provide friendly territory from Palestine and Trans-Jordan to the boundaries of Turkey, Britain's non-belligerent ally.

Reporters with the British forces on the western desert of Egypt found little activity on the part of the Italians this week. Marshal Graziani—or his German superior if reports are true—faces the difficulty of consolidating his supply lines on an extended front and of keeping in repair the single good highway, which the British Mediterranean fleet smashes periodically.

The tempo of air warfare throughout the middle east is rising with the passing of summer's great heat. Day after day the R. A. F. bombs ports and bases in Libya, in western Egypt, in Eritrea and Ethiopia, while the Italian pilots from Ethiopia range into the Sudan and Kenya colony, and from Libya into Egypt as far as Alexandria, Britain's great eastern Mediterranean base.

New Names Assigned To U. S. Destroyers Transferred to Britain

London, Oct. 2 (CP)—The Admoralty announced today the new names assigned to 44 over-age destroyers transferred to Britain by the United States in return for the right to establish bases on British possessions in the wetern hemisphere.

The destroyers were given names common to the United Kingdom and the United States. The other six, now manned by the Royal Canadian navy, were named after rivers common to Canada and the United States.

First Lord of the Admiralty A. V. Alexander announced the names of eight of the destroyers in the House of Commons Sept. 17.

The vessel designated as the leader of the squadron will be called Churchill.

The others named for towns in the United States and United Kingdom are: Belmont, Beverley, Bradford, Broadwater, Broadway, Burnham, Burwell, Buxton, Caldwell, Cameron, Castleton, Chelsea, Chesterfield, Clare, Cambeltown, Lancaster, Leamington, Leedsan Lewes, Lincoln, Ludlow, Mansfield, Montgomery, Newark, Newmarket, Newport, Ramsey, Reading, Richmond, Ripley, Rockingham, Salisbury, Sherwood, Stanley and Wells.

Two given names common to towns in Newfoundland, the United Kingdom and the United States are St. Albans and St. Marys.

Six named after towns in the West Indies, the United Kingdom and the United States are Bath, Brighton, Charlestown, Georgetown, Hamilton and Roxborough.

The six destroyers transferred to Canada were named Annapolis, Columbia, Niagara, St. Clair, St. Croix and St. Francis, it was announced at Ottawa.

NURSE'S DEATH ACCIDENTAL

Weybridge, England, Oct. 2 (CP Cable)—A verdict of death due to misadventure was returned at a Coroner's inquest today on nurse Marion Elizabeth Bell, 28, of the 15th Canadian General Hospital Unit, who was killed in an automobile accident at Bagshot. Her home is in Toronto.

Laurence Olivier and Greer Garson in "Pride and Prejudice," a picture that spells fun, packed with laughs, good cheer and romance, now on the Belle screen.

"Flying Blind" by VERA BROWN

CHAPTER THIRTY-FOUR

"Come closer," Tex whispered.

Judith bent over him.

"Sonny," he murmured in a semi-coma. "Tell her it's all up with me. Tell her she's got to come."

Judith nodded. "Rest now. We've tried to find her. She's up in her cabin in the mountains. There's no telephone. She doesn't know or she'd be here."

That seemed to satisfy him. And he fell into something which resembled sleep.

Judith went out into the hall where Lee was waiting. "You've got to get Sonia." Lee shook his head, put his arm about Judith. "She won't come. She told me last night."

Judith went with him. It was half an hour before the call went through. Lee did his best, but Sonia would only weep and refuse.

"Let me talk to her."

Judith took the telephone. "He's dying, Sonia."

"You?" What are you doing there?" Sonia asked.

"He wanted me. So I came."

Sonia's voice was bitter. "Then stay with him. I told him once I'd never see him again. I meant it!"

The futile call cost seven dollars. Judith turned to Lee. "I can't tell him. So far as I'm concerned, she's on her way here. That's all we can do for him now."

So Judith and Lee Holt went back to Tex to tell him Sonia had started east in her ship. She leaned down over him, explaining, "The weather's not good. I warned her not to take any chances."

Tex smiled feebly. "She should be here in the morning." . . . That evening, Judith began the long night vigil. Tex was restless when she was out of the room. So she stayed when he was awake, talking to him quietly about Sonia. "She should be in Kansas City by now," he murmured. "Kansas City. Nice airport."

Often he asked about the weather, and Judith made no reports. . . . She read him a wire from Sonia saying she was grounded for the night. Felicitious, of course.

At eleven, Judith tried to reach Michael Dudley at his apartment, later, at midnight and at one a.m. All in vain. She spent the rest of the night in a chair beside Tex. It helped him through sleepless hours, for the sedatives were no longer able to kill the pain. "How long?" she murmured as a gorgeous dawn began to break.

"Sonia?" Tex's eyes were open.

"She should be here this afternoon, dear."

When he dropped off into coma, Judith tried to telephone Michael again before he left for the office. His man-servant answered. Mr. Dudley was not at home. At nine o'clock when his office opened, she tried. Michael was not in. She left her number, requesting that he call her at the Miami Hospital.

Through the afternoon Aimes seemed to be resting. But when night came, he was more and more insistent. He wept openly because Sonia was not there. . . . Judith slept for a little while about eight o'clock in an empty hospital room. By ten she was back at her post. . . . She did not try to reach Michael again. She knew now it was no use.

Judith did not sleep much. Tex's feverish voice was insistent in its demands. Toward morning he seemed quieter, more rational. Lee came in for a moment. Tex looked at him quizzically, with a ghost of his old smile: "I'm going to fool you all—and live!"

"Sure!" agreed Lee, but there was only feigned hope in his voice.

For the second time in two days Judith saw the sun rise over Miami. Tex stirred once more. His voice seemed stronger; "I guess, Judith, I've been flying blind for a long time. Forigve?" He looked at her beseechingly.

"Forgotten." Her old reply. There were tears in his eyes. Then suddenly his voice was stronger.

"Sonia! Sonia!" He was calling her name again. It was for the last time. Forgive?" He looked at her her tears. Tex could not see any more. . . .

Judith went out into the hall to Lee Holt and the waiting newspapermen, and murmured: "It's over."

x x x

So it was over. Lee Holt stood with Judith at the airport waiting for the ship which would carry her back to New York. It had been a terrible three days since Tex died. That first morning, Lee was in a daze. It was Judith who had to make plans. Tex of course had no money. In his wallet, at his hotel, was a five-dollar bill. That and a few clothes constituted his whole worldly possessions.

At noon a wire had come to Judith. It was an order for five hundred dollars from Sonia. There had been only a short message with it: "I want to do this."

There had been the newspaper people to face. That, too, was Judith's job, for Lee locked himself in Tex's room, alone, all that first day. The reporters had been kind. Judith had denied emphatically any of the reconciliation stories. But Tex was front-page news even at the end. The story had to be told.

With numbness in her heart, Judith was prepared for the worst. As she read the newspapers that night she weighed each word, knowing its effect on Michael Dudley. But in the end [illegible] decided it was not as bad as it might have been. And she was grateful.

Lee and Judith walked back and forth in the warm noon sun as they waited, both impatient for Judith to be off.

"I hope you're not sorry you came," Lee said as he stared across the great airport. He had not mentioned Michael Dudley.

"I wanted to do it," she answered.

"I'll always be grateful, Judith—" his voice broke. "I couldn't have faced it alone."

"What are you going to do? Lee asked as the big ship rolled up from the hangar.

"Work. It cures a lot of things." She could not speak to Lee of what she hoped.

Lee saw her on to the ship, bent to kiss her forehead. He stood until the last, watching the big liner take to the blue skies where the spectacular Tex loved to fly.

Aboard ship, Judith shook as though she had a chill. She felt utterly unable to face the meeting with Michael Dudley. It meant her whole life, yet how could she make him believe? But he must. She was free at last.

In her purse Judith had Tex's signet ring. It was blackened from the flames. The doctor had taken it from Tex's hand after the accident. She'd have it cleaned, sent to Sonia. That is what Tex would have wanted.

But her thoughts could not stay long away from Michael. . . . The closer she came to New York, the more certain she was that he would be there to meet her. Then, mercifully, for a little while she slept.

Long before Newark was in sight, Judith's heart beat terrifically. It was after dark when the steward reported Newark straight ahead. Finally the wheels touched ground. The ship lumbered up to the gate.

Judith strained her eyes to see into the waiting crowds. The bright lights blinded her. Happy groups stood about meeting returning travelers. But Judith's heart was heavy as she walked slowly into the waiting room, hoping, hoping. . . .

Michael was not there. He might be late. She'd wait a little. So she stopped at the lunch counter for coffee which she could not drink. But Michael did not come. . . . Later, when she felt she had the strength, she went to the telephone booths, and put in a call for Dudley's apartment. There was a long wait. Finally the operator said: "That number has been disconnected."

Judith stood there with the receiver in her hand for a long time. It was terribly hot in the booth, but she did not notice it. Finally she hung up.

She found a cab, gave her address. During that long drive, Judith was hardly conscious of feeling: So it's over. It couldn't be! She wouldn't let this happen!

At last Judith reached Washington Square. Odd, it looked just as it did six days ago. There must be mail. She went to the caretaker's apartment. There were three letters—a telephone bill, an advertisement, and—THE LETTER!

Judith knew Michael's handwriting immediately. She sat for a long time, looking at the envelope. . . . She was terribly afraid. . . . Finally she mustered enough courage to open it. Just one sheet of paper, dated five days ago.

Michael had written:

"I am leaving for my new job in Paris. That seems best."

Nothing more. No address. Only his initials. She did not cry, but lay down wearily on the couch. She thought of her mother and father. She must write them some kind of explanation. She had no idea how long she lay there, when the ringing of the telephone caught her attention. Her heart leaped . . . maybe. But no. . . . Michael had gone away.

Judith got up to answer the telephone. It was Hugh Lanning speaking: "Just heard you got back. Thought you might need me. I'm coming over," Hugh said abruptly.

"No!"

"I'm coming!" He hung up before she could protest further.

Half an hour later, Hugh rang her bell. She let him in because she was too tired to protest. He came puffing up the stairs, his arms piled high with packages. "I knew you'd not had anything to eat, so I stopped off and got something. I'm hungry as a bear myself."

Hugh insisted on getting the supper. He set the table clumsily, talking as he worked.

When everything was ready, Judith sat down. Her eyes fell on the flashlight on the mantle where Michael had left it the night of the terrific scene with Tex. She gasped.

"I can't eat, Hugh."

"You must. Time somebody was looking after you!" He smiled at her as he said: "I always told you I'd be around when you got tired of the rest of 'em."

His kindness moved her. "Hugh, what am I going to do'?"

"Just be a good soldier."

Hugh persuaded her to eat a little. Then he said: "You always knew this would happen some day."

Judith's eyes widened. "You mean—Tex?"

She laughed hysterically.

"You're wrong, Hugh. It isn't Tex. It's Michael. He's left me."

Hugh sat there in stunned silence. Then he shook his head. Judith stood up, threw her arms out with, "Don't! I know what you thought. What Michael thought. That I still loved Tex. But I didn't. And he's gone. Michael's never coming back to me."

Hugh tried to comfort her but it was a hopeless task. He stared at her bowed head with puzzled eyes, and remarked: "I never believed you were really in love with Michael. I thought it was the old rebound. The newspapers said—"

But her grief cut short that observation. He took another tack with, "I knew how you cared about Tex. I saw you at Cleveland last year. I didn't realize. . . . I thought you wanted security and peace. You'd never have found that with the lovable but erratic Tex."

ONE OF 133 DOWNED NAZI RAIDERS

A German Messerschmitt fighter plane is shown on a truck being towed past the Houses of Parliament in London after it was shot down during last Friday's raids on the British capital. The deadly fire of R.A.F. fighters and anti-aircraft guns forced 132 other Nazi planes to join this one to make a total bag of 133 German planes shot down in the one day.

Little Benny's Note Book

Pop was smoking and thinking in his private chair and I ran in all excited saying, Holey smokes, pop, did you see my collection of match covers?

Why yes, I believe you've shown me what you regard as the most intristing specimens, although to be perfectly frank I must admit the only thing that impressed me was the striking similarity between them, pop said. As far as I am concerned, when I've seen one match cover I've seen them all, he said, and I said, Well jimminy, pop, I dont mean that, I mean do you know where my collection is. The last time I saw it, it was up in my room, so why isn't it there now? I said.

When I'm in a predickament like that I make a point of consulting your mother, pop said. As an amature detective in such matters she has an amazing record of victories, and by gollies here she is now, in person, he said.

Wich she was, and I said, G roozalem, ma, jimminy Chrissmas, good night.

Now for goodness sakes calm down and try to be a little more explicit, ma said, and I said, Well G wizzickers, ma, where's my collection of match covers?

Where did you leave them? ma said, and I said, Up in my room and that's still where they were this morning, because I was counting them up there.

Whereabouts up in your room? ma said, and I said, Well, on my desk, for one place.

And where for another place? ma said, and I said, Partly spread on a chair, and maybe some on my bed.

Are you sure there weren't any on the floor of the closit? ma said, and I said, Well, a few, maybe. Aw G, ma, where are they, what did you do with them? I said, and she said, I did what I threattened to do with them the next time I found them in a dozen disorderly places instead of one orderly place. I threw them away, but you dont need to look quite so much like the end of the world, I only threw them as far as the top shelf of your closit in an old flour sack.

Being a big scare and maybe a good lesson to me.

SPITFIRE FUND GROWS RAPIDLY

Officers and Men of the Canadian 1st Division Give Day's Pay to Fund

Halifax, Oct. 2—(CP)—The first $1,000 in a fund for the purchase of Spitfire planes started here last week will be forwarded today to Lord Beaverbrook, British Minister of Aircraft production.

The fund is sponsored by the Halifax Chronicle and the Royal Bank of Canada here.

The fund has been swelled for the most part by the contributions of officers and crews of merchant ships.

Somewhere in England, Oct. 2—(CP Cable)—Officers and men of the Canadian 1st Division are contributing a day's pay to buy a Spitfire fighter for the Royal Air Force.

When the plan was passed along to the unit, which is under the command of Maj.-Gen. G. R. Pearkes, V.C., it was quickly approved. For privates the contribution approximates six shillings. The pool is expected to total 7,500 pounds ($33,375).

It is understood that the Canadian 2nd Division is considering starting a fund to buy Hurricanes for presentation to the Royal Canadian Air Force fighter squadron commanded by Sqdn.-Ldr. Ernest McNab.

Further Strength Displayed by Butter

Toronto, Oct. 2—Prevailing light offerings gave further strength to butter prices, although demand slackened in afternoon dealings on the Toronto open produce market. Quotations weakened on top quality graded eggs. Exports of cheese continue to mount, with last week's shipments reported by the Dominion Department of Agriculture at 36,660 boxes. Total exports since the first of May amounted to 774,404 boxes, compared with 540,938 boxes in the like period of 1939, an increase of 233,466 boxes, or in the neighborhood of 20,000,000 pounds.

Small available supplies kept the trend firm on the butter market in spite of waning demand. No. 1 Ontario creamery solids sold at 24 1-2 cents per pound, up 1-4 cent from the previous close.

Prints to the retail trade moved higher in accordance with solids. Top grades traded at 26 cents to 26 1-2 cents per pound.

The fair volume of receipts met quiet trading on the egg market. The three top grades in the graded section eased one cent per dozen. Other prices were unchanged.

ITALIAN 'PUSH'

caravans plod eastward with the possessions of the desert dwellers and the mud hut villages fringing scattered oases are being deserted.

Impetus to the exodus was given by the Egyptian government which sent troops to warn the desert people of their danger, but they left their homes reluctantly.

The Italians appear to be consolidating their positions on the strip of wasteland they occupied two weeks ago before any attempt to drive deeper into Egypt.

British officers declare they are ready to repulse any such attempt, when it comes, and say they will fight the battle on lines of their own choosing.

Principal Italian outposts in Egypt are Sidi Barrani, on the Mediterranean coast, and Bir Sofafi, an inland oasis near the Libyan frontier.

Italians Drive Wedge

Separating the Italian outposts and the British line is a barren no-man's-land, scores of miles wide at some points.

British patrols and tanks prowl this stretch of sand and stunted shrubs daily. They seldom meet any Italian patrols because the latter rarely venture from their outposts.

Italian engineers have concentrated recently on rebuilding the road along the Mediterranean coast. (This road has been shelled heavily by the British Mediteranean fleet.)

Innumerable problems confront the Italians. Their chief difficulty is in transporting troops and supplies in a region almost devoid of adequate transportation arteries.

The Britons have an advantage in this respect. They have good roads and a railway from Alexandria to the region of their lines.

MILITARY BASES

The "invasion ports" along the English Channel were heavily bombed.

London radio listeners heard the German stations at Hamburg, Bremen and other cities go off the air before midnight and interpreted this as indicating raid alarms there.

Observers on the Kent cliffs saw the flash of German anti-aircraft fire and the swinging beams of searchlights trying to pick out the British bombers high in the clouds overhead. The French coast was shrouded with light mist.

The attack seemed concentrated on German long range gun emplacements near Cap Gris Nez and in the region of the Boulogne harbor.

Strong Censorship Imposed

Berlin, Oct. 2 (AP)—A British air raid on the Berlin area last night and early today sent Berliners scurrying to shelters for the fourth successive night, but the alarm was comparatively short.

Shots from defence guns were heard in the centre of the city but no planes appeared over the centre.

An announcement claimed British planes attempted to reach Berlin but that most of them were forced to turn back when they reached outer defences.

Only a few machines succeeded flying over the industrial suburbs, the announcement claimed, and caused no "noteworthy" damage.

The raid was one of a series which has kept Berlin's residents in shelters from one to five hours nightly, with occasional nights of respite, for a month.

(The detailed London report on the night's raid had not been issued.)

GREAT ADVANCES

Most Canadian army men consider the 30-day training system of the Non-Permanent Active Militia "unsatisfactory—a makeshift to tide them over until adequate equipment becomes available", Limpus said. When sufficient equipment is available, Canada probably will adopt compulsory one-year-selective service training similar to that set up in the United States, he added.

Dealing at length with the treatment being given to prisoners in Canada's internment camps, Limpus said the prisoners "looked fat and contented, well dressed and well fed". The party visited Kingston, Ont., where some 600 prisoners are held in Fort Henry, and was allowed to question the men freely.

Observer Impressed

A week's tour of Eastern Canada "with extraordinary opportunities for inspection of defence items not on general display" leaves the observer impressed alike with "the great advances Canada's military machine has made.... and the great advances which must yet be made" writes Major Mark S. Watson in the Baltimore Sun.

"What commands the observers' respect is the celerity with which the Dominion has adapted its September, 1939 program, to the radically altered facts of September, 1940," he wrote.

Under the old Imperial defence program England was shipping to Canada items of war supply to equip and train Canadian Forces. Events of May, June and July changed that and "not only did England find it impossible to continue the promised shipments to Canada, she found it necessary to get her own supplies from the United States—the only market to which Canada herself could turn."

Meanwhile, the United States' own defence program had started. "We in the United States have been appalled this summer by our own difficulties in military procurement, despite the immense resources of a country of 130,000,000 people. Canada has 14,000,000 people and is very much less industrialized. What she has done in the face of the handicaps which have just been suggested stirs, in many cases, the warmest admiration."

Intense Unity Noted

Major Watson then reviewed Canada's army, air force and naval progress, remarking that the United States, in a ratio based on Canada's military position at this time, "would have over 1,500,000 men preparing for overseas duty."

Certain types of artillery, chiefly anti-tank and anti-aircraft "which as we all know too well the United States army also needs acutely" are mentioned as among Canada's needs.

"Variance of standards in equipment is inevitably a problem for a Dominion which has been getting part of its supplies from Britain and now must get from the United States almost everything which it cannot produce itself."

Major Watson found that "one cannot see all these camps, filled with men of English, Scottish, Irish, Welsh and French descent, the factories and the unexcited civilians of city and farm without being aware of an intense unity.

"There remained in eastern Canada differences of religion and language and racial stock, and they will long remain. But whereas they produced bitterness and conflict in 1914-1918, they have failed to do so in 1939-40. One is tempted to say that Hitler has seemingly done more than Canadian statesmanship to weld English and French Canada into one united nation."

Stepped-up Sub War by Enemy Reason for Move

Three Daylight Raids Turned Back by British Fighters in Surprise Attacks

London, Oct. 2. —(CP)—Heavy Royal Air Force bombers, roaring past the encircling air defences of Berlin, pounded a machinery-manufacturing suburb northwest of the German capital last night, the Air Ministry announced today, and in at least one instance sent parts of an electric equipment factory sky-high.

In the glare of the explosions far below, the Ministry said, the R.A.F. planes moved back and forth across that section of Berlin, unloading high explosives and incendiary bombs on plants vital to Nazi prosecution of the war.

From Berlin far to the east of Le Havre just across the English Channel, R.A.F. bombers pounded away in the night at town after town, rail concentrations and other vital points.

Up and down the coast the big machines aimed at the ports where the Nazis have been assembling water craft for the attempted invasion—Rotterdam, Flushing, Dunkerque, Boulogne, Calais and Le Havre —and coastal gun emplacements.

The Air Ministry said they attacked electric power stations at Duisberg and Cologne, oil plants at Sterkrade-Holten and Gelsenkirchen in the Ruhr; numerous railway yards and an aircraft factory at Rotterdam.

North of Dusseldorf, at the little town of Sterkrade, a large fuel plant was set on fire, the Air Ministry said, and another building burst into flames. An explosion sent blasts of hot air upward.

Emptied Load Over Rotterdam

A British airman, gliding high over the region, dropped a stick of high explosives on the targets marked out in the brilliant light and, wheeling, made for Rotterdam, where he emptied his load on the Fokker Airplane Works which previously had been hit by R.A.F. raiders.

At Gelsinkirchen, another Ruhr Valley town hammered many times by the R.A.F., the British fliers said they started fires which they could still see when they were 60 miles away on their homeward flight.

Down on the highly important railroad centre of Cologne the R.A.F. planes swooped, leaving in their wake great leaping tongues of flames. Above the drumming of their motors the pilots said they could hear the dull bursts of fresh explosions and over their shoulders see new vivid bursts against the dark sky.

Later pilots observed a large fire on the northeast edge of the town, the Ministry said, while others saw two big fires glowing in the darkness. These Cologne raids also included attacks on a power station and a railway yard.

Still carrying on their aerial destruction, the R.A.F. hammered rail centres at Hamm, Soest, Duisberg and Gremberg.

One of the British pilots reporting to the Air Ministry said "four terrific explosion" were seen after he dropped his load on an electric equipment factory in the German capital.

So big was the explosion, the pilot said, that his plane was lighted up and the factory itself was "clearly identified".

Other bombers who took part in the attack on Berlin said there were various fires and explosions.

The Air Ministry's bulletin, amplifying an earlier communique, said the R.A.F. planes flew over a northwest suburb of Berlin —"that part of the city which is chiefly concerned in the manufacture of heavy machinery".

Only one central London street was hit by bombs in the 25th consecutive overnight attack, the Press Association reported, and the bombings of 15 outlying districts represented a slackening from the pace of previous raids.

Elsewhere, however, the German assault was reported to be more widespread than usual. Heavy attacks were aimed at several towns in Northwestern England, raiders hit at Southwestern Scotland and Wales, and the shipping district of Liverpool was bombed for the third consecutive night.

Countering with raids through the lengthening hours of darkness, the Royal Air Force was reported authoritatively to have bombed Berlin, industrial and communications targets in Germany, and Nazi bases along the continental coast, including German big gun positions.

Expect Announcement

With the war in the air bolstered by a stepped-up underseas war, the Children's Overseas Reception Board was said to be considering whether to halt for the winter the program of removing children to safety abroad.

A government announcement is expected in the next few days on the decision, said to have been precipitated by the loss of the Canada-bound refugee ship City of Benares, torpedoed by the Germans Sept. 17.

Some sources said the rough passage because of winter storms and the increased danger from submarines might influence the decision. Others said the storms might cut down the chances of U-boat attack.

A statement said German high explosive bombs damaged buildings of Merseyside, the shipping district of Liverpool, but that incendiary bombs which fell there were extinguished quickly and "damage was not excessive."

Some Casualties

A number of casualties were reported, including some persons killed. The bombs fell in the centre of one Merseyside community just as people were leaving five nearby moving picture theatres.

"In other towns in northwestern England houses and industrial buildings were damaged," the statement said. "At one of these towns fires were started in several districts but were promptly brought under control and all were extinguished."

Casualties in these towns were reported as few, but some persons were killed.

The north, south and east suburbs bore the brunt of the night's attacks in the London area.

Once, just before midnight, an all clear signal sounded. It was the second time since the air war was intensified that London has had an all-clear signal that early in the morning.

It did not last long — not long enough for Londoners to hurry home from their shelters—before a new alarm signalled the approach of more German planes from the east.

A Roaring Barrage

The planes were met by a roaring barrage of anti-aircraft fire and they swerved over the southwestern outskirts instead of trying to slip through over the mid-city section.

It was indicated that casualties in and closely around London were few.

However, more than 20 persons, including patients and nurses, were injured—some of them fatally—when a bomb burst beside a large east London hospital.

After the first of the daylight raiders drew the fire of London anti-aircraft batteries, residents of a southeastern section of the city first heard machine-gun fire overhead, indicating that defence planes were engaging the Nazis.

Observers soon after were able to see a big battle in progress. British Spitfires were said to have pursued the raiders downriver toward the Thames estuary.

Raiders apparently were striking at other targets on the embattled island at the same time. One Nazi plane swooped over a district in Wales and dropped a number of bombs.

GALE-WRACKED SHIP ARRIVES FROM AFRICA

Freighter Otho Was in Peril When Tropical Storm Swept Huge Logs Off Decks

WAVES SWEEP OVER

Assistant Curator of Museum of Natural History Returns From Long Hunting Trip

New York, Oct. 2—Huge African mahogany logs, weighing an average of six tons each, were swept from the decks of the Barber Line freighter Otho when the ship encountered a severe tropical storm on Sept. 21 while coming here from Africa, passengers related after arriving at Pier 37, Brooklyn.

The logs were part of a shipment totaling 3,700 tons, valued at more than $350,000. They were lashed with chains and cables to both forward and after decks.

The Otho was about 1,000 miles east of Bermuda when the storm struck early in the morning as most of the passengers were sleeping. After the ship had made its way through heavy seas for three hours, pounding waves began to force loose a section of the logs on the after deck. Slipping away from the supporting cables, they were soon carried over the rails. Logs on the forward deck were smashed against port and starboard rails and against the forward cabin, but none were carried away.

Greet Children

Mrs. Noel Pollard, wife of the British Crown Counsel at Lagos, Nigeria, who came here to meet her three children who are to be evacuated from England, said she and the other passengers were "lucky to be alive."

"I was so frightened during the storm that I couldn't move from my cabin," she declared. "I have traveled quite a bit and I knew it was a bad storm, although most of the other passengers didn't realize it. The waves came right up to the bridge."

Captain Dwight Smith, master of the freighter, and the other officers would not comment on the storm.

John Kerr of Akron, Ohio, one of a group of employes of the Firestone Tire and Rubber Company plantation near Monrovia, Liberia, who returned here on the Otho, said the storm lasted from 1 to 8 A. M.

"Most of the passengers left the forward cabin at the height of the storm," he said. "The salon was awash for a while. At one time we saw another ship close by and we could see that she was having difficulty just as we were."

Others on Leave

Nine other Firestone employees and members of their families made the trip. Most were returning here for brief leaves after which they expect to return to Africa. One of them, J. Louis Chancellor, a district supervisor at the plantation, brought back two water deer, two West African bush pigs, a small leopard and three snakes, one of them a green cobra.

He had originally planned to turn these over to the Firestone exhibit at the New York World's Fair, he said, but he believed the closing date of the Fair was too near at hand for this to be done. Some may be given to the Bronx Zoo, he declared.

Another passenger was Dr. George H. H. Tate, an assistant curator at the American Museum of Natural History, who spent eighteen months hunting chimpanzees and mandrills in Liberia, the French Cameroons and the Ivory Coast. Five chimpanzees and fifteen mandrills that were shot by Dr. Tate have already been sent here by him for the African exhibit in the Akeley Hall of the museum.

Dr. Tate said that pro-British feeling was widespread in the French Cameroons, while on the Ivory Coast there was a fairly even division of pro-French and pro-British sentiment. Food is rationed, he added, in some of the French colonies in Africa, and he described widespread confiscation of property by French officials in the Cameroons at the beginning of the war. He added that most of it had later been returned.

Goodyear Sales Show Good Increase

Dividends Earned For First Nine Months of 1940

With letter to shareholders enclosing quartely dividend cheques, President A. G. Partridge stated:

"The sales of your Company for the first nine months of the current year have been substantially larger than those during the same period in 1939 in spite of the fact that export sales have been considerably reduced, due to transportation difficulties and exchange restrictions caused by the war. However, the loss in export business has been counter-balanced to a large degree by increased domestic sales and orders for war requirements received from both the British and Canadian Governments.

"An important proportion of the tires required for army service cars and trucks, gun-towing vehicles, ambulances, field artillery and airplanes, is being supplied by your Company, in addition to substantial quantities of mechanical rubber goods ordered by the War Department.

"The margin of profit on such orders is, as it should be, very small and this fact together with heavier taxation as well as higher production costs due for the most part to increased market prices of raw materials, will not permit us to show the usual percentage of profit for the year to date, which your Company's increased business would ordinarily indicate."

The situation in the Far East was reported rapidly growing worse as Japanese riff-raff infiltrated into the International Settlement of Shanghai in an attempt to cause trouble with American and English residents. Detroit Put on a Batting Spree but Whitey Moore Stops Rally

PERFECT WEATHER

Cincinnati Fields Patched Up Lineup With Reserves Catching and Playing Second

Cincinnati, Ohio, Oct. 2 (AP)—Almost perfect baseball weather, with a bright sun, lazy west wind and temperature of 72, was on tap today as Cincinnati Reds and Detroit Tigers awaited the start of the opening game of the 1940 World Series.

Several hours before game time the right field bleachers were filled, indicating a capacity crowd of about 33,000.

"Deacon Bill" McKechnie, redleg skiper, remained reticent about naming his starting hurler for the inaugural, but everyone expected Paul Derringer to get the call. Louis (Buck) Newsom definitely was the Detroit choice.

Cincinnati's National League champs were the first to appear on the field, a wild yell from the bleachers greeting the home club as it streamed from the dugout to start batting practice shortly before noon.

Ernie Lombardi, the Reds' injured catcher, hobbled into the outfield to "shag" flies, but he was not expected to get into the game. Fans began filtering into the reserve seats while the Reds worked out.

(By Judson Bailey Associated Press Sports Writer.)

Crosley Field, Cincinnati, Oct. 2 (AP)—Two big righthanders, Buck Newsom and Paul Derringer squared off on the pitching mound today as Detroit Tigers and Cincinnati Reds opened the 1940 world series.

Bill McKechnie, his Cincinnati club crippled by recent injuries, waited until less than half an hour before game time to announce his batting order and finally disclosed that Coach Jimmy Wilson would catch Derringer and that Eddie Joost would be at second base.

The line-up:

Tigers: Bartell ss; McCosky cf; Gehringer 2b; Greenberg lf; York 1b; Campbell rf; Higgins 3b; Tebbetts c; Newsom p.

Reds: Werber 3b; M. McCormick cf; Goodman rf; F. McCormick 1b; Ripple lf; Wilson c; Joost 2b; Myers ss; Derringer p.

Umpires: Plate, Bill Klem, National League; First base, Emmett Ormsby, American League; Second base, Lee Ballanfant, National League; Third base, Steve Basil, American League.

Following is the play-by-play description of the game:

First Innings

Tigers—Bartell worked the count to two and two and then went down swinging. McCosky lifted a high fly to ripple in short left. Gehringer looked at three of Derringer's curves, lifted a foul into the left field stands and then grounded out, Derringer to F. McCormick.

No runs, no hits, no errors, none left.

Reds—Werber slapped the first pitch directly at Higgins and was thrown out. After taking a count of two strikes, M. McCormick sent a liner just over York's head that was good for two bases when the ball rolled up against the railing along the right field foul line. Goodman hit a change of pace ball to Higgins and was thrown out, McCormick holding second. F. McCormick took one strike and then drove the ball on a direct line to centre field and McCosky made a spectacular catch by jumping into the air with his back almost against the wall.

Second Inning

Tigers—Greenberg smashed the first pitch into the left field corner but was held to one base by Ripple's magnificent throw to Myers. York singled into short right centre and Greenberg started for third but was forced to slide back to second base by Goodman's return throw. Campbell laid a sacrifice bunt down the third base line but was safe at first when Werber's throw pulled McCormick off the bag and the bases were filled. Higgins singled into centre scoring Greenberg and York and sending Campbell to second. Sullivan walked again filling the bases. Whitey Moore went into action in the Reds' bull pen. Newsom sent a bounder to F. McCormick who threw to Wilson forcing Campbell and leaving the bases filed. Bartell lined a single past Derringer's head and into centre field scoring Higgins and Sullivan and putting Newsom on second. McCosky singled to deep left scoring Newsom and putting Bartell on second. Moore relieved Derringer as the crowd gave a complimentary cheer. Moore trapped Bartell off second but Myers dropped the ball for an error as Bartell slid back into the bag and was safe. Gehringer popped to Werber. Greenberg worked the count to two and two and then grounded out, Werber to F. McCormick.

Reds—Ripple waited out a three and two count and then grounded to Gehringer. Wilson lifted a high fly to Greenberg in short left. Joost lined a single to right. Myers grounded to Gehringer who threw to Bartell forcing Joost at second.

Third Inning

Tigers—York struck out on five pitches, the last one a fast ball through the middle. Campbell shot a single into centre field. Higgins struck out and Campbell was doubled trying to steal second, Wilson to Joost. No runs, one hit, no errors, none left.

Reds—Moore was loudly applauded as he came to the plate, but grounded out, York to Newsom who covered first. Werber flied to Campbell in right centre. M. McCormick fouled off the first two pitches, and struck out but had to be thrown out, Sullivan to York. No runs, no hits, no errors, none left.

Fourth Inning

Tigers—Sullivan raised a high fly to Joost on the outfield grass behind second. Newsom raised three fouls and struck out. Bartell walked on five pitches. McCosky drove a single that struck second base and rolled into centre field, advancing Bartell to third. Gehringer grounded to Joost.

No runs, one hit, no errors, two left.

Fifth Inning

Tigers—Greenberg struck out as the crowd roared. York tripled against the rightfield fence about 370 feet from home plate, Goodma nmaking a futile jump for the ball. Campbell then lined a home run into the bleachers in right centre field scoring York ahead of him. With the count two and two, Higgins lifted a high fly to Ripple who made the catch with his back almost against te centre field scoreboard. Sullivan struck out.

Capt. and Mrs. Treacy Are Among Five Br. Subjects Held in Rumania

Canadian Authorities Receive Word They Were Arrested for Sabotage

SIGN "CONFESSION"

Ottawa, Oct. 2.—(CP)—Officials of the External Affairs Department said today they had received information from London that two Canadians, a Capt. Treacy and his wife, are among five British subjects held by authorities in Rumania after being arrested last week by Iron Guardists.

The External Affairs Department made inquiries after receiving representations from W. L. Treacy of Mimico, Ont., asking that an investigation be made to learn whether his brother, Capt. John Edward Treacy, a native of Chatham, Ont., was among those held.

A statement from the External Affairs Department said the five persons were arrested and handed over to police "after signing a confession regarding schemes of sabotage".

Only One-Third of Objective Reached In the Red Cross Campaign in City

People in All Walks of Life Urged to Contribute to Humanitarian Cause

PROMPTNESS NEEDED

Three thousand dollars or thirty-seven and one-half per cent. of the $8,000 quota alloted to Belleville by the Canadian Red Cross Society in its Dominion-wide drive for five million dollars has been collected thus far, Red Cross officials announced today.

The amount collected is well below that anticipated by campaign officials and means that efforts will have to be redoubled if this city is to go "over the top" by the time of campaign closing.

Again the appeal goes out to collectors to cover their "beats" in the various parts of the city and to turn in amounts already collected. The public is also urged to "dig and dig deep" in an effort to bring the necessary aid to the "greatest Mother of them all."

As has been mentioned before, the need is urgent. Any amount no matter how large or small will add to the fund, and people in all walks of life are urged to contribute to one of the greatest humanitarian causes the world has ever known.

Time is Short

Time is short. The end of the campaign will be here before it is realized. A large amount of money is yet to be realized if Belleville is to contribute its alloted quota to the general fund.

Fifty thousand dollars was raised by means of a special broadcast last Sunday night to which British-born motion picture and stage stars, not to mention the famous Dionne Quintuplets, gave their services gratis. From the far-flung corners of the world came contributions to the Red Cross. Amounts ranging from one dollar to thousands poured in to the treasury in Hollywood.

The artists have set a splendid example. Britishers living in the United States, and Americans, too, have given freely of their funds. It must not be said that Belleville or Canada fell down in this, the greatest of all efforts to bring alleviation to the wounded, the homeless, and comforts to those gallant lads who are defending the Empire on land and sea and in the air.

Campaign officials here feel confident that the residents of Belleville will do their share. But prompt action is necessary. The war goes on, and each day brings increasing drafts on the necessities provided by the Red Cross. Do your bit for the Red Cross and the Empire—and do it now!

British Freighter Chased by Sub

New York, Oct. 2—(AP)—Mackay radio reported today that the 4,606-ton British freighter Kayeson had radioed that she was being "chased by a submarine" about 675 miles west of Ireland.

Owned by the Coolham Steamship Company of London, the vessel trades between South American ports and England. Her position was in an area which has been the scene of submarine attacks in the last six weeks.

GENERAL POLICY TO BE FOLLOWED

Technical Mission Gradually Replacing Men Munitions Inspectors With Women

Hamilton, Ont., Oct. 2—(CP)—The general policy of the British Technical Mission in gradually replacing men munitions inspectors with women here will be continued, regardless of complaints from several inspectors, some veterans, had been so replaced because they refused to move to the United States, Mayor William Morrison said today.

The mayor, just returned from Ottawa where he went to make representations on behalf of four men discharged, said $280,000 a year would be saved in Hamilton munitions production alone and $2,800,000 would be saved annually throughout Canada by this policy.

Mayor Morrison said Lt.-Col. W. Ivory of the British Mission, said the plan had always been to replace male inspectors with women—to reduce cost and release men for heavier work, since it was obvious labor would soon be scarce.

When the men were signed up, they were not hired unless they agreed to work in any part of Canada or the United States. Allowance was made for moving expenses.

TERRIFIC BATTLE FOUGHT IN AIR

Each Wave of Nazi Raiders Turned Back by British Fighters

London, Oct. 2. (CCP)—Squadron of Nazi warplanes flew to the attack on London today but Royal Air Force fighters gave them battle and turned back each succeeding wave.

The Air Ministry announced early tonight that all attacks have been intercepted and broken up by our fighters."

A few of the German planes managed to penetrate London's defences and drop bombs which inflicted some fatalities.

Five air raid warnings from dawn to dusk kept London in an almost continuous state of alarm. At times the roar of invading planes could be heard, but always to the accompaniment of heavy anti-aircraft fire. Central London escaped, thanks either to the fierce ground defence or to the fact that it was not an objective today.

There were three alarms in the morning, one shortly after noon and still another later in the day, followed by an evening announcement by the Air Ministry that "reports so far received show that nine of the enemy have been shot down" and "one of our fighters is missing".

Southeast London, where there were a number of casualties, and towns on the Kent coast were hardest hit in today's raids.

During one of the London raids there was a heavy battle over the east end. R.A.F. fighters drove the invaders back down the Thames Estuary.

Among those killed in southeast London was a baby being wheeled in a perambulator, and the baby's father and mother.

Produce Airplane Motors in Canada In Eighteen Months

Ottawa, Oct. 2 (CP)—Production of airplane motors in a Canadian factory operated by Canadian workmen may be achieved in 18 months, Munitions Minister Howe said today.

This problem has been receiving constant attention ever since the war started, Mr. Howe said in an interview. The solution has not yet been definitely reached but progress is being made.

Studies are being made of a plan to obtain designs and rights from an English engine manufacturer and the idea would be to select a Canadian Company qualified to do the work

Flagpole is Back On University Campus

Fredericton, Oct. 2.—(CP)— A flagpole, erected at the University of New Brunswick last year for the Royal visit and later placed on the grounds of Government House, has turned up mysteriously at its old stand on the university campus.

"They've got to bring it back", said Lieutenant-Governor W. G. Clark last night when advised someone had removed the pole from the front lawn of his residence, where it was placed this summer.

But there is a problem. The flagpole has been planted so firmly in cement at its old position that it appears doubtful that it can be removed without breakage.

New Plan to Pay Debt Announced by Trade Minister MacKinnon

MERCHANTS ACCEPT

Ottawa, Oct. 2—(CP) — A plan was announced today by Trade Minister MacKinnon whereby prairie farmers may deliver wheat to merchants, wholesalers, suppliers and others as security against farmers' accounts with such merchants.

Under the plan the merchant will become the warehouseman for the farmer and later deliver the wheat to the elevator in the farmer's name as elevator space becomes available.

The minister said there was a misconception according to many reports reaching him that because of the present delivery quota system for wheat on the prairies merchants would not be able to take wheat this year and later deliver it to the elevators.

Some merchants already were accepting while others were not and to clear up the misconception, the Minister's announcement was issued.

A Frequent Practice

In former years it was frequently the practice in the west for farmers to give security for credits by delivering wheat to his creditor but this year considerable uncertainty developed whether this practice could be continued because the wheat delivery quota of eight bushels an acre in crowded elevators must be used only by the actual prodicers.

Thus the fear was entertained that if the merchant took the wheat over he would not be able to deliver it to the elevators when space becomes available.

Winnipeg, Oct. 2—(CP)—P. F. Bredt, President of Manitoba Pool Elevators, Ltd., said today that the plan, whereby farmers may deliver wheat to their creditors as security against debts, will not relieve the present financial situation in western Canada to any great extent "it does nothing towards getting any more money into the country."

SPANIARDS GLAD WAR UNLIKELY

Many Are Saying Country Has Had Enough War for Long Time

Madrid, Oct. 2—(AP)—Spaniards gratefully and quickly passed on the word to one another today that, according to reports from Rome, Spain is to continue as a non-belligerent.

Many people were saying that the Civil War had given Spain enough war for a long time—this despite the recent clamor in the controlled press for an active partnership in the Rome-Berlin Axis.

Spain's economic situation, so stringent that a military venture might have been disastrous, probably was the reason the Rome-Berlin Axis has excused her from immediate active participation in the European war, informed sources said.

They asserted that a careful study was made of the possibilities of Spain's supplying her vital necessities during the winter and the conclusion was that she is so short of food and fuel and certain other raw materials that she couldn't have fought successfully if she had wanted to.

Improvised Carriers Used to Streamline Hitting Power

(By Ross Munro Canadian Press Staff Writer).

Somewhere in England, Oct. 2—(CP Cable)—By ingeniously improvising carriers for its howitzers, an eastern Canada regiment has streamlined its hitting power and become the most mobile unit of its kind in the United Kingdom.

The batteries, drawn from Prince Edward Island, Montreal, Toronto and Kingston, Ont., now can move guns to new positions, unload them from the carriers and start firing a barrage in seven minutes.

Under this newest artillery transport development by the Royal Canadian Artillery, the carriers are towed by huge trucks which accommodate a gun crew of 15 and can whisk along the road at 50 miles an hour.

Previously, when the guns rolled on their own wheels, they could only be moved at about 10 miles an hour.

Capt. J. W. Wilkinson of Toronto explained that the carriers were put to their present use "quite by accident." The regiment found them at the camp when it moved in. The carriers were meant for another purpose but the Canadians promptly adopted them to their own use.

One howitzer with ammunition boxes is accommodated on each carrier. It first took the Canadians half an hour to load one of these massive guns on a carrier. Now they whip through the job in four minutes.

Canadian Troops in England Move into Winter Quarters

1st Division Will be Billeted in Homes and Specially-Built Winter Huts

AID DURING RAIDS

By ROSS MUNRO
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Somewhere in England, Oct. 2 (CP Cable)—In quaint little English villages among rolling hills thousands of men of the Canadian 1st Division were billeted today in picturesque homes with hedges and gardens as the troops started moving into winter quarters from the tents they have occupied during the warm months.

Others will winter in huts similar to those used in army camps in Canada and a new type of hut devised by Brig. C. S. L. Hertzberg of Toronto and the Royal Canadian Engineers. The latter has a canvas roof and a floor sunk several feet below ground for warmth and safety from shrapnel and bomb blasts. The sides are intertwined tree branches threaded between upright with earth banked against them for additional protection and warmth. The men billeted in them say they are "the real McCoy."

Lt.-Gen. A. G. L. McNaughton explained that the considerations in billeting were safety from indiscriminate bombing, convenience to the training area, and health and sanitation.

The Canadian 2nd Division is quartered in huts and barracks at a permanent military camp but the 1st Division is meeting the winter housing problem by taking the best means existing and adapting them to their needs.

Canadians in village billets in many cases have been able to help civilians meet air raid problems and relations are most friendly.

One Royal Canadian Artillery unit detailed 50 men to aid the local air raid precautions unit in one raid. The detail reached the scene and was battling a fire before the arrival of the locals. In addition to working through the night, the troops wheeled up refreshments to the homeless and the rescue squads.

TRIO IDENTIFIED BY CHEATED MAN

L. O. Leroux Claims He Was Cheated of $4,700 in a Poker Game

Windsor, Ont., Oct. 2 (CP)— By their photographs, three New Westminster men have been identified here by L. O. Leroux, 69, of R. R. 1, Windsor, as the trio he claims cheated him out of $4,700, his life earnings, in a poker game in New Westminster during a trip he made to the Pacific Coast in August.

Windsor police today forwarded word to that effect to the New Westminster police. Pictures of the three suspects were picked by Leroux from a score of police pictures placed before him.

One of the three was arrested in Vancouver recently on a vagrancy charge when drunk. Police found $900 on him. Another is out on bail on another charge.

Personnel on All Ships Of Canadian Registry To be Given Protection

Ottawa, Oct. 2 (CP)—Hereafter personnel on all ships registered in Canada will be afforded protection from machine gun attack by enemy aircraft by special equipment, Navy Minister Macdonald announced today.

The Minister said the nature of the equipment which will consist of armor for the bridge and exposed parts of the deck must be approved by a competent naval authority before the ship would be allowed to put to sea.

The armor will take the form of sandbags, steel plates and mattresses protective against splinters.

Canadian naval personnel are serving as gunners aboard defensively equipped merchant ships, Mr. Macdonald said, as well as serving in the ships and establishments of the Royal Canadian Navy and the Royal Navy.

Some 50 merchant ships are staffed by gunners from the Royal Canadian Navy and the guns on other vessels are manned by merchant seamen trained by the Canadian Navy.

Bishop, V.C., reported on the progress of the Empire Air Training scheme and various other aspects of Canada's war effort when he was received by the King at Buckingham Palace today. Free Frenchmen Firmly in Control Of French Oceania Wellington, New Zealand, Oct. 2—(CP Reuters) — Supporters of Gen. Charles De Gaulle, leader of the French who are continuing the war by Britain's side, are firmly in control of French Oceania, Prime Minister Peter Fraser said today.

The Premier disclosed that the New Zealand government has taken steps to maintain contact with the French Island establishments. A government representative, he said, has visited the Governor, Edmond Mansad, at Papette, chief town of Tahiti. The great bulk of the French and Polynesian population support Mansad, Mr. Fraser declared.

(Oceania consists of the Society Islands, the Marguezas Islande, the Tuamotu group, Leeward Islands and the Gambier, Austral and Rapa Islands. Save for the natives, the inhabitants are chiefly French, with a scattering of other Europeans, some Americans and a few thousand Chinese.)

United States Trying to Recover Hundred War Planes

Washington, Oct. 2 —(AP)— United States efforts to recover more than 100 American-built war planes lying idle on the French Island of Martinique in the Caribbean were reported in diplomatic quarters today.

"Usually well informed persons said they understood this was one of the principal topics discussed yesterday by President Roosevelt and Henri Haye, ambassador from the Vichy government.

The planes, purchased by the former Anglo-French purchasing mission, were taken to the island aboard the French aircraft carrier Bearn about the time of the French-German armistice.

Return of the planes to the United States for use in its own defence program, diplomatic sources said, might help to improve relations generally between the United States and the Petain-Laval government and ease tension over the Martinique problem.

The ambassador was said to have made no definite promises except to refer the matter to his government.

Toronto Red Cross Campaign Nears The Halfway Mark

Toronto, Oct. 2 —(CP)— The Red Cross campaign to raise $1,000,000 of its $5,000,000 national quota in Toronto neared the halfway mark today, headquarters officials announced. Total pledges and donations for the city were slightly under $500,000. The campaign ends Saturday, having started a week ago Monday.

Canadian Soldiers Return From England

An East Coast Canadian Port, Oct. 2 (CP)—A British steamship came up the harbor today and passengers aboard her reported an "uneventful crossing" of the Atlantic from Britain.

There were a number of Canadian soldiers aboard, being returned because of physical defects. A number of British children also were on the vessel but none of the passengers came ashore immediately.

From passengers along the deck rails, it was learned the children were bound for the United States and Ontario wartime homes.

RASPBERRY CANES BEAR LATE FRUIT

Mr. George Britton, College St., from his well-cultivated garden, brought to The Ontario Intelligencer building branches of a Cuthbert raspberry cane which had been set out last Spring. These are now bearing berries, some of which are ripe and nicely flavored.

Mr. Britton, who is well known as a student of garden culture, came across evidence of what may become a blight, he says. He showed several potatoes which indicate that they are blemished. "I would advise those who have potatoes to look at them closely," he said, "in order to find if there is any possibility of their becoming victims of wet or dry blight.

In the same garden where these potatoes grew he found a phenomenon—a group of four potatoes in two groups along a leader.

TWO YEARS FOR PRETENSE

Oxford, England, Oct. 2 (CP Cable)—Gunner Leslie Jones, who pretended to be a German parachutist and was arrested by a Lieutenant of the Canadian Active Service Force, was sentenced today to two years at hard labor by a military court.

Jones, arrested by Lieut. E. Chamberlain of Montreal, was convicted of being away without leave and forging a civilian identity card, and of causing public mischief.

Capture of the prowler in the Canadian encampment was believed to have inspired unfounded reports at the time that German parachutists had landed on British soil

Insulation! Now is the time of the year when the house owner begins to think of insulating his home from the cold of the coming winter. To insulate against the cold, that is to keep the heat within the house from wastefully flowing away, mineral wool and crumpled aluminum foil are used. Mineral wool insulates because it is a poor conductor itself and also because it imprisons air between its fibres, and air that cannot flow is an excellent insulator. Crumpled aluminum foil insulates because it also traps air within its folds and also reflects the heat waves. Where wool and aluminum cannot be used, as at window and door spaces, tightly fitted storm windows are a great help.

Canadian-Built Bombers in Service With Royal Air Force

Toronto, Oct. 3—(CP)—An English official from the Handley-Page plant in Canada to supervise production of the Handley-Page Hampden bomber, said today that Canadian-built bombers now are in service with the Royal Air Force.

He said the planes were being shipped to England immediately after completion and test flights here and estimated that about 10 of the twin-engine, four-gun bombers were either overseas or enroute. He said the R.A.F. was "very satisfied" with the Canadian product which carries nearly two tons of bombs, a crew of four and has a range of 1,800 miles.

Paul F. Sise, President of Canadian Association Aircraft, said it was hoped to reach production of 15 bombers a month shortly.

Burma Road May be Reopened in Fortnight

London, Oct. 3 —(CP)— Authoritative quarters predicted today that, as a sequence of consultations with Washington, Britain will reopen the Burma Road for supplies to the central Chinese government two weeks from today.

The three-month closing of the Burma Road, a British gesture toward Japan before Japan joined the Rome-Berlin Axis, will expire Oct. 17. The highway through Burma was one of the few remaining supply lines to sustain the Chinese in their war with Japan.

U.S. Newsmen Praise Magnitude, Thoroughness, Completeness of Plan

New York, Oct. 3 (CP).—The only thing Canadians are taking for granted about the war is that it will be "a long pull to an eventual victory," George C. Hull wrote in the Providence, R.I., Journal.

Hull, like more than twenty other United States newspapermen, is just back from a tour of Eastern Canada's army, air and navy establishments. His first article on the visit was on Canada's war effort generally.

At the same time William Davis Taylor in the Boston Globe and Leonard Ware in the Boston Herald published the second in their series on the trip. Both discussed the Empire Air Training Plan.

Taylor wrote:

"Today a trip to any one of Canada's 32 schools now in full operation . . clearly emphasizes the magnitude, thoroughness and completeness of this great plan which Great Britain has well called Canada's most important contribution to the war.

"Under this scheme of Canada is there a possibility of eventually running into a shortage of men? As there has been over 170,000 inquiries about air training to date, it would not seem so."

He paid tribute to the "good planes, good airdromes" and "most unselfish instructors" and said that the largest human problems of Canada's air efforts "is not material — but physical. It is needed for relaxation."

Ware gave a long factual account of the air plan and concluded:

"In sum: Canada has, at Britain's wish, concentrated on creating a vast reservoir of trained pilots, observers and gunners. With one year of the war already passed, this effort has had almost no influence on the course of the war. But by the end of the second year it may well become the most decisive factor in its outcome — provided always, of course, that British and American factories can produce sufficient planes with which to equip the huge army of airmen Canada is training.

Hull found during the visit that "innumerable questions were freely asked and as freely answered, the latter a phenomenon startling to American newspapermen accustomed to fighting their way through anti-publicity barrages to bring back an occasional prisoner of fact."

He said his general conclusions were:

"Canadians have achieved national unity of purpose, and that purpose is to defend, protect and perpetuate the free Canadian way of life by applying such force as they can, as swiftly as they can, when and where it will do the most good.

"They do not have to debate among themselves the question whether totalitarianism is a living menace to them. They know it . . . they look upon the world today as one utterly real, from which there is no escape, and in which they must again carve their future with the sword if they are to have one."

BASES AGAIN BOMBED

Ostend, Calais, Cherbourg and Ushant Are Subjected to Smashing Attack

London, Oct. 3 (CP). — Despite thick clouds and poor visibility, British warplanes struck smashing overnight blows at German oil plants, munitions factories, railway facilities and other military objectives, the Air Ministry said today.

The docks at Hamburg and Wilhelmshaven were heavily bombed, as were port facilities and shipping at Amsterdam, Rotterdam, Flushing and Antwerp.

A Blenheim plane of the British coastal command yesterday "destroyed an enemy bomber which had unsuccessfully attacked one of our convoys," the Ministry said.

Last night a Hudson aircraft shot down a German bomber which fell into the sea.

(Reports from Berlin disclosed British raiders had given the German capital a one hour and twelve minute air raid alarm—the fifth in as many nights—but the Air Ministry communique did not mention this.)

Coogan Rejected By R. C. A. F.

Ottawa, Oct. 3 —(CP)— An application for service with the Royal Canadian Air Force was placed by Jackie Coogan, child acting star of the silent films, but it met rejection, according to information available at the Air Ministry today.

A despatch from Hollywood said Coogan, 26, had said he would serve at Trenton, Ont., as a civilian flying instructor.

When first queried on the story, the Air Ministry said they had no word of Coogan's intentions, but after further inquiries rejection of Coogan's application was found.

24 U.S. Army Tanks Of World War Vintage On Way to Camp Borden

Windsor, Ont., Oct. 3 —(CP)— Stalled at the border for more than 36 hours, 24 U.S. Army tanks of World War vintage, hurdled the red tape today. Now they are en route, loaded on flat cars, to Camp Borden.

First of the tanks, covered by a U.S. Government arsenal bill of lading arrived in Detroit Tuesday via Michigan Central Railway from Rock Island, Illinois. But the special War Office permission required for export of armaments was somewhere in the mails when the tanks reached the M.C.R. tunnel yards.

United States Customs refused clearance to the tanks until the arrival of the papers from Washington. The tanks were started to move through the tunnel today. At Windsor they were turned over to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Awaiting clearance in Detroit today are 41 more of the machines.

Used For Training

The tanks will be used for training Canadian tank units. They were built in the late years of the First Great War and immediately after. They were declared obsolete two years ago for use by the United States army but are considered in sufficiently good condition to be useful for training purposes.

These are slow six-ton tanks carrying 37 M.M. or 40 M.M. guns. However, since they have all the general characteristics of modern tanks, army officials feel that by putting these units in first-class operating shape the men will acquire most of the mechanical knowledge they will require to handle fast, up-to-date equipment.

300 NORWEGIAN FLIERS PREPARE TO AID BRITAIN

HAVE SEEN SERVICE

Toronto, Oct. 3 (CP)—Right on Toronto's busy waterfront, snugly hidden behind a baseball stadium and a grain elevator today lies a "little Norway." It aims to do more than wave flags for the homeland.

Training at Toronto's unique island airport, five or six minutes from the heart of the city, these men have only one major fault, according to their officers. They are over-anxious to get back across the Atlantic which they crossed only a month or two ago. They'll go, however, only when they are equal — and maybe superior—in skill and physique to the finest fliers anywhere.

The individual stories of their escapes from German-sized Norway would make most pulp magazine adventure yearns seem tame. Many had ships shot from under them. Others were machine gunned from the air as they floundered in the North Sea. Some sailed in small open fishing boats over to Iceland, then down to Scotland

When they are ready for battle—and some will be ready by the end of the year—their squadrons will work with the Royal Air Force and do the jobs assigned to them. But they hope that they'll get a chance to drop a few messages over Germany.

Invasion Alarms Sounded in Britain Belief of Writer

New York, Oct. 3 (CP).—Vincent Sheean, foreign correspondent, today expressed belief that two invasion alarms had been sounded along the English Channel coast in the past six weeks, "bringing the army and navy springing to their stations" and causing the release of a chemical fog screen.

(Previous reports of German attempts at invasion have been denied by the British government. A spokesman on one occasion said there would be no point in Britain attempting to hide the fact if Germans had been beaten off.

(There have been rumors that a number of German troop barges were sunk off the French coast by the Royal Air Force and Royal Navy while practicing loading and unloading operations.)

Sheean said he believed the first alarm was sounded Aug. 25 and the second Sept. 7.

"I heard and I believe that chemical fog was used during the Aug. 25 alarm," he said. "Of course, I don't know whether or not there were any actual attempts to land German troops in England."

ATLANTIC FORCES OF U.S. NAVY TO BE STRENGTHENED

Commander of Main Fleet Coming From Hawaii for Conferences

MOVE 125 VESSELS

Washington, Oct. 3 (AP). — The United States Navy gave emphasis to its two-ocean policy today with preparations for putting its Atlantic forces on a more formidable footing, and the announcement that the commander-in-chief of the main fleet is coming here from Hawaii for conferences on the general situation in the Pacific.

Navy Secretary Frank Knox contributed to the interest in the coming visit of Admiral James O. Richardson when he told a press conference yesterday that he thought a suggestion for a naval good will cruise to Australia and New Zealand was a "good idea", although there had been no decision on the subject.

Plans for establishment of "a newly organized force" in the Atlantic were disclosed by the Navy Department. The squadron, to be

Crude Attempt Made To Bomb Electric Station at Leaside

Toronto, Oct. 3 (CP)—Harry Shiels, a guard at the big Leaside Hydro-Electric Power plant, was mentioned today as a possible candidate for the George Cross, new British award for extreme bravery, while officials investigate the tossing of a "very amateurish" bomb near the suburban power station.

Shiels ran and kicked the fuse away from the bomb, causing it to sputter harmlessly, when he noticed the flare of the missile last evening. Whoever threw the bomb got away without being observed.

Hon. W L. Houck, vice-chairman of the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission commended Shiels' bravery and said that if the facts were substantiated the incident would be drawn to the attention of the Secretary of State at Ottawa with a view to recommending to the British Government that the guard be considered for the George Cross.

The George Cross is second only to the Victoria Cross, but may be awarded civilians or volunteers for bravery on the home front.

The bomb was made of metal casing with a glass casing inside. Attached to it was a four-foot piece of fuse.

Residents of the district heard the explosion and reported "sounds of rifle fire," but police said no shots were fired in the vicinity of the plant.

Officials said traffic past the plant had been heavy during the half-hour preceding the explosion.

The Leaside station is one of the most important in Ontario. It converts hydro power brought by high-power lines from Gatineau and other Quebec districts for distribution to industries in Toronto and other parts of southern Ontario.

GERMANS FAIL TO ATTACK LONDON REGION IN FORCE

Central Section of Capital Has Fourth Consecutive Night of Comparatively Light Raiding

A. A. FIRE HEAVY

Shrapnel Bombs for First Time Reported Used by Nazi Raiders

London, Oct. 3 (CP)—Attacking through a thick haze, Nazi raiders paid their fourth visit to London late this afternoon, showering bombs on the northwest and southeast sections.

Anti - aircraft fire crackled throughout the city.

Roof-top spotters sought cover. The typical English murk made it impossible to see the planes or gauge the direction of the "Archies'" fire.

One raider dropped his load of bombs in a southeast district. Firing by directional finders, the anti-aircraft gunners threw up a heavy barrage. The plane was heard droning off in the distance.

3 Killed in Laundry

Three girls were killed in a southeastern section of the city by a bomb that blasted a laundry. Four others were injured seriously.

In a Midlands town a bomber showered high explosive and incendiary bombs. A factory and an elementary school were hit and it was feared one or two persons were killed.

One Nazi bomber fell at Hertingfordbury, near Hertford. When the plane came down two farm hands rushed out and made prisoners of four German airmen in it.

During the night bombs were dropped on 20 London districts but central London had its fourth consecutive night of comparatively quiet raiding.

Anti - aircraft firing frequently was heavy in the city's outskirts as German war planes returned for their 26th nightly assault.

The government said casualties throughout the country were few, and that there was no extensive damage.

British reporters continued to tell of the development of secret weapons for use against the raiders and some sources credited a change in defensive tactics with the failure of the Germans to attack the central region in force.

R.A.F. raiders, bucking a near gale, roared across the English Channel again to strike at German

ANCIENT TREASURES SAFE

Cairo, Egypt, Oct. 3 (AP).—Egypt's priceless literary treasures, more than 180,000 manuscripts and ancient tomes, have been made safe from air raids in a desert hill cave of secret location. Barrage so Heavy London Traffic Is Tied Up

Anti-Aircraft Shell Fragments Fall Like Hail on the City

London, Oct. 3 (CP)—Anti-aircraft barrages so heavy as to tie up traffic marked an afternoon attack on London by unseen German raiders today and some quarters suggested that the Nazi air offensive may have turned to "blind" high altitude bombardment.

Anti-aircraft shell fragments fell like hail on the city.

Nazi raiders thrust at the capital through a thick haze in their fourth visit of the day, showering bombs on northwest and southeast sections. Anti-aircraft guns sent up constant streams of exploding steel.

Cabbies who in the past have plied their trade in the worst barrages refused to stir this evening either from their outlying stands for trips into the central part of the city or from central stands to the suburbs.

The attacking planes were hidden by the murk, apparently finding London only through use of flying instruments.

Might Mark a New Phase

Some sources said that this might mark a new phase of the air offensive — flight above the clouds beyond anti-aircraft range, location of London by instruments of navigation and then a tripping of bomb racks.

It would be impossible with such technique to pick out objectives within the city.

A train which pulled out of the Euston Station, northwest of the centre of London, was bombed and machine-gunned while passing through a small midland town. Three persons were wounded by bullets. Railroad men said the bombs missed and did no damage.

Frequent "Rings"

In eastern London daylight anti-aircraft fire developed as heavily as on any recent night, residents reported.

In the Canadian Press building the drumfire sounded like the "creeping barrages of the First Great War.

There was a frequent "ping" on the roof, to tell that bits of shells were splattering down.

It was by far the heaviest daytime action in the past month.

After the air raid warning had been on more than an hour the mounting intensity of the barrages had turned the London haze to a glowing red. Droning motors could be heard above the roar of the guns.

Heroism of a DeGaulle Naval Officer Prevented Capture of Landing Party

(The following is the first detailed account of dramatic events leading up to the three-day British-supported effort of Gen. Charles De Gaulle's "free French" expedition to occupy Dakar, capital of French West Africa and "key to the South Atlantic." The naval and air battle was abandoned on Sept. 25.)

With the De Gaulle Dakar Expedition, Sept. 29 — (Delayed in transmission)—(AP)—Heroism of a officer-priest, whose white-flagged "free French landing party touched off the battle of Dakar, prevented the capture of former French deputies who tried to win west Africa bloodlessly over to Gen. Charles De Gaulle's Anglo-French cause.

He was Capt. G. Thierry D'Argenlieu, who stood erect in a small boat under a deadly hail of machine-gun fire, even after being wounded, and directed withdrawal of the landing party, made up of members of the French parliament serving in De Gaulle's legion.

Although sailors were lining the rails of warships and commercial vessels in Dakar port, no effort was made at first to halt the free French landing party, which flew its white flag alongside the French tri-color.

Just as the party reached the dock and prepared to go ashore, however, an automobile drew up on the quay. A young ensign with a drawn revolver and a lieutenant stepped out and refused to let any members except D'Argenlieu land.

The lieutenant shook hands cordially with D'Argenlieu, who asked authorization for his delegation to land. The lieutenant sent for Capt. Lorfevre, Commander of port police, who granted permission for the entire party to come ashore.

When D'Argenlieu declared he was carrying a letter for Governor General Pierre Boisson of West Africa and the admiral commanding the port, the chief of police telephoned the governor for instructions.

The governor's answer came eight minutes later. Its tenor was indicated by Capt. Lorfevre who ordered the party to put back to sea at once.

He scarcely had finished speaking when an orderly rushed up with a written order for the immediate arrest of the entire party.

Marshall Field May Buy Control Of Newspaper PM.

New York, Oct. 3.—(CP)—Ralph Ingersoll, publisher of PM, New York's new evening newspaper, Wednesday confirmed reports that the paper is considering selling control to Marshal Field, Chicago Department store head.

He said Field, one of 18 stockholders who invested a total of $1,500,000 in the paper before its first issue June 18, has offered $300,000 to pay off his colleagues at 20 cents on the dollar and had offered $500,000 new capital to enable the paper to carry on.

If the offer is accepted by the other stockholders at the end of next week a new company will be formed to take over PM. The old stockholders will receive a special Class B non-voting common stock entitling them to 15 per cent of the equity and assets. Field is to buy the voting stock.

(PM carries no paid advertising in its columns, receiving its income from sales at five cents a copy. In a statement published in todays issue of the tabloid-size paper, PM's average daily circulation since its inception was given as 132,353.)

DELIVERY HORSE FRIGHTENED BY TRAIN

An incident which might possibly have resulted in serious consequences occured on Pinnacle St., Thursday morning when a delivery horse become frightened at an approaching switching engine and cut directly across the track in front of the moving locomotive. Apparently aware that the horse might become frightened, the driver took the animal by the head as the engine approached but despite his efforts, the horse balked frantically away and crossed the track only a few feet in front of the engine. The fact that the engine was coming to a stop at the time undoubtedly saved an accident as the locomotive driver was on the blind side of the engine and did not see the incident.

FIRE DEPARTMENT CALLED OUT TWICE

The local fire department made two runs yesterday, both for minor alarms. The first, during the afternoon, to an apartment over 278 Front St., over Dr. Ward's dentist office, to investigate a smoke alarm and the second near midnight Wednesday evening when the cushions of an automobile on Bridge St. East became ignited. Little damage was caused as the result of the fire in the car, it was reported.

Members of the Hastings County Council, political and civic dignitaries will journey to Bancroft today where they will be the guests of Warden John L. Churcher at a banquet tendered by him in the Bancroft Community Hall.

Women's Institute Convention Opens

Annual Meeting for Three Counties Takes Place at St. Thomas Parish House

With Mrs. Jas. Bailey, Eldorado, convention chairman, presiding, the annual meeting of the Women's Institutes of Northumberland, Prince Edward and Hastings Counties opened this morning in St. Thomas Parish House with a large registration of members.

The two day program will give a detailed picture of the accomplishments of branch and district along the many lines of Institute endeavour. Special speakers during the sessions will be Miss Mary A. Clarke, superintendent of Women's Institutes, Toronto, Mrs. E. Duke, Provincial President, Federated Women's Institutes, and J. B. Reynolds, M.A., LL.D., Port Hope, former head of Ontario Agricultural College.

Church Moderator To Visit City During Anniversary

Headed by the Right Rev. A. S. Tuttle, D.D., newly appointed Moderator, high ranking dignitaries of the United Church of Canada will attend the 125th anniversary of Bridge Street United Church which will be celebrated here from November 10th to the 17th inclusive.

The Moderator will preach at the opening morning service on November 10th with the Rev. Dr. Archer Wallace, Toronto, occupying the pulpit in the evening.

Greetings from other churches will feature the social evening of Wednesday Nov. 13th where addresses will be given by the Rev. W. W. Cliff, president of the Bay of Quinte Conference, and the Chairman of the Belleville Presbytery, the Rev. J. G. McKee, Wellington.

Y.W.G. of Tabernacle Church Open Fall Term

On Monday, September Thirtieth, the Young Women's Guild of Tabernacle Church held their opening meeting at the home of Mrs. Howard Trusdale on Ann Street. The President, Miss Doris Kerr, opened the meeting and gave a short address to the members, when she spoke of the serious situation confronting the world and exorted the members to strive for righteousness in order that peace may come. After the business was concluded Mrs. J. Buchanan conducted the worship service. It was based on Peter's sermon after Pentecost and the results therefrom. This is one of the few examples of Christianity really being used and the results.

The discussion period was led by Miss Olive Elsou whose theme was "New Anglo-Amerian Relations." Most of the discussion was on the new book "Canada, America's Problem." Tracing the history of the last four years we find ourselves now at the signing of a defence agreement with United States who has found at last that the nearness of Canada makes isolation impossible.

The Monroe doctrine as conceived by President Monroe in 1823 was clearly explained and related to the present. Canada is now more than a wheat field for the Empire. She is an air training base and a bank as well. Canada's part may well be the deciding factor in the present war.

History over the last 150 years shows clearly that Canada-U.S. relations have not all been rosy. There have been boundary disputes and threats of war--and war. In most things we, in Canada, are identical with United States—our language, clothes and living standards are the same. All hear the same radio programs and see the same movies. Many American companies have Canadian plants.

Any prejudice that may exist is the result of lack of understanding. It is for everyone to work together for the good of all, remembering only the generosity and splendid co-operation of our neighbours and forgetting petty differences which, after all, are of no importance

Old-Fashioned Taffy Popular At Fall Fairs

Wesley Evans Says City People as Well as Rural Residents "Go for it in Big Way"

They twist it and turn it. They slap it and pat it affectionately. They pull it into long creamy colored lengths that gleam in the sunshine. They whirl it over in a long arc, and catch it before it hits the ground. Then they roll it in a luscious armful and place it on a table where it is cut into small strips. And patrons young and old, of the county fairs gather around to get their share of the toothsome candy that is part and parcel of the Fall exhibitions.

An idea of the sweet tooths of the residents of Hastings and surrounding counties was gained yesterday at the Madoc Fair, when Wesley Evans, veteran concessionaire, and a human barometer of the candy-making business, told a newspaperman between "boils" of the supply and demand of this popular sweetmeat

"Wes" whirled a gleaming rope of the sweet substance high in the air, slapped it lovingly and pulled it toward him, a colorful substance like a sugary rainbow. "The people love it", he smiled, "especially the children. And" he added as an afterthought", so do a lot of the grownups. They are seldom seen eating it on the grounds, but a lot of them buy it to take home where they can munch it to their heart's content".

"Just to give you an idea of how much candy is made and bought by the public", Wes confided, "I have manufactured a little over a ton of the stuff this year. And while the general opinion is to the effect that the country folks are the biggest buyers, you would be surprised how much finds its way down city throats. It appears to be very popular with stenographers and office girls, and the 'city slickers' go for it too in a big way"

It is a poor fair when Wesley doesn't get rid of two hundred pounds of sugar via the candy route, he says.

POLICE COURT

"This man is being medically examined at this very moment by the gaol physician, as he is undernourished and a sick man", revealed Crown Attorney S. Gordon Robertson when the name of William Gilchrist was called in County Police Court, held before Magistrate E. J. Butler K.C., at the Court House today. His Worship enlarged the matter for one week.

Gilchrist was found wandering about and in apparent need when found by Provincial Constables Patterson and McKenzie yesterday. He was taken into custody and provided protection.

R. W. Akey appeared charged with failing to produce his driver's permit. "I lost it", pleaded Akey, but his pleadings failed to impress the court and he was fined $10.00 and costs. Akey's case had been presented in court two weeks ago and enlarged in order that he might produce his permit, but failure to comply with these instructions resulted in a conviction today.

A. E. Sprouts tendered a written plea of guilty when charged with careless driving and paid "ten and costs". The accused man was charged by Chief S. Eggleton of Stirling. Two others paid the minimum fines when convicted of infractions of the L.C.A.

A non-support case was heard and amicably settled by the court. "My client is paying his wife $6.00 per week and in addition partial upkeep of the home. The trouble now arises as to whether the defendant must purchase fuel for his wife also", pointed out Charles A. Payne, K.C., counsel for the defendant. His Worship suggested the parties settle such matters between themselves.

BOMBS DROP IN SWEDEN

Stockholm, Sweden, Oct. 3 (AP). —Two bombs dug craters in a park of Malmo, Sweden, opposite German-occupied Copenhagen, capital of Denmark, early today when the Swedes said British fliers presumably sought to raid military objectives near the Copenhagen area.

Willkie Favors American Aid To the British

Would Do So Even if it Meant Sacrifice of Speed in Building Up Air Fleet

Cleveland, Oct. 3 (AP)—Wendell L. Willkie charged last night that the political theories and ambitions of a few men had exposed the United States "to the aggressors," and urged aid for Britain even as a sacrifice of speed in building up the American air fleet.

In a major address on foreign policy and defense in Public Auditorium, the Republican Presidential nominee said: "We are not prepared and we are not getting prepared."

Until the people have an adequate defense system "they don't want any more international incidents," Willkie declared in his first campaign address in this politically pivotal State, where he formerly worked as an Akron attorney. He added:

"I say that we are now exposed to the aggressors because of the political theories and the political ambitions of a few men."

In his foreign policy outline, Willkie declared:

"I would continue my efforts to aid the heroic British people. I would aid the British even if it meant the sacrifice of some speed in building up our own air fleet. I would do so because the longer Britain holds out the more time we have in which to prepare ourselves."

The nominee reiterated his contentions, advanced earlier in the day, that the new German-Italian-Japanese pact demonstrated those countries regard the United States "in terms of war" and that the Administration had not taken adequate defense steps when Hitler came to power.

With the assertion that the people don't want "any more dramatic gestures" or "swashbuckling words" until a defense system is set up, Willkie observed that with only a one-ocean navy "we need to make the Panama Canal safe by building two sets of locks so that if one is destroyed we may use the other. To get these locks will take six years."

"And, of course, eventually we need a two-ocean navy, but that will take seven years."

He asserted that "there are not even any paper plans" available to local officials instructing how to protect the public from air raid damage to waterworks, gas mains or sewage.

"In these matters so vital to health and life we are as unprepared as if Adolf Hitler had never existed," Willkie continued. "That we should be exposed to air attacks may sound improbable, but my authority is the third term candidate, who described the danger so vividly some months ago in a radio talk.

"The plain fact is that we are late. We are terribly late."

Brilliant Weather and Large Attendance Plus Fine Exhibits Make Madoc Fair Real Success

6,000 Crowd Into Grounds to Enjoy Entertainment Provided by Directorate

GOOD HORSE RACING

Exhibits Plentiful and Many Contests Provide Competition for Large Number

Madoc, Ont., Oct. 3 (Staff)—Brilliant sunshiny weather reminiscent of a balmy June day rather than early October, ushered in the 1940 edition of the Madoc Fair yesterday, one that smashed all records insofar as weather conditions and attendance were concerned. Upwards of six thousand people from the far-flung sectors of the district converged on the natural amphitheatre that is the Madoc Fair Grounds to enjoy an exhibition that was rated by veteran fair-goers as the best not only in the history of the Madoc Agricultural Society, but in this district this year.

Directors had good reason to be proud. Not only had their efforts to bring to the residents of this county and district the finest obtainable in all phases of country fair exhibits and entertainment been successful, but they met with the co-operation of the weatherman and the combination resulted in a record-breaking exhibition.

3,900 Entries at Fair

Exhibits, contrary to the majority of the fairs of the county and district, were well over those of a year ago. Thirty-nine hundred entries were received by Secretary William Hill, an increase of 300 over 1939. The attendance was the best since the balmy days of 1924, and according to veterans of the fair, many years prior to that.

The fair deserved its record attendance. It was a typical North Hastings Fair, and the attractions and entertainment offered well-merited the patronage of the large crowd in evidence.

Long the centre of many a historic political battle, the village reacted with the same gusto to the plaudits of a satisfied fair-going public yesterday as it did to the political factions of years ago. The grounds, shortly after two o'clock, was the centre of a milling, jostling mass of humanity. From the hill-top that is the secretary's office, a "sea" of cars covered the greensward "across the track." The Midway and other aisles were black with people. It was the convergence point of the county and many people took advantage of the function to renew friendships made years ago.

Not a Dull Moment

As a matter of fact, there was not a dull moment during the entire day and evening. The fair-goers' appetite was satisfied to the limit. Those that preferred livestock gazed with pride at the overflowing cattle sheds, that housed the prize Holstein, Ayrshire, Jersey and beef breeds of the county and district. Draft horses, the cream of Percheron, Clydesdale, Belgian and other prominent breeds, arched proud necks to the admiration of their onlookers. Swine, poultry, the best the county and district can produce, augmented an agricultural display that was easily second to none in the 1940 fair history of Hastings County.

And as if co[illegible] of the fact, other entry lis[illegible] up to the fine showing of the agricultural. Of special mention in the Dairy Building was the vegetable display shown by a young son of Mrs. T. E. Leavitt, Wooler. The young man exhibited a fine display taste in his entry of vegetables which was the cynosure of many admiring eyes during the afternoon. Another feature was the Reforestation and Conservation Exhibit shown by government officials. The prize for an essay on this important subject was won by D. Campbell of S. S. No. 8 Madoc.

Splendid Cheese Exhibits

Indicative of the high quality dairy products of Hastings County was the fine exhibit of cheese and butter. Judges stated the "finish" was the best seen in many years, and spoke highly of the general quality of both products. Women's exhibits and the work of school-children as well as fruits. Preserves and vegetables rounded out a fine display.

Reminiscent of the grim struggle going on overseas was the military display by the Madoc Company of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment's N.P.A.M. Battalion's Madoc Company. The troops paraded along the race track to the music of a trumpet band, and the plaudits of the large throng. The Red Cross exhibited the work of its members in a well-supplied tent that contained the handiwork of Canadians that is so necessary in these days of stress.

But entertainment was not forgotten. There was one of the best midways seen in the district this year. There were tented shows with dancing girls; ring-games; baseball throwing; the ubiquitous merry-go-round and its attendant throng of happy children; white mice that chased each other through small houses; weight-guessers; roulette wheels; hammer-tosses, and of course the many refreshments concessions that did a land office business.

Plenty of Entertainment

But the entertainment centre of attraction was the orchestra platform where Master-of-Ceremonies Tommy Mason held sway. Highlighting a program that was entertainment par excellence as a whole was a clever troupe of youngsters, pupils of Marion Perry Laird, Peterborough, whose revue "Young Canada on Parade" was not only a delight in itself but brought out the versatility of the young participants and reflected credit on their instructor. Dainty young misses and masters in a colorful musical revue enthralled the large crowd with their offerings. They well merited the rounds of applause that greeted each act.

Following came the exhibitions dear to the heart of country fair-goers. Twenty-two ladies from various parts of the county wielded a hammer in a way that was anything but amateurish, in the nail-driving contest. But it remained for a city lady, Mrs. J. Thompson, Belleville, to take the honors in the record time of 17 seconds.

Sawyers Vie For Honors

Husky sawyers of the north country, at home with the biting steel, flexed their muscles in the log-sawing contest. Eleven teams took part with Messrs. Roy and Parks, Bancroft duo finally annexing first prize. The brawny northerners were equally conversant with the bucksaw, and 14 contestants sank their blades through logs in near-record time. Victor Hughson, Coe Hill won this contest in 24 seconds.

The tunes that delighted the pioneers of decades ago rang out in the warm afternoon sunlight as young and old step-dancers vied for honors. Hugh Nicholson was finally adjudged the winner after 14 contestants, old and young of both sexes had paraded their abilities before the enthusiastic crowd.

Lovers of horseflesh thrilled at the abilities of three splendid teams of horses that took part in the drawing contest. So close was competition that judges awarded a division of 1st and 2nd prizes to the teams belonging to Clifford Fry and Clare Ingram, Campbellford farmers.

MASS MOVEMENT OF 5,000 TROOPS IN FINAL STAGE

Columns Leave Hamilton on Their Trek to Camp Borden

MISTAKES POINTED OUT

Hamilton, Ont., Oct. 3—(CP)—The largest mass movement of armed forces in Canada's history entered its final phase today when 5,000 Camp Borden troops left Hamilton in a long mechanized column along Queen Elizabeth Way for Toronto. After parading through the provincial capital they will proceed northward and arrive in Camp Borden tonight.

The troops, comprising the Perth Regiment, the Irish Regiment of Canada and the Grey-Simcoe Foresters as well as the Second Cavalry Motorcycle Regiment (formerly the Governor - General's Horse Guard), left Camp Borden Tuesday and advanced on Hamilton in three columns.

They were billeted Tuesday night in Kitchener, Paris, Preston and Brantford and yesterday arrived here. The men were quartered here last night in the Hamilton Armories and Stanley Barracks.

Received with loud acclaim by thousands of citizens when they arrived here, the soldiers left to the accompaniment of the cheers of some 30,000 school children who were released from classes to watch the final parade.

Military officials were pleased generally with the conduct of the mass operations but many officers and men still were smarting today from the reprimands they had received for errors committed during the first two days of the manoeuvres.

Take 2 Mass movement

Criticize Officers, Men

Col. S. A. Lee, Officer Commanding the operations and Commandant of Camp Borden, told the officers yesterday the purpose of the training movement was to check bad points and not to dwell on the good points in transporting a large body of troops.

He criticized a laxity of some of the troops when the columns passed through some Western Ontario towns. He said the shouting, hand-waving and general merriment of the men had been "scandalous", and the officers must share the blame for their men's conduct.

"I don't expect the men to be rigid in their seats like a lot of dead ducks but there must be a reasonable amount of march discipline when parading through these towns.

After Col. Lee had registered his disapproval of mistakes, others were to follow. It happened in Hamilton where the troops left their army transports and marched through the streets. Their route took them past the city hall steps where Mayor William Morrison, Col. Lee and several staff officers were taking the salute.

One company commander at the head of a smart, efficient looking unit was distracted by the huge crowd of onlookers and passed the saluting base without even noticing it. Because the leading officer had made the slip, the whole 400 officers and men also ignored the saluting base.

Melbourne—(CP)—Bicycle dealers here say within six months the number riding bicycles to work will double that of a year ago; the idea is to save petrol.

A scene from the most sensational picture ever produced, "I Was a Captive of Nazi Germany," which opens next at the McCarthy Theatre. "Calling All Curs," a Three Stooges comedy, is also on the same program.

NEVER BE CARELESS WITH A GUN

Bill and Bob went ahunting. Crouched in their hide in a swampy marsh they awaited the coming of the ducks. But patience, unfortunately, was, not one of Bob's characteristics. Besides it was his first experience at this form of sport. Time went by and no whirr of wings fell on the ears of the waiting hunters. Presently Bob laid his gun down and stood up to indulge in a luxurious stretch. Turning, his foot struck an object in the bottom of the hide. There was a violent explosion. When the smoke had cleared away, the bleeding body of his friend lay in the bottom of the hide. Bob had inadvertently stumbled over his loaded, cocked gun, and the result was its accidental discharge and the death of his friend. Bob has never hunted from that day to this.

The official duck and partridge season opened this week. Thus far, although it is early yet, there have been no fatalities. Nor will there be if hunters use a little common sense and an average amount of caution. Many of the accidents which occur during the hunting season can be avoided if hunters think twice before acting. That gun can be unloaded in a second before being placed away. That safety catch can be adjusted with a flip of the finger before the gun is laid down while hunting. Make sure no companions are within range of the gun before the trigger is pulled. Too much caution, no matter whether hunting or not, cannot be used when firearms are about. Human life is too precious to be thrown away because someone did not stop to think. A second's precaution may prevent the death or serious injury of a friend or relative, and the years of remorse that follow are not worth that moment lost that will ensure safety to all concerned.

And remember, it is the gun that was not thought loaded, that always goes off.

BETTER GRADES OF CHEESE EARN BIG BONUS FOR FARMERS

A splendid decision was made last year by the Ottawa Government when the bonus system was instituted to encourage the production of better grades of cheese. An official of the Agriculture Department estimates that almost $800,000 in 1940 will be paid Canadian farmers over and above the regular prices received for their cheese.

The system was introduced because of the complaints from the United Kingdom that many cheese arrived there in poor condition. Unpleasant flavors, careless bandaging, poor texture and improper curing at the factory were some of the reasons responsible for inferior grade of cheese. To remedy this the Government decided on a bonus system of grading by which cheese grading 93 points out of 100 earned one cent a pound and those grading 94 points or better rated a bonus of two cents.

The results were gratifying. Cheesemakers used greater care in making the cheese and selection of milk while farmers did their share in seeing that the raw milk reached the cheese factory in good condition. Improvements were made also in factory curing rooms. Refrigeration systems were installed in many factories with a portion of the expense being borne by the Government. In this way cheese could be kept at an even temperature of about 60 degrees F. during the summer months while in the cooler months a small supply of heat kept the rooms at the right temperature because of improved insulation. The extra trouble taken to improve the quality of cheese for last year resulted in $600,000 being paid Canadian cheese producers with Hastings County getting $55,366 as its share of the bonus. This year the bonus will be proportionately greater as the cheese make is higher with Ontario and Quebec producing approximately 150,000 more cheese from December, 1939, to September 30, 1940.

Cheese is a concentrated food that keeps well in proper storage and so Great Britain is taking all that Canada can export. In this way the Canadian farmer is doing his share in the common war effort and will benefit, as well, by the payment of the $800,000 bonus this year.

TAKE TIME TO ENJOY AUTUMN BEAUTY

During the coming weekend residents of the city should take a few hours' drive along the northern roads of Hastings County and enjoy natural beauty of breath-taking quality. The woods of the Oak Hills are vivid with the colors of Autumn and from the tops of these hills one can get long-distance views that are unequalled anywhere in the country.

The drive from Belleville through to Madoc and then on north along the Bancroft Highway is another suggested route that should be taken if the time can be spared. Here the road, travelling through avenues of brilliantly colored trees, appears brighter even on a cloudy day for the yellow of the poplar, the brown of the beeches, the scarlet crimson of the oaks and maples combined with the dark green of the spruces, cedars and pines appear to cast a transluscent glow that brightens the immediate surroundings.

There are many other roads that offer scenes of eye-filling delight but no matter what road is chosen everyone who can should get out and visit the country while this beauty lasts. Soon will come winds which will strip the trees of their foliage and leave them stark and drear giving promise of long cold winter which will soon be upon us.

So pack a basket with a picnic lunch and spend a day with the family enjoying Nature at its best and give a thought to how fortunate we are compared to the people of war-ridden Europe and offer up a silent prayer of thanksgiving for the bounteousness and beauty of this fair land.

Memory, Best Road To Learning

By Garry Cleveland Myers, Ph.D.

Let no student in high school or college suppose he can get along without boning (committing things to memory). There are certain facts and symbols which will be needed constantly. The earlier they are memorized the better. An example is the spelling of the technical vocabulary of any course.

Parrot Chat

Many are tempted to memorize an item before they know what it means, to memorize mere words and phrases. I regret to confess that I did much of this when I was in college. In Chemistry, for example, I often made perfect recitations by merely repeating what I could visualize from the pages of the text book. I could read off statements and formulae from memory as if I were reading them from the book right before my eyes. In my imagination I was doing just this. Though some can by considerable cramming before examination make good grades through this procedure, they are pretty sure to meet with trouble by and by. It is a wasteful way. I know, for although I always got an "A" in college chemistry, I really learned very little of it.

Now let me entreat the young student that, except for a few symbols, he make it a rule to get the meaning of every item before learning it by heart. In many instances this will consist of turning the paragraph of the text book into a sentence or two of your own wrds. Then the memorizing of these words. Then the memorizing of these ideas is relatively easy.

Systematic Methods

On the other hand, some students are content with figuring out the meaning. They don't bother about committing these ideas or items to memory. They trust to incidental memory. They neglect a step in study at which they could, through a little systematic effort and self-discipline, get greatest dividends from small investment of effort. As a rule, what is worth figuring out, is worth remembering. Some practice at boning is good practice for the student.

By the way, some high school and college students, required to memorize a poem, have observed that although they were confused and unsuccessful in mastering the poem the last thing at night, they might, while dressing the next morning, recall the poem perfectly without seeing it at all in the meanwhile.

Memory Aids

An aunt of mine once told me that while teaching school years ago she would sometimes labor in vain over a mental arithmetic problem. Giving it up at night, she would put the book under her pillow and on waking in the morning, usually solve the problem with ease. She and others about her then supposed there was some magic in having the book under her head.

A wearer of a rubber face mask for masqueraders invented by a resident of Fuquay Springs, N.C., can inflate the nose, cheeks and ears through a tube held in his mouth.

THAT BODY OF YOURS

James W. Barton, M.D.

It is gratifying to see the interest in backward children now taken by school officials and teachers. Anything that can help the backward pupil—eye tests, ear tests, gland and other physical tests are made and treatment given to enable the boy or girl to become a useful citizen. Everybody recognizes the value of this work to the health and happiness of these children.

It is, however, difficult to get school boards to make provision for physical examinations by school physicians and nurses, yet this inspection and health service would not only prevent much absence from school but might save many lives as epidemics of influenza and colds could be prevented.

Teachers, in looking over their class each morning, might readily spot a youngster who had a cough or looked pale, and could refer him or her to the school nurse for examination.

The common cold is the most common ailment among children and adults. One case can cause an epidemic that will spread throughout the schoolroom and the whole school, just as it goes through families, factories, and stores. If then this one case is discovered early and kept apart from others, there will be no spreading of the disease.

In some schools pupils are given a short examination—heart, temperature, and throat—before they return to school after the summer, Christmas and Easter holidays. This has prevented epidemics of colds, mumps, measles and other diseases of childhood, from spreading throughout the school.

How can colds be prevented in children and adults? The same rule applies to both children and adults. Don't eat too much and don't allow yourself to get chilled. Overeating means too much acid wastes in the blood and tissues. If the body is chilled at this time, a cold is likely to start in certain individuals, and this cold is handed on to others. The common cold is considered both infectious and contagious. The tiny organisms causing a cold float in the air where they may be breathed in, or may be on dishes or other utensils used by one who has a cold.

The investment in a health service to the extent of a physician or nurse or both would pay dividends from the health as well as the academic standpoint.

Fair Play For the Teacher

By Garry Cleveland Myers, Ph.D.

While there are some horrible teachers, most are of very high grade. My own children were fortunate to have many excellent teachers in the public schools, from the kindergarten through senior high school.

During the first few weeks of school we parents can do much to further or hinder the success of our child at school and the success of his teacher. This child, especially in the lower grades, will talk freely of her, often admiringly, sometimes critically. Also he will make frequent comments about his observations and experiences at school.

Listen and Learn

Naturally we may learn a great deal as we listen. But we need to remember that the child is talking in terms of his limited experience and wisdom; also in terms of his childish prejudices. Without meaning to misrepresent or deceive he may render very inaccurate accounts of his teacher and school.

Being human, we parents are inclined not to take into account the child's limitations. We are impulsive, prone to pass judgment right away, and with clearly incomplete evidence at hand. Accordingly, we easily might respond to his reports in such a way as to make him suppose his is a very poor teacher and school. In case this child reports what he considers unfair treatment of himself by the teacher and school, a mere word, gesture, or mere look from the parent might magnify the unfairness to large proportions in the child's mind.

Just consider what might happen with more unfavorable reports by the child from day to day embellished with his imagination. Won't he then grow less respectful toward the teacher, antagonistic, even abusive of her? And won't the teacher's attitude rebound accordingly? How can your child or mine grow best in citizenship at school when he thinks we consider his teacher unfit to teach him, since we condemn and criticize her in his presence—and solely on the basis of what he has reported concerning her?

Be Discreet

My fellow parent: When your child reports anything about his teacher or school which you disapprove, let him talk so long as he is not discourteous. Listen thoughtfully but express no disapproval of the teacher or school then. There will be instances, indeed, when you can and should set the child straight right then and there. But if you believe some matters at school deserve your attention, wait a day or so until you have regained complete self-mastery, praying for poise in the meanwhile. Then without the child's knowing it beforehand go to the school to ascertain the facts, not to condemn and abuse.

ENOUGH IS PLENTY

Bremerton, Wash.—(CP)—Sailor Jack Smooth of the U.S.S. Idaho was passing out cigars celebrating the arrival of a son when another telegram said it was triplets now—two baby girls had followed. Shipmates heped the proud father to his hammock.

A Joke Goes Sour

The Germans' sense of humour is something the world has never been able to understand. Now comes further evidence that their sense of the fitness of things is sadly lacking. Adolfo Furhmann, one of eight Germans accused of plotting the conquest of Uruguay, says it was all "a joke". He had thought up the plan, he insists, as a joke upon his fellow-Germans following published reports of Nazi plans to invade Patagonia.

Well, the joke turned sour on him, and he will have a hard time convincing the thoroughly aroused Uruguayan authorities that he was just being playful. It may be even more difficult for the prisoner to persuade the Uruguayans that Washington rushed the cruisers Quincy and Wichita all the way to Montevideo so that the crews could enjoy a hearty laugh. And it may take some explaining to convince the Uruguay Supreme Court that Germany invoked diplomatic immunity for one of its press liaison officers to save him the embarrassment of having the laugh turned on him.

No, it just won't wash. Whether or not the eight accused plotted the conquest of Uruguay, every one of them is known as a Nazi organizer of some kind. South America is not amused.—Montreal Star.

RENTAL CONTROL MAY BE EXTENDED TO OTHER AREAS

Protests Against Increase in Rents Arrive in Steady Stream at Ottawa

Ottawa, Oct. 3 (CP)—The Wartime Prices and Trade Board is considering the necessity for extending control of rentals to additional areas throughout the Dominion.

Protests against alleged undue increases in rents come in a steady stream to the desk of Mr. Justice W. M. Martin, newly-appointed rentals administrator.

"We already have indications that a number of cities should come into the control plan," said one Board official "As soon as investigations are completed, a decision will be announced."

Last month the Board fixed rent prices in 21 districts at the figures of last Jan. 2. Subsequently Mr. Justice Martin explained that all leases are automatically amended in accordance with the order, and tenants will consider the Jan. 2 rate as the maximum which they must pay.

Now Mr. Justice Martin is making a trip that will take him to several of the controlled areas — Barrie and Parry Sound in Ontario, and Brandon, Man. He will hold public hearings in these places to get a general picture of housing conditions and learn the effect of the "standstill" order on rentals there.

The spokesman for the Wartime Prices and Trade Board said that three types of information are considered in deciding whether any district should come under control:

1. The volume of complaints, although this is not considered to be always a fair guide.

ENGAGEMENT NOTICE

Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Duminie announce the engagement of their daughter, Doris Helene, to Walter Raymond Sweetnam, Hespeler, Ont., son of Mrs. Samuel Sweetnam of this city, the wedding to take place the middle of October.

A miscellaneous shower was held at the Yacht Club recently, in honour of Miss Helena McDonnell and Mr. Earl Clarke. After the many beautiful gifts were opened, the evening was spent in cards and dancing.

Miss Jean Crosier spent the past week in Toronto, guest of Flight Lieutenant and Mrs. F. W. Ball.

Mrs. O. A. Marshall, who has been visiting relatives in British Columbia for the past month, arrived in Toronto, Monday, by train from Vancouver.

Lt.-Col. E. O. Keeler, M.C., V.D., who has been stationed at Petawawa Camp for the past month left today for Peterborough, to take command of the Canadian military training centre located there.

Mr. James H. Follwell, B.S.A., has entered the University of Toronto, where he will study the graduate classes leading to Master of Science Degree.

Marking their twenty-fifth year of untiring effort for the welfare of the community and the work of the Order, St. Julien Chapter, I.O.D.E. celebrated their silver anniversary by a tea yesterday which achieved the high standard of success of former ventures of this busy organization. The Chapter was organized during the last war, taking its name from the famous battle of St. Julien of March 15. Its first regent was Mrs. A. E. MacColl, who is now honorary regent. In its early years the Chapter devoted all its energies toward war work. After the last World War, the members continued their efforts, this time the needs of the community taking first call on their resources. St. Julien Chapter has identified itself with every endeavour for the good of the city, and moreover has linked itself with the many Empire projects undertaken by the National body. Now that war needs have the major demand in the lives of Canadians the Chapter has entered enthusiastically into wartime program. The appreciation of the public for their work was demonstrated yesterday by the record attendance at the afternoon tea held at the home of Mrs. J. B. Ives, Mount Pleasant Road. The spacious rooms, charming with deep-toned fall flowers, made an ideal setting for the event. Tawny African and single dahlias in rust tones, and in pale lemon yellow were used in the decoration of the living room while baby 'moms and rose tapers graced the tea table, the feature of which was the beautifully decorated birthday cake, finished with twenty-five rose candles. Mrs. J. Neate, regent, assisted Mrs. Ives in receiving the guests who were invited to the tea room by Miss Eleanor Thompson. Mrs. B. Docter opened the door to the visitors. Mrs. E. Robson, Mrs. W. A. Gilbert and Mrs. G. Watkins were conveners of the tea. Mrs W. C. Mikel, Mrs G. K. Graham, Mrs. R. A. Flynn, and Mrs. J. W. Kinnear poured tea and those who assisted were Mrs. D. Rowe, Mrs. A. E. Chaplin, Mrs. W. Strachan, Mrs. R. A. Backus, and Mrs. W. Stoneberg. Miss Jones and Miss Aylesworth delighted the guests with art of tea cup reading. The home-cooking table which proved such a successful part of the tea was in charge of Mrs. E. Robson, Mrs. W. A. Gilbert, Miss Helen Blair, and Mrs. G. Watkin, while the treasurer was Mrs. J. Thompson. Mrs. E. Lang was in charge of the sale of tickets on a knitting bag the lucky winner of which proved to be Mrs. J. B. Boyce.

A pretty Autumn wedding was solemnized at St. Paul's rectory, Kingston, Saturday evening, September 28, when Rev. E. Teakey united in marriage Verda Irene, second daughter of Mrs. Lewella Steacy and the late Robert Steacy, Mallorytown, and Stanley G. Fry, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. F. Fry, Plymouth, England.

The bride wore a pretty frock of Airforce blue with black accessories, a corsage of pink roses and baby's breath. The young couple were attended by Mrs. Thomas Boyd as matron of honor and Mr. Thomas Boyd as best man. The matron of honor wore a smart black ensemble with a corsage of yellow roses.

After the ceremony a reception was held at the home of Mrs. E. Lees, Bagot Street. The bride and groom will reside in Belleville, the groom being attached to the R.C.A.F., Trenton. Mr. and Mrs. Fry were the recipients of many beautiful and useful gifts.

SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKERS MEET

200 Officers and Teachers of Belleville Presbytery Discuss Problems

Stirling, Oct. 3.—Approximately 200 officers and teachers of Sunday schools in all parts of the Belleville Presbytery gathered at St. Paul's United Church, Stirling, on Wednesday evening, October 2nd., for the annual meeting of the Sunday School Workers Institute. Representatives from many pastoral charges through Hastings and Prince Edward Counties were present and leading churchmen of the Presbytery led in constructive discussion periods, open forums and education addresses. Previous to the opening a period of community singing was enjoyed under the leadership of R. A. Patterson, Wm. Reynolds and G. L. Clute who presided at the piano.

The worship period was conducted by the Stirling group under the leadership of J. L. Good, superintendent of St. Paul's S.S. and consisted of a brief song service, Scripture lesson and prayer. The presentation of the theme was carried out in a novel fashion by the members of the Holloway St. group who presented a broadcast entitled "Inspiration Please". An open forum dealing with the present day problems of the Sunday School teacher was led by Rev. R. H. Rickard B.A., M.R.E., of Colborne and interesting questions were set forth for discussion with many giving expression to constructive original thought. Under the chairmanship of Rev. W. G. Fletcher the meeting proceeded with a five minute address on Temperance Education by Rev. Dr. W. P. Fletcher B.A., Marmora, and also a five minute talk by Carl Campbell on Missionary Education.

Discussion Groups

Discussion groups dealing with various phases of Sunday School work were held on the following subjects and under the guidance of the leaders named. Children's graded lessons, Mrs. W. P. Fletcher; boys' work, Rev. E. D. Snelgrove, B.A., Queensboro; girls' work, Mrs. G. T. McKenzie, Plainfield; Administrative organization, Rev. R. H. Rickard, B.A., M.R.E. The closing address of the interesting session was delivered by Dr. W. P. Fletcher and Rev. A. M. Laverty closed with the Benediction. The program of this annual event is sponsored by the Religious Education Committee of the Belleville Presbytery and this year's interest and attendance were decidedly increased over previous events.

Mrs. Nancy Pyper is Unable to Visit City

Those in Belleville who had heard Nancy Pyper addressing the Rotary Club recently and who were looking forward to her visit tomorrow when she was to be guest speaker at the opening meeting of the Women's Canadian Club learned with regret that she found it necessary to cancel her engagement here. Mrs. Pyper's husband, C. B. Pyper of The Toronto Telegram, who has been overseas during the war, is returning to Canada this week end, suffering from a severe illness. Mrs. Pyper was obliged to postpone her visit to Belleville, and the Women's Canadian Club meeting for tomorrow was cancelled.

Fashion Flashes

JUST ASK to see the new reefers. They are smarter than ever. A typical model is a double-breasted reefer of gray woolen with big square pockets of black Alaska sealskin. Sealskin revers.

WOMEN DESIRE the smart dinner costume, and every designer is showing such models. A beauty is of black wool, the long, slim skirt slashed at one side. Worn with a yellow satin blouse embroidered with black sequins. Black woolen bolero is spattered with the paillettes.

Bladder Control

It used to be believed there was no use trying to teach a child not to wet himself until he was a year or two old. Now we know this is not true.

One of the reasons children, up to a few years ago, would wet their clothing up until they were two or so, was because they weren't taught anything else. Both mothers and children have had some mighty unhappy experiences over this matter of lack of control. The bad feature of it is that some children, left to learn to control their natural body functions by themselves, form habits that aren't broken until they are 10 or 12 years old. Any time you hear of a child over the age of seven or eight wetting the bed at night, you can pretty well decide that if the child had been trained when he was young, he never would have had to go through these humiliating experience.

You shouldn't wait beyond the age of five months to begin teaching the child something about bladder control. The first thing to do is to study the baby's body rythm, for the bladder has a rythm of its own, just as the bowels have. Very often we find that babies wet themselves just before and just after being fed. Anyway, the thing to do is learn when his bladder empties itself, and do just as you do in teaching bowel control—hold him over the chamber.

Bladder control is the harder of the two to teach, largely because emptying the bladder takes much less conscious effort. But even if it does take a long time, it is certainly well worth teaching him. Just remember, that in teaching the child to control his body functions, you are starting him on the right road to self control, and self management.

I used to be rather critical of the idea that babies could be taught not to wet themselves. Like a good many persons—many mothers included, I accepted diaper wetting as a perfectly natural thing with babies. Then only a few months after the Quintuplets were born, one of the nurses told me she was training the five of them not to wet themselves. I'm afraid I wasn't very much impressed. It was a few months later, though when the five of them were virtually 'dry babies' by habit. Bed wetting was an exceedingly rare thing with the Quins from their first years, and I give all the credit to that training in bladder control they got when they were only a few months old.

Wise Hostess Plans Definite Seating Order For Dinner Guests

That first impression your guests have on entering your dining room is of the greatest importance. Everything should be shining and welcoming, indicating that your plans have been carefully organised.

Before you summon your guests to dinner, you should give that important last survey of the table to see that all details are in order. The table, you note, has been artistically and accurately set. The chairs have been drawn up to the places. The water glasses have been filled. The candles have been lighted.

If you're giving an informal dinner, remember that you're the one who, at the moment your guests enter the dining room, must direct the seating. To be surely organized for that moment, you must have made a definite seating plan. The best way is to write it out and memorize it. If there are more than a few guests, you may either hold the seating plan as unnoticeably as possible in your hand, or you may make a small diagram on a card and put this at your place where you may quickly refer to it.

A sorry sight is the hostess who has given no thought to the seating of her guests and who, when she enters the dining room, says, with a sweeping gesture, "Oh, just sit anywhere." Another sure way of making guests uncomfortable and uneasy is for the hostess to look bewildered and say, "Oh, dear I had planned how you were to sit, but now I can't remember." This bad organization in seating arrangements is almost inevitably a prelude to a badly organized dinner and probably to a dull dinner.

Avoid this unpleasant uncertainty by having your diagram either in mind or in hand. Stand at your own place at table and seat your guests by telling each one where she or he is to sit: "Mrs. Allen, will you sit at Bob's right..Betty at his left—Dorothy here—Mr. Allen here at my right."

You have the charming opportunity of showing honor to certain of your guests, if you wish to, by placing the honored woman guest at the right of the host and her husband at your right. You can graciously indicate this placing when you say, "Mrs. Allen, will you sit at Bob's right," and "Mr. Allen, will you sit here at my right." Remember, too, that the "second in rank" are the ones at your left and at your husband's left.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Ask And Find Out

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I've been going with a girl for almost a year, off and on. I love her very much but I've never told her and don't believe she even suspects it.

Whenever I see her I ask her to go to a show or for a walk, but she never wants to do anything but sit in the parlor. Do you think I should go to see her any more? How can I find out of she likes me?

P. P. P.

The easiest way to discover whether a person likes you or not is to put the question. As you've never told this girl you care about her, perhaps she's waiting for some word to that effect before she agrees to accept your invitation.

One of the wisest of philosophers has said if a man were as hideous as Caliban, any woman would be gratified with a declaration of love from him.

Is 18-Year-Old Girl Too Young For Dates?

Dear Miss Fairfax:

Although I'm 18 years old, I'm very short and do not look my age. A certain boy of 20 has asked me to go out with him, but my mother thinks I'm too young, and don't look my age. I have been invited other times to go out with boys, but my parents never would allow it. Do you think that my height should have anything to do with accepting an invitation from a boy?

Anxious.

I've never before heard of height being considered in the question of dates. If the young man is desirable, I can't see any objection to a girl of 18 going out with him. As I've said so often in this column, it seems to me the wiser course for parents is to encourage their daughters to invite their young men friends to the house, so that they can look them over.

Unreasonably Strict Parents

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I'm a very unhappy 20-year-old girl. My parents accuse me of being a boy-chaser just because I like to go out walking with my girl friends, and Miss Fairfax, I'm innocent. I detest this form of recreation, and my parents distrust me and say I do the same as all other girls.

I've always tried to abide by my parent's wishes, don't drink, seldom smoke and occasionally have a date with a boy. Their distrust of me has even caused my friends to stop coming to the house.

Please tell me what to do to win back their confidence and understanding. I've thought of going to another city and make something of myself to show them that I am not what they think, but I don't seem to have the nerve. I'm so mixed up.

I have no one that I can really talk to. My two brothers come and go as they please. Please say something in your column which will be good for parents.

Unhappily signed.

It's too bad when parents take this attitude toward a girl who has never given them any cause to worry. And as it has been said more than once that there's no surer way of tempting a girl to do something foolish, like picking up strange men on the street and sneaking out, than by barricading her as if she were a problem girl.

To accuse a girl of something of which she is innocent has often made her decide that she might as well have "the game as the name."

Why Not Ask Him if He's Married?

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I've been going out with a young man for several months and a week ago found out he is married. We're both very fond of each other and it's more than just infatuation. But I can't believe he's married, because of the hours he keeps. His work keeps him from early morning until late at night, and besides that he comes to see me. Now how could he possibly be married? What can I do in a situation like this?

H. S.

For a married man to palm himself off as single and pay attention to a girl in that capacity is very dishonerable. The simplest thing to do under the circumstances is to tell the young man you heard he's married, and ask him if it's true. As to the queer hours he keeps, my dear, some married men keep very strange hours indeed. You can't judge by that.

Reception is Held For New Members Of Lodgeroom Church

Tweed—The historic Lodgeroom Church was filled on Sunday evening with worshippers who had gathered to participate in a reception service for thirteen young people of the community who were received into membership in the United Church by Rev. H. L. Morrison, pastor of Tweed United Church. The following young people comprised the group: Mabel McCaw, Florence McCaw, Vera Gunning, Margaret Gunning, Elizabeth Gordon, Madeline Kleinsteuber, Dorothy Kleinsteuber, Margaret Bateman, Clare Kleinsteuber, Lorne Gunning, Wilbur Bateman, Donald Bateman, Scott Bateman.

In conjunction with the service a baptismal service was conducted and the infant sons and daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Arnold Montgomery, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Reynolds, Mr. and Mrs. Lyman Holmes and Mr. and Mrs. Norman Thompson were baptized.

Rev. Morrison delivered a very fine address directed particularly to the young people.

Lodgeroom Church which was closed several years ago insofar as the conduct of Sunday services is concerned was built in 1885. For several decades it had administered to the spiritual needs of the people. It was fitting, that in this historic church, which is hallowed with the precious memories of early associations for many of the older folks, their sons and daughters should be received into membership of the United Church.

The evening service at Tweed United Church was withdrawn.

Rally Day was observed in the United Church Sunday School on Sunday morning when the members of the school attended church service in a body. The special Rally Day program was followed. Promotion exercises were held in several of the classes. A special message 'Serving the Lord with gladness' was delivered by the pastor Rev. H. L. Morrison.

A DAY of many surprises and sudden visitations may be read from the complicated chain of planetary configurations. Quite an unforeseen and breathtaking event may upset the usual routine, and demanded an abrupt about-face in plans, objectives and possibly environs and associates as well. There are rather peculiar and subtle aspects to confront, but since the mind is in fine condition, profound and shrewd, and the energies aggressive and forth-right, victory and definite success may be looked for. The purely personal relations are intimately involved, possibly in a romantic or emotional nature. Feminine influence is strong, beware of intrigues and duplicity.

Those whose birthday it is may not be surprised to encounter a year of the unforeseen, unpredictable and unexpected, with sudden uprootings or a definite change in plans and objectives. New places and contacts should be in order, with surprises deeply affecting the private as well as business life. These mysterious visitations will be successfully manipulated because of alert deep, shrewd and intuitive grasp of challenging situations. But be vigilant to intrigue and suspicious circumstances. The romantic or emotional life is profoundly involved, and may have happy and surprising denouements.

A child born on this day may have great talents and energies with much constructive ability and originality, but he may have some erratic or peculiar urges to off-set his highest accomplishments. These probably may be in the realm of science, adventure or romance.

Stirling and District

Stirling — Approximately seventy-five friends and neighbours gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Juby, Rawdon Township, on Friday night for a surprise party and presentation given the honoured couple previous to their departure from the neighbourhood. The early hours of the evening were taken up in a neighborly social period as friends chatted happily or indulged in games. Later the gathering was called to order and Rev. W. H. V. Walker introduced as chairman for the evening and there followed a brief program of entertainment. Musical contributions offered by Dorothy West playing her own accompaniment were enthusiastically received and Miss West responded willingly with encore numbers. Miss Phyllis Vance also assisted giving a splendid reading from the works of Edgar Guest. Arthur Duncan rendered a patriotic song and brief addresses were given by Messrs. John Bateman, J. B. Thompson and J. N. West.

Address Read by Mrs. Donnan

At this point the guests of honour, Mr. and Mrs. Juby, Harold and Roy and Pearla were given a place of prominence and Mrs. H. Donnan read an address as Messrs. John Bateman and Ewart Bailey presented Mr. and Mrs. Juby with a handsome modernistic floor lamp and a fine chair of the occasional type. Each of the other members of the household were also presented with appropriate gifts. Mr. and Mrs. Juby and their family are moving to Stirling village. Both expressed their extremely felt gratitude for the kindly gesture as did Harold and Roy and Pearla.

The address was signed on behalf of the community by: — John Bateman, Ewart Bailey, Thos. McGee, Ham. Donnan.

Refreshments were served by the ladies and the pleasant evening climaxed with all singing "For they are Jolly Good Fellows".

Rally Service at St. Andrew's

Extreme interest was taken in the Sunday morning worship at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church when a combined baptismal service and S. S. Rally was conducted under the direction of the minister, Rev. W. H. V. Walker. In the presence of a large congregation three children were presented for baptism, Elizabeth Sally May, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Fox; Ralph Bird Gay and James Ronald Gay, sons of Mr. and Mrs. C. Gay.

During the impressive service that followed junior members of the Sabbath School assisted in the musical part of worship offering two sacred numbers in fine fashion. Little Doreen Fox recited the 23rd Psalm and the address for the day was given by Mr. Lorne Johnston, assistant superintendent, of the Sabbath School. Basing his thoughts on a portion of the 30th Psalm, Mr. Johnston gave a timely message under the title "Darkness and Dawn". As in the ancient days when these famous words were penned they recorded a passing from days of sorrow to the dawn of joy and peace. We are now passing through "the night of weeping".

"But in our time we shall see that 'joy cometh in the morning', and the joy shall be even greater because of the anxiety through which we are now passing," declared the speaker.

The Stars Say

For Thursday, October 3

By GENEVIEVE KEMBLE

DESPITE some very excellent prospects and promises for success and accomplishment there may be several difficult situations and tenacious obstacles to cope with, judging by the conflicting force of important planets. Matters seem to be imbued with forces pulling two ways and vigorously, with expansive and ambitious projects hampered and restricted by stubborn opposition, limitation and selfish interests. But under shrewd and sagacious effort and with the support and sympathy of those in power there may be brilliant achievements.

Those whose birthday it is may encounter a year in which really great attainments and brilliant success may have to be wrested from a set of contradictory and thwarting influences. While there are expensive and ambitious objectives in sight yet there are tenacious obstacles, perhaps delays and sinister antagonism to cope with. But under shrewd manipulation and with the assured cooperation of those in prestige and influence there should be ultimate victory, together with much personal gratification.

A child born on this day will have many talents and abilities for vanquishing opposing forces. He should show creative ability, originality and bravery, combined with sagacity, shrewdness and much subtlety.

It's not only the news of foreign events and national affairs, of battle fronts and political struggles, that makes the newspaper so vital a force in people's lives. It's the news of happenings close at home, too. It's the news of what's going on in the town we live in, among the people we know...the intimate, personal things.

And only in the local newspaper can we satisfy our craving for the local news. For the newspaper first of all reflects the life of the community it serves...and each newspaper, like each community, has characteristics that distinguish it from others.

It's not surprising, in view of the eagerness with which people turn to their local newspapers every day, that advertisers who have anything to sell to any community...or group of communities or all communities...have found newspaper advertising so productive and so economical.

CHAPTER THIRTY-FIVE

The misery in Judith's eyes convinced Hugh that Michael Dudley—not Tex—was the man in this case, so he said earnestly: "Listen to me. If you love this guy, go after him. Cable him in Paris tomorrow; then write him an air mail letter. Tell him how you feel. Certainly he deserves that."

"What good would it do?" Judith's voice was low.

Hugh lost his patience. "You women! Personally, I feel sorry for Michael. He's the one who's had the jolt. You walked out on him and went to your ex-husband. Any guy with an ounce of pride would have done as he did."

Judith demurred faintly. "But Tex was dying!"

Hugh was solemnly silent. Judith stared at him for some time, before reaching a decision.

"Maybe you're right, Hugh. I'll try again to convince Michael," she promised.

* * *

Judith was up early. She wanted the cable to Michael Dudley ready so she could send it during her lunch hour. She was going back to work immediately.

Arriving at the shop before nine, the girls greeted Judith with some curiosity. There were rumors. . . . De Franc had learned that Michael had gone away. But she still wore his ring.

Judith was hard at work, checking stock, when De Franc arrived. He welcomed her with open arms. "Glad you're back. We're busy as can be."

Later when she went into his office to ask about ordering a frock for one of her customers, Dr Franc looked up from his desk with, "So you're back to work—to stay?"

"I'm afraid so."

She ignored the remark and went on about her duties.

At noon, De Franc caught her as she was going out to send the cable. "Have lunch with me."

"I've got an errand to do."

"Then meet me after."

Judith finally promised to meet him at a nearby soda fountain.

Having drawn an advance on her next week's salary, she felt almost happy as she walked down to the branch telegraph office. He'd answer, surely. Then she'd write.

De Franc was waiting for her, when she came back to the little lunch place. "You look all in. Can't have my girls like this. Wear your new clothes."

"All right."

"You haven't told me what happened."

"Nothing. Mr. Dudley went away. That's all."

De Franc shook his head. She made no explanation. After a pause he smiled grimly. "Not that I'm complaining. I'm glad. You'll marry me yet. I understand you. Dudley didn't."

"Please—"

But milady's maestro rushed on: "You see, I've been waiting years to find a woman who would fit into my life. Then you came along. It is providential."

Judith lashed out at him. "You are not in love—with me!"

"No?" He put his hand over hers. "I just think of it differently than you. After all, I'm a realist, as I've told you. Marriage is based on more than mere love. It's based on mutual accommodation—understanding. You can help me; I can help you."

"You've been kind to me, Mr. De Franc."

"Of course! Best possible foundation for marriage!"

"Nevertheless," Judith declared with finality, "I'm not going to marry you—or anybody!"

He smiled confidently. "Of course. Not now. But by next year you'll feel differently. That's where I'll come in. Now eat your lunch."

Then he turned to clothes as easily as though they had not been discussing their whole future. He was De Franc, the business man.

* * *

That night Judith sat up late to write the letter to Michael. First she finished one to her mother. The wedding had been put off, she explained. She'd tell her everything on a future visit.

The letter to Michael was more difficult than she had imagined. In black and white, it all sounded less convincing. Then she put the letter away to wait for the answer to her cable. She couldn't expect anything until the following day.

Judith was up early again the next morning—waiting. There was no word. The day passed in endless leaden hours. She was busy in the shop, but even that could not dull her apprehensions. . . . Suppose there was no answer? When night came, she dreaded to go home. But she was pulled toward her apartment on the vague hope that a message might be there. None was.

When Hugh telephoned that evening, her disappointment was so great he could hear it in her voice. Judith absolutely refused to let him see her. She did agree to meet him the following night. If there was no word by then, she could not stand the apartment another evening. She slept little that night.

In the morning Judith was exhausted. It was warm, unseasonably warm for April. At the shop everybody was kind.

Her ring weighed heavily on her finger. Before she went to meet Hugh, she asked De Franc to lock it in the office safe. He did so without any comment.

When Judith met Hugh at seven, he did not need to ask if she had heard from Michael. He knew when he saw her eyes. She toyed with her dinner. Afterward they went to the movies, for talk between them was suddenly difficult. It was pouring when they came out. He insisted on taking her home in a cab. As they drove along, Judith asked, "If he doesn't answer the cable, shall I send the letter?"

"Certainly! But wait, give him time."

Waiting . . . that was hardest of all!

The spring was endless to the girl, waiting from day to day in New York. Judith sent her letter, airmail. Michael must answer it. He could not ignore her sincere, detailed frantic appeal!

But Michael Dudley answered neither cable nor letter. Judith, in despair, sent a second letter. She tried to pretend that her messages had not been received.

That summer the other girls in turn went on their vacations, but Judith stayed at work. Her features sharpened. She was thinner. She looked older, De Franc decided, as he watched her. It was a kind of maturing process, at that. She was no longer the merely pretty girl he had known. She had finally grown up, was more maturely beautiful.

Because of the shop, Judith took infinite pains with her clothes. That helped to pass the evenings, keeping them in order. Now and then De Franc took her to dinner. She tried to be an entertaining companion, but her heart was not in it.

De Franc did not complain. Once he told her, "I'm still biding my time. You'll get over it. I can wait."

But she could not. . . .

Early in August, De Franc went to the mountains for three weeks. Judith did not think of a vacation. She could not have endured the idleness. But she felt relieved when De Franc was gone. It was good to be free of his prying eyes, his persistent proposals. . . .

Hugh Lanning, the reporter, was away with the ball team part of the time; but when he was in town, he saw Judith often. He did what he could. If De Franc hoped openly, Hugh waited silently for the time when Judith would begin to forget. Then one Monday, Mrs. Van Mathas came into the shop on a hurried expedition into town.

"Judith! I've been meaning to telephone you. I've wanted to have you down. My son, Dick, will be home next week-end. Will you come?" He can drive you down."

Judith hesitated. The week-end would bring back painful memories, but Mrs. Van Mathas insisted that, "There's a special reason I'm asking you. I'll tell you later. You look as though you needed some sun."

Judith promised. A week-end in the country would be heavenly—in any other place.

Of course, it was no longer necessary to stay close to the apartment. Judith felt now that a message from Michael would never come.

* * *

Dick Van Mathas was waiting for Judith on Saturday night as his mother had planned. She felt almost gay as the car slipped out through the heavy city traffic.

Dick took his hand off the wheel to explain. "By the way, I'm getting along fairly well with my flying. But one of these days I'm going into its executive end."

Dick looked older. He, too, had grown up. His new ship had been just what he needed. Odd how Tex's influence lived on. He had helped this potential playboy find himself.

Mrs. Van Mathas was waiting for Judith when they arrived. Judith had her old room which looked out over the Sound. Its fresh loveliness brought back memories which were disconcerting.

Mrs. Van Mathas, watching Judith, sighed. Putting her arms about her guest, she said, "I'm worried about you; indeed, I asked you down here for a reason, but" — Judith turned inquiring eyes on her hostess —"Mrs.—I mean Sonia is to be here tonight. She begged to see you."

"Did she?"

"You don't mind?"

"I'll be glad to see her."

Mrs. Van Mathas stood up with, "You're a fine girl, Judith."

When Judith came downstairs later, everybody was out on the terrace. They were to dine outdoors with the murmur of the Sound in their ears. As Judith came through the french doors, she saw Sonia, who came to meet her eagerly, saying: "Mrs. Van Mathas says we can have a few minutes together after dinner. I felt I must see you before I flew back west."

Sonia was in white, as lovely as ever, but there was something in her eyes which made Judith suddenly sorry for the golden girl. Judith noticed that Sonia' only jewelry was Tex's ring, the one Judith had sent to her.

When dinner was over, Judith and Sonia walked out into the rose garden. Judith waited. She could see the other woman was in a state of great emotion. Sonia stopped suddenly, her hands clenched.

"I'll never forgive myself for not going to Tex!" Sonia looked down, lost in sorrow. "You see, I loved him!"

Judith was silent.

"Tell me how he—" Sonia was begging for details. As gently as she could, Judith told her of those last hours with Tex.

"Then he didn't know I refused to come to him?"

"We didn't tell him."

Sonia sat down suddenly on a bench, burst into sobs. She caught Judith's arm. "I haven't had a happy day since. I didn't realize how much I cared. I was once so bitter against him. His drinking! And all!"

Sobs checked Sonia's grief; then she barely whispered, "To the end, he thought I would come . . . and I didn't. You say his last word was . . . my name . . ."

They sat in silence for a long time. Only Sonia's labored breathing broke the night's stillness until she remarked, "I'm trying to go on. I keep flying, hoping that maybe some day it will be curtains for me. I know that's weak. But life means nothing to me!" Sonia was bitter.

There was little Judith could say in comfort. But at length, she remarked: "You are not to blame for taking Tex from me. He was lost to me before that and I didn't know it. He loved you, Sonia. I know that now. Then I didn't understand."

Batting Splurge in Second Gives Columbus Grads Margin To Beat S. Hastings Combines

Team From Toronto Scores Six Runs in Frame on Healthy Clouting Mixed With Two Errors

SCORE IS 8-5

Joe Marsh Hurls Well in Relief Role, Allowing Only Two Runs in Seven Frames

A comedy of errors, followed by some lusty hitting on the part of the visitors saw the South Hastings "Combines" drop into baseball oblivion at the Fair Grounds yesterday when they went down to an 8 to 5 defeat at the hands of the Toronto Columbus Grads. It was the second consecutive victory of the Grads over the Combines in the intermediate "B" semi-finals in the O.B.A. play-downs. In winning the series in successive games the Columbus Grads advanced to the provincial Intermediate O.B.A. championship round.

The whole show blew up in the second inning, when the Grads and drove Chuckie Barriage off the and drove Chockie Barriage off the mound, but only after two bad errors had placed the Combines' hurler in a spot, that saw the Toronto batters make the best of in some timely and lusty hitting. Joe Marsh was rushed in from the outfield to fill the breach and it may well be said in some second-guessing, that it was Joe's day, for he turned in a sterling mound effort for the next seven innings, yielding up seven hits and but two runs in the last seven frames. McQuaid bobbled early in the second and Carson fumbled badly on an easy pop foul, that would have been a third out retiring the side with but two runs. It was after this that the Grads strode to the plate dressed in their Sunday batting togs and collected seven hits and six runs in that fatal second, and after three should have been retired.

Behind the eight-hit chucking of Elmer Croswell, their spot pitcher, the Columubs Grads turned in a sterling defensive game in every position on the field, the fielding efforts bordering on the sensational at times, while Thomas, Bush and Angelis wielded potent bats for the visitors.

St. Louis and Marsh hit to give the homesters one in the second, while Empson, Marsh and Barriage hit safely and Simpson helped with a sacrifice to score three in the third. Three were left stranded on the runways in the sixth and the Combines scored but one run on hits by Jarrell, Simpson and Barriage. The Grads counted three extra base hits, while Croswell held the home team to eight singles.

Sports Roundup

(By Eddie Brietz, Associated Press Sports Writer)

Cincinnati, Oct. 3—(AP) — Talk that Bucky Harris might shift from Washington to succeed Oscar Vitt at Cleveland had the gossips buzzing today. . . . Harris is reported interested because (a) he could get more money and (b) he thinks he could win a pennant with such guys as Feller, Boudreau and Mack around. . . . (Confidentially, he is a bit fed up on all those Cubans, Lithuanians, Venezuelans, etc., with which the Washington camp is littered.) . . . Here's a late flash from Gossip Row: If Harris does get the Cleveland job, his successor at Washington will be either Buddy Myer, Ossie Bluege or Rogers Hornsby. . . . Things are so hot Hornsby has asked at least two guys we could name to intercede on his behalf with Clark Griffith.

In turning back the Reds yesterday, old Bobo Newsom, the pride of Hartsville, S.C., threw 46 fewer pitches than Derringer, Moore and Riddle, the Cincinnati hurlers. . . The official figures show old Bobo chucked that apple exactly 102 times. . . . Derringer let loose 31 times, Moore 104 and Riddle, 13.

KING OF SWAT FOOLS FANS BY FANNING

Perhaps Babe Ruth missed this one, purposely to entertain the 2,500 youthful fans gathered at the New York World's Fair Academy of Sport for the final session of the baseball school. At any rate, the Bambino proved the major attraction as the former home run king showed the boys how to hit long ones. The boy behind the plate, Stephen Forman, 12, was mighty surprised when he opened his eyes and found the ball in his mitt.

Bobo Newsom Pawed Dust Around Pitching and Detroit Mowed Reds Down by 7-2

Five-Run Assault in Second Frame Enough to Blast Derringer From Hilltop

CAMPBELL HOMERS

Schoolboy Rowe and Bucky Walters Will be Pitching Choices for Today's Game

(By Gayle Talbot)

(Associated Press Sports Writer)

Cincinnati, Oct 3.— (AP)— It looked again today as though the National Legaue had over-matched itself as the Cincinnati Reds reeled under the impact of an opening 7-2 defeat by the Detroit Tigers and sought desperately to come back.

Again it looked as though boys had been sent out to tackle grown men. Today's game at Crosley Field was only the second of the big series that decides the championship, yet the experts, a majority of whom picked Cincinnati to win, already were shaking their heads and wondering what could have brought them to make such a cockeyed choice.

The one hope of the Reds to avert a rout probably as disastrous as that they suffered a year ago at the mauling bats of the New York Yankees rested tocay in the stout right arm and cool pitching head of Bucky Walters.

If Walters could stop the Tigers and square the series before the two clubs switched to Detroit for the next three battles starting tomorrow then there might be chance for the locals. The Reds looked bad in every way yesterday as the Tigers blasted Paul Derringer from the hill with a five-run assault in the second inning and then went on to win as they pleased.

It was obvious that Manager Bill McKechnie's boys had nothing resembling a batting punch as Bobo Newsom pawed dust around the pitching mound and mowed them down.

Rowe Likely to Pitch

Walters' opponent today was the Tigers' towering Schoolboy Rowe, who made a sensational comeback the past season after a trip back to the minors with a lame arm. Rested and primed for what figured to be his one big effort of the series, Rowe promised to be fully as effective as Newsom was yesterday.

McKechnie refused to give up, naturally, but Bill must be beginning to wonder if he's lived a proper life. Yesterday's was the ninth straight World Series defeat suffered by Clubs under his management. The Yankees trounced his 1938 Cardinals four straight and served his Reds the same bitter dish last Autumn. Now the Tigers have taken up where the Yankees left off.

The Reds still were sadly crippled, with Catcher Ernie Lombardi and Second Baseman Lonnie Frey on the bench, and it looked increasingly doubtful that either would get into the play-off at all. There was no real reason to believe that their absence seriously influenced yesterday's one-sided result.

Eddie Joost, Frey's replacement, made two of the Reds' eight blows off Newsom and didn't bungle a chance afield. Veteran Jimmy Wilson caught well enough, too, though his batting naturally was weaker than might reasonably have been expected of Lombardi.

Ontario All-Stars Defeat B. C. Squad For Junior Honors

New Westminster, B.C., Oct. 3 (CP)—Ontario All-Stars staved off a great closing rally by the British Columbia All-Stars to win 24-21 Wednesday night and capture the Canadian Junior Lacrosse championship and the Minto Cup last won by the Mimico, Ont., Mountaineers.

The Ontario youngsters took the best-of-five series three games to two after spotting the Pacific Coast team the first two games. British Columbia won 16-13 and 23-21 last week, then Ontario came back with 19-11 and 19-12 victories before earning the decision in Wednesday's close battle.

The eastern team whipped in eight goals in the first period before British Columbia marksmen found the net and the series seemed to be settled then but the coast players rallied and finally drew level in the third quarter only to have Ontario go ahead again 17-16 as the quarter ended. The first quarter ended 9-3 for Ontario and the half-time score was 11-6.

The British Columbians finally went ahead for the first time in the game at 20-15 after 5-32 of the fourth quarter but Ontario came right back with five straight goals, three of them by Jimmy Gair to retain the cup for Eastern Canada.

Gair shared scoring honors with his teammate, Bobby Goldham, each with seven goals. Mike Cunningham had three counters for Ontario while British Columbia's leading scorers were Jimmy Lang and Phillips, each with four. Gordon Arrell counted twice.

World "Serious" Sidelights

(By Fritz Howell, Associated Press Sports Writer)

Cincinnati, Ohio, Oct. 3—(AP)—World "serious" sidelights: If you think Cinci Nat. Reds aren't in a serious predicament, just take a look at the record. (In case you don't know, the Reds lost the series opener yesterday to Detroit, 7-2).

Well, to delve into history a bit, the club that won the opening game of 36 previous series went on to take the title 25 times, which definitely puts the Reds on the short end. And should they lose today they're practically out of it, for teams losing the first two contests have been beaten out in 17 of 18 years. Only the Yanks of 1921 annexed the first two games and then lost the series.

While Manager Bill McKechnie coaches at third base for the Reds, the long, lean, lanky lad in the first base box is Harry (Hank) Gowdy of Columbus, hero of the most sensational series ever played. Hank was catcher for the Boston Braves back in 1914 when that club in last place on July 19, won 60 of the last 76 games to take the flag by 10 1-2 contests. Hank caught all four games of the world series, beating Philadelphia Athletics four straight in one of the sport's greatest upsets. And Hank, who a few years later became the first big leaguer to enlist in the First Great War, banged a homer in the ninth inning of the third game to swing victory to the Braves.

BURRARDS READY FOR SEMI-FINAL SERIES TONIGHT

MEET CORNWALL

Winners of This Series Will Likely Meet St. Catharines for Dominion Title

Montreal, Oct. 3 (CP)—Vancouver Burrards went through a light workout today in preparation for tonights opening of their best-of-three semi-final series with Cornwall Seniors. Winners of the series meet St. Catharines or Brampton for the Mann Cup and the Canadian lacrosse championship.

The Vancouver boys expressed themselves as pleased with the forum layout, and Coach Lee Dickinson said he found the floor in good shape. They appeared to have lost none of their pep despite the long train journey to Montreal.

Coach Dickinson couldnt see anything but a Burrard victory, and as a matter of fact neither could most of the fans. Dickinson made it plain that his squad would be out to take the series in two straight in order to squeeze in two day's rest before tackling the St. Catharines - Brampton winners starting Monday.

"It's pretty hard for us to say we will sweep the series against Cornwall, but from all reports we have heard, we should come through," he said.

Many fans were not quite willing to concede Burrards a two-straight victory, but most of them gave the Vancouver squad the edge on the series, although they concede that the Braves are the best team to represent the Quebec Lacrosse Association in some time.

Cornwall Has Good Team

Cornwall, Ont., Oct. 3 (CP)—Cornwall Braves, champions of the Quebec Lacrosse Association, will throw a well-balanced mixture of veterans and youngsters against Vancouver Burrards, Western Canada titleholders, in the best-of-three game Canadian Lacrosse senior semi-finals starting at Montreal tonight. Montreal was chosen because there is no suitable playing surface available here.

Playing Coach Jock Dalbec's team is entirely home-brew. Six Juniors stepped from the city leagues to the Seniors this season and the squad was strengthened by addition of Lawrence Deebank, rangy star of former years now in the Royal Canadian Air Force. Deebank, stationed at Ottawa, was granted permission to play with his old club.

All members of the team are eligible for Dominion finals if the Braves survive the semi-final round. They are: Jock Dalbec, Rose Dalbec, Murdie Stewart, Doug. Nicholson, Henry Payette, Lawrence Deebank, Andy Anderson, Dort Derosiers, Joe Gosselin, Cy Derosiers, Euclid Contant, John Dupras, Luke Payette, Edgar Lauzon.

BALMY BEACHERS LOOKING BEYOND O.R.F.U. TITLE

Alex Ponton Thinks His Team Can Win Eastern Canadian Title

READY FOR ALERTS

Final Heavy Drills Over Before Opening Games on Saturday

By The Canadian Press

It needs a little reading between the lines, but Alex Ponton's declaration on the plunging power of his Balmy Beach squad could be interpreted today that the quiet-spoken mentor has something more in mind than an Ontario rugby football union title this season.

The Beaches, since their brilliant exhibition victory over Toronto Argonauts Saturday, already are strong favorites for the O.R.F.U. crown as the teams taper off training for the opening matches this weekend. But Ponton's statement covered more territory than that.

"They can talk about Argos, Ottawa and the rest of them, but I doubt if anywhere you'll find the plungers and reserve plunging power that we have on this club," he said after putting his boys through a workout last night. "No matter where we lose strength through injuries, we have someone to fill that gap creditably."

Plunging, admittedly, is only one phase of the game but it's the one that gets the ball up the field. Besides that, the team looked fit in every department as it went through its final heavy drill last night before their league opener at Toronto Saturday against Hamilton Alerts.

Through Final Drills

Two more arguments that Ponton's plungers will meet in their road to an O.R.F.U. championship clash in the league's other match when Sarnia Battery, replacing the Sarnia Imperials, meets another military team from Camp Borden meanwhile. New entrants in the league, both are shaping up strongly in practice.

Calculated to be even stronger arguments, however, the teams of the Interprovincial circuit also are tapering off their training for the Oct. 5 season inaugurals. All went through their final heavy drills last night before the opening games that pit Toronto against Montreal and Ottawa Rough Riders against Hamilton Tigers.

The champion Rough Riders wound up their pre-season practices with a three-hour running, passing and defensive drill. Club officials announced after the drill that inside Leo Seguin, who has a broken bone in his hand, definitely will not play Saturday.

Montreal ran through a short signal drill and then began a practice game between two squads that lasted the better part of an hour. Thirty eight men were out for the drill.

NEWARK BEARS WIN FIRST GAME OVER COLONELS

Int. League Champions Tee Off for 15 Hits and 28 Bases

SCORE IS 10-3

George Washburn Allows Only Six Hits in Winning Contest

Louisville, Ky., Oct. 3.— (AP)—Attention, Cincinnati Reds: The American Association champs aren't faring so well, either against power hitters.

Louisville Colonels got a closeup of the batting strength of Newark, International League playoff champions, last night in the first game of the Junior World's Series and bowed 10-3.

Newark bombarded the offerings of three Colonel flingers for 15 hits and 28 bases while Louisville, rated a "good field, no hit" club, was able to nick George Washburn for only six blows. However, the six were good for 13 bases—a better bases-per-hit average than Newark's.

The Bears sewed up the game with a four-run blast in the fifth that sent Tot Pressnell, the Colonels' starting pitcher, to the showers and brought on Al Hollingsworth. He later was succeeded by Freddie Shaffer.

Between the Lines

with Ken J. Colling

The old ball game bowed out, but not exactly gracefully, in Belleville yesterday when the South Hastings "Combines" dropped an 8 to 5 decision to Carmen Bush's Toronto Columbus Grads directly as the result of a comedy of errors, followed by some lusty hitting on the part of the "Hog Town" batters in the second frame when they scored a salvo of six runs. Like all games lost there are a few "IFS" today, but the play that hurt mostly was Jack Carson's muff of Vetore's easy pop foul, with two out in the second inning. It was after this miscue that the Grads put the gad to Barriage and shelled him from the hilltop, but as we pointed out, had Carson made sure and "squeezed" that pop-up there would have been two away and Joe Marsh might not have been called upon to turn in such a brilliant effort as relief hurler. However, we might add the Grads are an exceptionally good defensive team for the average intermediate club.

The Grads have their spot pitcher, Elmer Croswell, sterling support in his eight-hit effort, but the orchids of the day should go to relief pitcher Joe Marsh, who was rushed in from the outfield to halt the onslaught of the Grads in the second. Joe did a smart piece of relief hurling as he left the visitors down with seven hits and but two runs for the remaining seven frames. Besides pitching superbly, Mrs. Marsh's little boy Joey helped himself to two hits and drove in a run. In some manner or other the Grads managed to get at least one aboard in every inning but Marsh only laboured the harder and was fogging 'em faster in the last inning than when he ran in from left field to pull a "Dutch hero of Harlem" act and stop the flood. The baseball fans of the community should be indebted to Dr. Jack Empson, through whose efforts a couple of ball games were made possible here this year and although yesterday saw finis written to the diamond game locally, "Doc" Empson proved to many there are some better-than-average intermediates along the shores of the Bay of Quinte yet.

Gloating over the success of his softball nine player-manager, ace-publicity man and sports editor George Campbell, of Oshawa, takes much pride in his team's committee room near-champions and whips home with the following lash-out. George says:—"We would like to say a friendly "Phooey" to our fellow scribes from Belleville and Peterboro. Ken Colling of Belleville, gave us the haw-haw over the "called game" in Oshawa, out of which a protest was won by Oshawa over C.P.E. and he termed us worst cry-babies than Cleveland and inferred we "couldn't take it." As an umpire, he should know that you couldn't play a ball game in the dark. Our Peterboro friend—from his long-distance view in the Liftlock City, openly claimed the Toronto official was absolutely right in awarding the game and that a protest was useless. To both Kennie and Fred Craig—may we remind them there was a game in Hamilton last Saturday."

Do you remember when Reg Noble, veteran National Hockey League player, was given his unconditional release by Montreal Maroons seven years ago today after spending only one season with the now defunct red shirts. During the season previous—his 16th year in professional hockey—Noble was released by Detroit Red Wings, the club he joined in 1927.

We cannot vouch for the authenticity of this story, but it was related to us by a local duck hunter, who claimed by all that was true and holy, the story was true. It seems two local nimrods welcomed in the duck season early Tuesday morning in a hide near Point Anne. After long hours of peaceful waiting Old Sol poked its tip over the eastern horizon, but still they waited. Soon along flew a Teal, of the green-wing variety, and both hunters blasted away. Down came the wounded duck hurtling into the bay like a damaged 'plane. When it reached the water the duck was still fluttering, so the mighty hunters let pour another blast of lead to make sure their querry did not escape, though wounded. When they put out in the ducking boat however, they reached the Teal just in time to see it sink beneath the surface, so filled with lead pellets, that the additional metal weight sank the duck to the bottom of the good old Bay of Quinte. And strangely enough it was their only shot of the day.

Chalk up nine consecutive victories for the American League champions in the last three years of world series play without having suffered a single defeat. Yesterday the Detroit Tigers unleased their powerhouse in a salvo of runs, five to be exact, to cinch the first game of the "serious" and go on to win 7-2. "Oom Paul" Derringer bore the brunt of that second inning Tiger attack and took the long walk to the club house wondering just what had descended upon Crosley Field and exploded a bombshell. The official box score showed that the Tigers only got two more hits than the Reds, but six more runs. Not only did the Tigers bunch their hits in the second to score five, but they blasted long range hits, York and Campbell, in the fifth to add two more. That is power. Although Derringer did not tire himself yesterday, it looks like Walters for the Reds and Rowe to make it two-in a row for the Tigers today.

Sport Spice -- Since 1903 there have been 208 games of baseball played, the American League winning 118 and the National only 87 ....Of course there were three tie games to make up the balance .... Rookie Vern Olsen scattered seven hits nicely as the Cubs beat the White Sox 8-2 to even the Chicago city series at one game each yesterday...Both the Columbus Grads and the Tigers had something in common yesterday, or was it in the air?.. We refer to that second inning barrage which won for both nines even though in slightly different categories....In that fatal second yesterday Derringer only slipped one strike past eight successive Tiger batters, which would indicate the Detroits were really mawling that spheriod, once they dug in....Congratulations to the Oshawa ball club in their 3 to 2 win over Niagara Falls in the first game of the senior O.B.A. finals, although we observe they were out-hit.

Series notes:

The Tigers had nothing but praise for the work of Bill Klem, "the old arbitrator," behind the plate—said it was one of the best umpiring jobs they saw all season. The Reds gave the veteran Jimmy Wilson a handsomely engraved watch for stepping in and catching the last eight games in the pennant drive, after Ernie Lombardi was hurt. . . . Before yesterday's game scalpers were asking $50 for a pair of tickets—at one hotel the price was $70. . . . Young Spike Briggs, Vice-President of the Tigers, told Del Baker: "Beat 'em four straight if you can—to hell with the money." Whoever heard of a magnate talking like that?

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Oct. 3 (CP).—While moving in light volume, stocks recorded moderate strength in the early session on Toronto Exchange today. The indices for the mining and the industrial issues were up narrowly at noon and the western oil index was unchanged. Volume was off from that of the two preceding sessions at 68,000 shares for the first three hours.

Gold stocks were the strongest group and gains were showing at early afternoon for Little Long Lac, Macassa, Sylvanite, Hollinger and Sladen.

Textiles and senior oils ruled firmer and the food, steel and utility groups showed little net change. The western oil market was sluggish. Home Oil came out at 2.05 and Pacalta was a fraction lower at 6.

WALL STREET

New York, Oct. 3—(AP)—Traders cashed sufficient profits in today's stock market to keep further rallying tendencies within bounds.

Steels and Rails led the list on another forward move on early dealings which were fairly fast. Gains of a point or so, however, subsequently were reduced for some groups. The pace slowed and, near the fourth hour, trends were a shade uneven.

Stocks in front most of the time included U.S. Steel, Chrysler, Douglas Aircraft, Du Pont, Dow Chemical, N.Y. Central, Pullman American Telephone, Studebaker and Sears Roebuck.

Canadian issues were fairly steady. Hiram Walker advanced one point and Dome Mines and McIntyre improved fractions. Distillers Seagram dipped 1-4. Canada 4s, in the Bond Market, held steady.

N. Y. Times Urges Passport Requirement To Visit U. S. Be Rescinded

New York, Oct. 3.—(CP)—The New York Times said today the requirement of the United States Department of State that Canadians carry passports to visit the country is an "obvious mistake" and urged that it be rescinded.

Commenting editorially upon last week's tour of Canada's defence facilities by a party of United States newspapermen, made at the invitation of Canadian publishers, headed by W. Rupert Davies, president of The Canadian Press. The Times said the visit "has forged a new link in the stout chain of friendship between these two American nations".

It went on:—

"The results of the tour can be measured in much information gained and valuable lessons learned. It is clear that good deal of work will be required to synchronize the defence programs of the two countries. Standardization of specifications for military, naval and air equipment is obviously desirable. Not only would such standardization aid Canada in her mighty war effort; it would facilitate the mutual defence of North America.

"Nor should our mutual efforts be limited to military co-operation. . . . .The passport requirement should be rescinded and every effort should be made to correlate and complement the activities of the two nations".

ATLANTIC FORCES

known as "the Patrol Force, United States Fleet", will consist of more than 125 vessels and the necessary compliment of aircraft.

There was no indication in navy circles whether creation of the new force had any connection with the mutual assistance pact among Berlin, Rome and Tokyo. An Atlantic Squadron has been in existence two years, but the new organization is designed to strengthen it and unify its command.

Mayor La Guardia said at Boston last night that the work of the joint Canadian-American Defence Board had reduced the problems of New England's defence "to a minimum".

La Guardia, chairman of the American section of the board, expressed some concern about the Pacific.

"By reason of what happened in Europe a few days ago," he said, referring to the axis pact, "we must expedite plans for west coast defence."

WIVES ORDERED TO LEAVE

Shanghai, Oct. 3 (AP).—Wives of all American employees of the Standard Vacuum Oil Company were reported today to have been ordered to sail for the United States by the first available boats. No reason for the order was given, but observers expressed belief it was due to disturbed Japanese-American relations.

Top-Grade Eggs Ease 1 Cent a Doz.

Traders awaiting the nine cities' stock report was partly responsible for the slow dealings on the butter market. The report indicated modest improvement in the statistical position of the market during last month. This was looked upon with favor by the trade as it was pointed out that in September last year a particularly heavy buying movement occurred on fears of a possible butter shortage because of the outbreak of war. Total amount of butter held in the nine principle cities of Canada on Oct. 1 was reported at 41,371,129 ponds, compared with 40,629,618 pounds a year ago, an increast of 741,511 pounds. The increase on last year on Sept. 1 was 1,060,000 pounds Small lots of Ontario No. 1 Ontario creamery solids sold at 24 1-2 cents per pound. Continued light offerings reflected the lack of selling pressure, which kept prices steady.

Fairly good buying in the morning session of the egg market disappeared in afternoon dealings, and the three top grades eased one cent per dozen in the retail section. Prices to shippers were not changed but the tendency was for lower levels.

go. A few got out of Norway with their regular uniforms but most escaped in anything but a uniform. For the moment some are wearing the same khaki serge battle dress as the Canadian Active Service Force, the only identification being a tiny Norwegian flag on one sleeve at the shoulder. The word Norway is on the opposite sleeve.

Just recently, however, arrangements were made that these Norwegian fliers would wear the "Air Force Blue" uniform of the Royal Canadian Air Force and the R.A.F. They will have their own wings on their chests and the word Norway on one sleeve at the shoulder.

The officers administering "Little Norway" expect to have another 150 Norwegians from various parts of the world join them within the next two weeks. After that, they expect to have a steady trickle of men joining them here, going through their training and refresher courses, then leave by squadrons to work in collaboration with the R.A.F.

They have their own planes on order in the United States. As soon as deliveries begin in quantity, they expect to be ready to send completely equipped and manned squadrons overseas.

From then on, it will be a steady process.

CHURCHILL

Viscount Caldecote Chief Justice.

Secretary for the Dominions—Viscount Cranborne, succeeding Viscount Caldecote, who replaces Lord Hewart as Lord Chief Justice of England. Lord Cranborne is 47 and Under-Secretary at the Foreign Office when Anthony Eden was Secretary of State and resigned with his chief over the attempts to appease Mussolini.

President of the Board of Trade—Oliver Lyttleton, succeeding Sir Andrew Duncan. He is 47 and has no seat in the House of Commons. Since the outbreak of war he has been Controller of Non-ferrous Metals in the Ministry of Supply.

Minister of Supply — Sir Andrew Duncan, succeeding Mr. Morrison. He is one of Britain's big industrialists.

Minister of Transport—J. T. C. Moore-Brabason, succeeding Sir John Reith. He is a pioneer motorist and aviator and holds the No. 1 pilot's certificate issued by the Royal Aero Club. In parliament he is known for his independent views and was particularly outspoken during the Baldwin administration against the lack of armaments.

Minister of Works and Buildings and First Commissioner of Works—Sir John Reith. This new portfolio may be expanded eventually into a Ministry of Reconstruction but its exact status has not been defined by the prime minister. Sir John, who is a former general manager of the British Broadcasting Corporation, also is made a Baron, necessitating his transfer to the House of Lords.

Added To War Cabinet.

In addition Mr. Churchill announced that Sir Kingsley Wood, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Ernest Bevin, Minister of Labor, have been added to the war cabinet, making it an eight man board with an average of 59½ years.

Many political observers are surpriced by the fact that David Lloyd George is not included in the government changes and that Viscount Halifax remains Foreign Secretary. In recent weeks there has been a growing cry against Lord Halifax, who still is associated in many minds with Mr. Chamberlain's abandoned appeasement policy. Rightly or worngly, he has been blamed by many men for the Dakar withdrawal and with attempts to placate Japan in the Far East.

From the political viewpoint one of the most significant moves was the inclusion of Mr. Bevin in the war cabinet. This increased Labor's voice in the prosecution of the war through the medium of the one-time street-car driver and big boss of the transport union. Mr. Bevin has a dynamic personality and many regard him as sure to be prime minister if he remains in politics.

Resignation No Surprise.

Mr. Chamberlain's resignation came as no surprise to political circles. His health has not been good for several months and he underwent an abdominal operation. Since his return to active duty it had been apparent that his strength was not equal to his onerous responsibilities.

Mr. Chamberlain was prime minister during one of the most momentous periods in British history, from the spring of 1937, when he succeeded Stanley (now Earl) Baldwin, to the spring of 1940. He worked and slaved for peace through his policy of appeasement and became known as the "Man of Munich" when Britain, France, Germany and Italy signed the agreement over Czecho-Slovakia.

Resigned May 10

Mr. Chamberlain announced Britain's declaration of war against Germany on the quiet Sunday morning of Sept. 3, 1939. He resigned his office May 10, 1940, when his government was almost beaten in the House over its conduct of the Norwegian campaign, but at Mr. Churchill's request entered his cabinet as Lord President of the council.

Mr. Chamberlain may resign also the leadership of the Conservative party and if he does it probably will go to Mr. Churchill.

In leaving the political arena to return to private life, Mr. Chamberlain expressed his "unshaken confidence" that under Mr. Churchill's leadership Britain "with her allies and associates will succeeded in overcoming the forces of barbarism which have reduced a great part of Europe to a condition little better than slavery."

In reply, the Prime Minister expressed admiration for Mr. Chamberlain's aid and said, "You did all you could for victory."

Sir John Anderson takes Mr. Chamberlain's place in the war cabinet and his office of Lord President of the council.

Besides Sir John Anderson, Mr. Bevin and Sir Kingsley Wood, the other war cabinet members now are Mr. Churchill, Lord Halifax, Lord Beaverbrook, Minister of Aircraft Production; Clement Attlee, Lord Privy Seal; and Arthur Greenwood, minister without portfolio.

Lord Hewart, whose resignation as Lord Chief Justice is to be effective Oct. 12, is made a Viscount.

Press Comment

First comment on the shake-up came from the Press Association, which said Mr. Bevin's appointment "should strengthen the Premier's war team".

"Some of the changes made by Mr. Churchill are certainly unexpected, but Mr. Bevin's inclusion in the war cabinet is no surprise to those in touch with opinion at Westminster," the Agency said.

The Press Association's lobby correspondent described the Cabinet changes as a "sweeping ministerial reconstruction" and remarked:—

"It is a significant fact and indicative of efficient prosecution of the war that the Ministers of the three fighting services have been left to carry on their work."

Government Strengthened

Referring to the retirement of Mr. Chamberlain, the Agency said: "In all parts of the House of Commons, whatever views are held as to his policy, there will be regret at the departure from Downing Street of Mr. Neville Chamberlain and hope that his health will be restored soon".

The lobby correspondent for Reuters News Agency said the general ewwect of the cnanges g eral effect of the changes would be to strengthen the government.

Sir Andrew Duncan's appointment, he said will "please industrialists and politicians alike and give an added impetus to production", and Mr. Lyttleton's will be "well received".

Herbert Morrison, as Minister of Home Security, he continued, will have a "more popular appeal" than Sir John Anderson under prevailing conditions.

"That popular appeal," he said, "will tend to grease the wheels of a very heavily loaded machine".

His letter of resignation, addressed to Prime Minister Churchill under date of Oct. 1, read:-

"My Dear Winston:-

"When I returned to London six weeks ago after my operation I hoped to be able steadily to increase my capacity for work until I could answer any call you might wish to make upon me.

"Unhappily this hope was not realized and the minor difficulties that so often supervene after an operation, together with the unusual stress of wartime conditions, combined to cause progress in a backward instead of a forward direction.

"Since I have been back in the country my condition has considerably improved, but it has become evident to me that it will be a long time before I could hope to be able to perform the duties which are essential for a member of the war cabinet.

Reasons For Resigning

"In these circumstances I feel bound in the national interest to ask you to release me from my present responsibilities and to submit my resignation to the King for his Majesty's approval.

"I would like to add an expression of my warm appreciation of the kindness and consideration you have consistently shown me since the formation of your government and of my unshaken confidence that under your leadership this country, with her Allies and associates, will succeed in overcoming the forces of barbarism which have reduced a great part of Europe to a condition little better than slavery.

"Yours ever, Neville Chamberlain."

Churchill's Reply

Mr. Churchill's reply:-

"My Dear Neville:-

"I have for some time past feared that you would be forced to relinquish the struggle you have made to carry on in spite of physical stresses under the hard conditions of the times. I and all your colleagues have admired your unshaken nerve and persevering will. The help you have given me since you ceased to be my chief tided us through what may well prove to be the turning point of the war.

"You did all you could for victory. If you now tell me you must fall out of the line, I cannot resist your claim.

"The loss of your services makes it necessary for us to reform our ranks and fill the gap as best we can.

"We have been associated as our fathers were before us in the ups and downs of politics, now together, now apart, but I look back upon this stern year of comradeship with feelings of the deepest respect and regard for you.

"I trust that having put down your pack you will find your health and strength restored and that we shall rejoice together in the better days that are to come.

"Yours ever,

"Winston S. Churchill.

GERMANS FAIL

communications, at oil targets, and at "invasion ports" on the French and Belgian coasts.

Last night for the first time the use by a German raider of shrapnel bombs was reported in a town in southeast England. The bombs killed one man and injured others, damaging houses considerably.

In the same general area, several "Molotoff breadbasket" incendiary bombs burst over a famous boys' school early today, starting a roof fire which was extinguished quickly.

Six Daylight Raids

The nightly raid on London began on schedule just at the dinner hour, after six assaults during the day, all of which were beaten off. For the second time since the "all-out" raids started almost four weeks ago, an all-clear signal sounded shortly before midnight, and there was a period of uneasy quiet.

The raiders returned a short time later, and another alarm sounded.

Other parts of England and Scotland also were subjected to the steady pounding of the bombers, which were supported for a time by big German guns on the French coast shelling the Dover area.

Incendiary bombs were dropped in two places in Scotland, the Air Ministry reported, but little damage was caused, while high explosive bombs dropped there damaged a building and caused a small number of casualties.

Several fires were started by incendiaries in northwest England, but all were reported under control. Three houses were destroyed.

Ten German planes were shot down during the day's incessant raiding, while one British plane was lost. One German plane was shot down during night operations.

NAZI OIL PLANTS,

along the channel, attacking the often-bombed ports of Ostend, Calais, Cherbourg and Ushant.

Other objectives listed as attacked included oil plants at Stettin, Hamburg and Bottrop, a freight yard at Cologne and a railway junction near Hamm. Bombs also were dropped on several German airdromes, the ministry said.

British losses in the raids were two planes.

Seventeen Killed, Germans Say.

Amsterdam (via Berlin), Oct. 3 (AP).—A dispatch approved by German officials today claimed seventeen persons were killed and twenty wounded at Haarlem near Amsterdam, this morning in an aerial bombardment which was described as the worst since the German invasion last May.

Fifteen bombs attributed to British planes, brought two air raid alarms.

(There was no immediate British comment.))

Two dwellings were wrecked and houses in ten streets hit, the dispatch said. Two garages and a storehouse were burned.

It was claimed that in the countryside bombs fired approximately 120 acres of woods and meadowland.

HEROISM

Orders Guns on Party

D'Argenlieu shouted a quick warning to his officers, then leaped into the boat himself just as it pulled away from the quay.

Meanwhile the young ensign who had greeted the party with drawn revolver jumped aboard a small trawler, ordering its machine guns on the party.

The momentary hesitation of the gun crew gave the De Gaulle delegation time to reach the outer limits of the harbor where they came under heavy fire from other machine guns and rapid fire cannon on the harbor moles.

Although seriously wounded in the thigh, with blood soaking his white uniform, D'Argenlieu stood erect under the withering fire.

Once the outer harbor was cleared, D'Argenlieu executed a smart 90-degree left turn and calmly headed for the escort vessel Savorgnan de Brazza which stood dimly outlined in the fog-blanketed sea.

It was on September 23 when the Savorgnan was cruising six miles off Dakar that the white-flagged delegation put out. There were two small boats.

In the first were unarmed parliamentary officers, in full dress colonial uniform under command of D'Argenlieu, who is a priest in civil life.

In the second were non-coms and escort sailors, all unarmed.

Fifteen minutes after they left the destroyer and made for the port the first shot of the battle to follow was fired when anti-aircraft guns on the French battleship Richelieu opened up on an allied plane dropping De Gaulle proclamation calling on a Senegalese to rally to his flag.

What happened in the next three days now is history.

Unoccupied Sections of France Will Suffer 'Severe Privation' During the Winter Says Writer

New York, Oct. 3 (AP)—Lloyd Lehrbas, veteran Associated Press war correspondent, declared Wednesday that unoccupied sections of France would "suffer very severe privation" during the coming winter due to lack of food and fuel supplies.

Returning from Europe on the Atlantic Clipper, Lehrbas, whose coverage of the bombing of Warsaw at the outset of the war won him a Pulitzer prise committee honorable mention, said that the day he left Vichy new and severe food restrictions were put into effect.

Butter, eggs, milk, animal and vegetable oils and fuel, he said, were "almost unobtainable in the open market and whenever a dealer in the unoccupied section managed to get in a supply long lines formed and people waited hour after hour to make very limited purchases."

Under the latest restrictions, he added, persons were allowed to purchase a maximum of 65 grams (approximately 2 1-2 ounces) of meat, 350 grams of bread, 17 grams of sugar and five grams of coffee a day.

"Sugar, coffee, chocolate, and many other items were almost unobtainable," Lehrbas continued, "mainly because of poor transportation facilities, German requisition and purchase of supplies and the effects of the British blockade."

Vichy Crowded With People

Lehrbas declared that Vichy, normally a summer resort but now the seat of the Petain Government, was crowded with people, its four or five large hotels jammed and its 200 or more small hotels or inns similarly filled.

"None of those small hotels have any heating facilities or running hot water, but this winter they'll have to be kept open," he said.

Also returning on the Clipper were Vincent Sheehan and H. R. Knickerbocker, foreign correspondents.

Sheehan described the bombing of London and the damage done to that city as "terrific." Both he and Knickerbocker agreed, however, that the British resistance had shown no sign of weakening and said they doubted there was much danger of an invasion this winter.

Little Benny's Note Book

We were eating breakfist and ma said to pop, You're not very communicative this morning, Willyum.

Meaning he wasn't doing much talking, and pop said, My feelings are still sore from where you hurt them last night?

Last night? Me? Why Willyum I haven't the slightest recollection. How do you mean, when was that? ma said. What did we do last night? We went to see Ronnel Ronnell in Tiger Lady, that's the extent of all I remembeer, she said, and pop said, That's right we went to the movies in a buss so I wouldn't have to bother about parking the car. If we had taken the car I might of thought you didn't want to take my attention off my driving, but as it was you didn't have that excuse, he said.

Excuse for what land sakes? ma said, and pop said, For not opening your mouth the entire eleven or 12 blocks from the house to the theater.

Why Willyum, did I, I mean didn't I? ma said. But really, Willyum, I mean really, there's absilutely nothing for you to be supersensitive about. If I didn't open my mouth, as you express it. I assure you it was only becase I was bound up in my inner thoughts and if you had addressed me I'm sure you would of met with a full and free response. I mean it was just that I had nothing special to say, Willyum, she said, and pop said, O yes you did, that's just the point that griped me, that's exactly what knaws and rankles. Why didn't you tell me you had a letter from your sister Fanny with no outstanding news in it? Why didnt you tell me the plummer didn't show up in spite of his false promises over the telephone? he said.

But Willyum I distinctly remember telling you those 2 very identical things, ma said, and pop said, Yes, at the movie in the mist of the picture. Was that fair to Ronnel Ronnell and his associates, was it fair to me? he said, and ma said, O my goodness for lands sakes keep quiet.

Wich he did after he got through laughing.

New Short-Wave Tuner Shown at Conference

More than 75 radio dealers, salesmen and service men attended the annual Fall sales conference of the Canadian Radio Corporation Limited at the Quinte Hotel, Tuesday night to witness the presentation of the new 1941 models of DeForest, Rogers and Majestic radio receiving sets.

W. T. Burnham, Ontario Branch sales manager, in his presentation address stated that the new De-Luxe cabinets with a piano-type keyboard for automatically tuning in stations attracted much attention but the most revolutionary advancement announced was the introduction of the "Miracle Short-Wave Tuner", a new engineering achievement exclusive to DeForest, Majestic and Rogers radios, through which the entire short-wave band is "expanded" so that foreign stations are tuned in like locals This new unit has two tuning pointers, one of which locates the station and the other "expands" the signal. "This makes foreign reception ten times easier, faster and more positive."

W. Hodsoll, Service Manager of Canadian Radio Corp., also spoke. Mr. Roy Rogers, district representative, was chairman of the meeting.

Police Blotter

On a summons issued by Trenton police authorities, a valuable Spaniel dog was recovered by Thomas Thorne, local dog catcher, in Belleville yesterday. The dog was allegedly picked-up by Guster Olsson, of this city and harbored in the latter's home. When approached by Mr. Thorne and local police, Mr. Olsson readily admitted possession of the Spaniel, but assured the authorities he was led to believe the animal was a stray dog. Today the dog was returned to its rightful owner, Mr. Fred Gitelman of Shuter St., Trenton.

A lone inebriate and three transients shared the city police station cells last night, the "weary knights of the road" being liberated today, while the drunk was remanded in custody for trial tomorrow.

AT THE CAPITOL

"All This And Heaven Too"

"All This And Heaven Too," long-awaited screen version of Rachel Field's widely-read novel, is now having its first local showing at the Capitol theatre. Bette Davis and Charles Boyer are co-starred for the first time in their brilliantly successful careers.

Brought to the screen by Warner Bros., "All This And Heaven, Too" retains all the dramatic essence of the novel and brings it to glowing life on the screen. It is the story of a demure little French governess —seemingly destined for spinsterhood—whose very existence was threatened by a Parisien murder scandal, involving one of France's greatest noblemen. But she survives the ordeal to find peace, security and happiness in America. It is a bittersweet romance that captures within it nearly all the varying emotions evoked by love in its many phases, just as it is experienced by men and women everywhere.

With Bette Davis as the governess and Charles Boyer as the Duc de Praslin, who murders his jealous wife because of her treatment of the governess, the film has been hailed by critics who have previewed it as one of the most brilliantly acted motion pictures of the decade.

Author Rachel Field wrote after seeing the film: "I feel that in all essentials the screen version is not only the book as I wrote it but a projection of the characters themselves, heightened by the art of Miss Davis and Mr. Boyer and an extraordinarily fine supporting cast."

In support of the two stars are Jeffrey Lynn, romantic young leading man of the "Four Daughters" series, as Henry Field, the young American minister who befriends the unfortunate governess; Barbara O'Neil, most recently seen as Scarlett O'Hara's mother in "Gone With the Wind," in the role of the jealous Duchess; Virginia Weidler, Henry Daniel, Walter Hampden, George Coulouris, Montagu Love, Helen Westley, Harry Davenport, Janet Beecher, June Lockhart, Ann Todd, Richard Nichols, Fritz Leiber, Ian Keith, Sibyl Harris and many more.

Directed by Anatole Litvak, "All This And Heaven, Too," was adapted for the screen by Casey Robinson from Miss Field's novel. The film is accompanied by an original musical score by Max Steiner.

There will be one matinee only for this great attraction of the year, Saturday.

AT THE BELLE

"Pride and Prejudice"

Bounding from one bright comedy situation to another and from gentle chuckles to hilarious laughs, "Pride and Prejudice," picturization of JJane Austen's romantic novel, starring Greer Garson and Laurence Oliver, provides one of the season's most pleasant entertainments and it is now on the Belle screen.

Miss Garson, remembered for her "Mrs. Chips," again has been given a role ideally suited to her versatile talents as the prejudiced Elizabeth Bennet, while Olivier gives one of his finest performances as the proud Darcy.

From the time Mr. Darcy and his friend Mr. Bingley, two aristocratic and wealthy young bachelors, arrive in a small English village of the early nineteenth century to find themselves besieged by the five unwedded Bennet daughters and their scheming mother, the laughs begin. It is perfectly natural that Darcy should fall in love with the beautiful and intelligent Elizabeth. But there are complications from the start. He can't stand her family, particularly the fluttery Mrs. Bennet whose constant meddling upsets the romantic applecarts of her daughters.

In the end, of course, Darcy gives in, discovering that love is more potent than family pride. He finally wins Elizabeth's affection by saving her family from disgrace when Lydia, flightiest of the daughters, with an eye for a uniform, runs away with an adventurer.

Top comedy performances are given by Edmund Gwenn and Mary Boland as Mr. and Mrs. Bennet, Edna May Oliver as the crochety dowager Lady Catherine de Bourgh and Melville Cooper as her stuffy librarian with ambitions to be a Don Juan. Delightful to the eye are Elizabeth's sisters, Maureen O'Sullivan as Jane, Ann Rutherford as Lydia, Marsha Hunt as Mary and Heather Angel as Kitty.

Also contributing to the general merriment are Bruce Lester as Bingley, Frieda Inescort as Miss Bingley, Edward Ashley as Wickham and Karen Morley as Charlotte.

With its colorful settings and costumes and amusing dialogue, the film has been given excellent direction by Robert Z. Leonard. The picture was brought to the screen by Hunt Stromberg who recently produced "Northwest Passage" and as a director-producer team with Leonard has given the screen such hits as "The Great Ziegfeld" and "Maytime."

AT THE McCARTHY

"I Was a Captive of Nazi Germany."

Isobel Lillian Steele's own story of her adventures in Berlin's "smart set" as a suspected "spy" with the human blood-hounds of the secret police constantly shadowing her, her surprise arrest and her subsequent months of imprisonment, will be dramatically told on the screen of the McCarthy Theatre this week-end, when Miss Steele's sensational narrative of the terrors she suffered while in prison, "I Was a Captive of Nazi Germany," one of the most remarkable pictures ever produced, opens it's premiere showing in Belleville.

In "I Was a Captive of Nazi Germany," Miss Steele shows neither bias nor prejudice, but gives a straightforward account of experiences among the highborn European plotters, her arrest and the inquisition which followed.

Miss Steele was born in Toronto, Ont.; later her family moved to Los Angeles, Calif., where she studied journalism. It was to do post-graduate work in Berlin University and to complete her study of the violin that she went to Germany.

What happened after this, makes 90 minutes of the most outspoken and impressive blasts against dictatorship ever filmed. "I Was a Captive of Nazi Germany" is the picture you have been waiting for, ever since September, 1939.

It could not be told before, but now "I Was a Captive of Nazi Germany" comes to the public in a mighty screen drama that should be seen by every loyal Canadian who wants freedom and wants most of all to see the quick downfall of the present cruel Nazi regime.

A new and much funnier three stooges comedy than you've ever seen them in before entitled "Calling All Curs" will also be presented this week-end at the McCarthy Theatre with the above special feature hit.

"The Boys from Syracuse"

You still have time to see the musical comedy laugh hit of the century, "The Boys from Syracuse" which features Allan Jones, Martha Raye, Joe Penner, Rosemary Lane, Eric Blore, Alan Mowbray, Charles Butterworth and Irene Hervey. It is the present feature attraction at the McCarthy in addition to latest Fox News events, an all-star comedy "Twincuplets" and a Walt Disney technicolor cartoon, Donald Duck in "The Hockey Match."

Flight Surgeons Look for Average Normal Man

Washington, Oct. 3 (AP).—Flying geniuses, stunt pilots, cocky youngsters with only a few hours of solo work, the youth who have merely an itch to fly are being eliminated in the preparedness program of the United States Army Air Corps.

The 250 Air Corps flight surgeons are giving applicants for training the most intensive examinations possible and in the words of Col. D. V. N. Grant "are looking for the average normal man and not the flying genius or screwball pilot."

Flight surgeans said piloting a military airplane is the world's most trying job.

"A pilot must be able to think with both hands and both feet as well as with his brain and coordinate all of them precisely and instantaneously," one surgeon explained.

The strain of piloting an airplane up to heights of 20,000 feet or more while watching 30 or more instruments, listening to radio signals and being subjected to cold, noise, vibration and carbon monoxide from the engines wears upon the toughest of men.

French Destroyer Was Sunk at Dakar

Vichy, France, Oct. 3 (AP)—The Petain Government today announced loss of the destroyer L'Audacieux, 2,569 tons, in last week's fighting at Dakar.

L'Audacieux was one of six French ships which went to Dakar from Toulon before the Dakar incident. She was of late build.

The brief statement said families of the victims had been notified, but did not specify how many lives were lost.

It's love at last between lovely Greer Garson and Laurence Olivier in, "Pride and Prejudice," a picture that spells fun, packed with laughs, good cheer and romance, now on the Belle screen.

Cincinnati Ties Score in Second When They Got to Rowe for Four Hits

REDS HITTING

Walters Shaky at Start but Settled Down to Allow Only One Hit in Four Frames

By JUDSON BAILEY
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

Crosley Field, Cincinnati, Oct. 3 (AP)—Schoolboy Rowe, the towering righthander, who has been beaten only three times this year, faced Bucky Walters on the pitching hill as Detroit Tigers and Cincinnati Reds collided in the second game of the 1940 World Series before a crowd of 30,000.

The weather was perfect, warmer and sunnier than yesterday when the Tigers took the opening tussle 7-2.

Manager Del Baker of the Tigers named Birdie Tebbetts to receive Rowe, but otherwise he kept the same batting order in action.

The line-ups:

TIGERS—Bartell, ss; McCosky, cf; Gehringer, 2b; Greenberg, lf; York, 1b; Campbell, rf; Higgins, 3b; Tebbetts, c; Rowe, p.

REDS—Werber, 3b; M. McCormick, cf; Goodman, rf; F. McCormick, 1b; Ripple, lf; Wilson, c; Joost, 2b; Myers, ss; Walters, p.

Umpires—Plate, Emmett Ormsby, American League; First base, Lee Ballanfant, National League; Second base, Steve Basil, American League; Third base, Bill Klem, National League.

First Inning

Tigers—Walters' first pitch was a wild one that went past catcher Wilson on the fly and he walked Bartell on five throws. Walters couldn't find the plate and McCosky also walked on five pitches. Walters walked in to confer with Wilson and Frank McCormick also came over to give encouragement. With the count one and one, Gehringer slapped a single into right field scoring Bartell and sending McCosky to third. Greenberg grounded into a double play, Werber to Joost to McCormick, scoring McCosky. York struck out on four pitches. Two runs, one hit, no errors, none left.

Reds—Werber smacked the first pitch at Bartell and was thrown out. M. McCormick lifted a weak foul into the stands and then struck out. Goodman was thrown out by Gehringer. No runs, no hits, no errors, none left.

Second Inning

Tigers — Campbell raised a pop foul to Werber inside the third base coaching box. Higgins got two balls, fouled off a couple and then grounded to Myers. Tebbetts lifted a high fly to Myers.

No runs, no hits, no errors, none left.

Reds—F. McCormick smashed the first pitch on the ground into left field for a single. Ripple took a strike and then popped to Bartell in short left field. Wilson singled into short right advancing F. McCormick to second. Joost looked at three bad balls and one strike and then shot a hard single to centre, bringing F. McCormick home and putting Wilson on second. Myers hit the first pitch between Higgins and Bartell for a single, scoring Wilson and sending Joost to second, as the crowd yelled madly and Detroit's infield came in to confer with Rowe. Tebbetts tried to catch Joost off second and threw into centre field, Joost racing to third and Myers going to second. Walters who had waved at the first two pitches and then got two balls, flied to McCosky in short centre, and Joost was prevented from coming home by a great throw. Werber waited out a three and two count and then walked on a low pitch inside, filling the bases. M. McCormick struck late at the first pitch and raised a high fly which Bartell just got under by running backwards.

Two runs, four hits, one error, three left.

Third Inning

Tigers—Rowe took a count of three and two and then went down swinging. Bartell raised a high fly to M. McCormick. McCosky waited out a three and two count and then lined to M. McCormick in short centre.

No runs, no hits, no errors, none left.

Reds—Goodman laid a drag bunt down toward first base and beat York's throw to Rowe for a hit. F. McCormick sent a sharp liner to McCosky in centre field, Goodman holding first. Ripple knocked the first pitch over the fence in the right field corner, 370 feet from home plate, scoring Goodman ahead of him. Fans in the bleachers sent a small shower of missiles into the air and these were swiftly cleared from the field. Wilson lifted a high fly to Bartell on the grass in left field. Gorsica began warming up in the Tiger bull pen. Joost sent an easy fly to Campbell.

Aussies Fail to Find "Pukka Wallahs" or 'Wowsers' in Canada

Ottawa, Oct. 3 (CP)—Settling down quickly to the job of completing their pilot training Australia's first batch of airmen for the British Commonwealth Air Training plan find conditions to their liking at No. 2 Service Flying Training School near here.

Between training flights they kept busy giving Canadian students, pilots and instructors a few lessons in Australian vernacular. "Bonza" and "Good oh" they said in giving their impressions of Canadian scenery after their train trip from Vancouver.

The words mean "fine" or "first class."

The lads from down under think they will get along well with Canadian officers. So far they have not run across any "pukka wallahs" or "wowsers." Translated into Canadian idiom a pukka wallah is a "stuffed shirt" and a wowser is something like a sissy.

The Australians' uniform is of royal blue compared with the lighter blue of the Canadian uniforms but the cut and style are about the same. The Australians call the color "passionate purple" because it glistens in the sunlight.

Young Levesque died yesterday He was struck during a baseball game at the college.

REFUGEE RULER ON WAY TO U.S.

New Rome-Berlin-Tokyo Pact Directed More Against Russia Than U. S. Says Standard

London, Oct. 3.—(CP)—The new Rome-Berlin-Tokyo alliance is directed more against Soviet Russia than the United States, the Evening Standard, owned by Lord Beaverbrook, said today in an editorial.

"Before the pact American sympathy for Britain was announced openly, American support for China was growing, American opposition to Japan was intensifying", said the editorial.

"The pact has altered none of these strands in American policy. It has strengthened them. Were the Germans such fools as to suppose that they could sway Americans from a clear recognition of their vital interests by this noisy proclamation? We refuse to believe it."

The Standard went on:

"No. The pact is designed to influence the Russians. They know it. They have taken immense trouble to explain to their people in their newspapers that it was solely new signs of Anglo-American co-operation which had produced the new alliance.

Nothing Lacking But Label

"The new alliance between the aggressors has the same signatories and features as the old anti-Comintern pact. Nothing is lacking but the label. It touches Russian interests much more nearly than those of America . . . . .

"There are other signs which enforce the moral of the pact itself. German troops are allowed into Finland and old relations between Finland and Germany are in some measure restored.

Nazi diplomacy is busy in the Balkans squeezing out all other elements which might impede easy access of Germany to the Black Sea. Orders are given for the building of great new roadways across Slovakia to the Russian frontier . . ."

The Standard said these "facts and deductions" do not mean the Axis is going to pick an open quarrel with Russia, "but they do mean strong pressure is being exerted on the Russians to make them serve better the interests of the Axis".

Killing of Loan Shark Starts Downfall of "Murder Inc." Gang

This is the first of three stories about "Murder, Inc.," the sensational crime ring now being exposed in New York. It summarizes the formation and scope of the ring, describing a typical killing.

By GLADWIN HILL
Associated Press Staff Writer

New York, Oct. 3—(AP)—Whitey had started hitting the needle and had to be got out of the way.

He was only a snivelling little loan shark, but he knew about the operations of the crime "combination." If the cops picked him up and starved him of the dope for a couple of days, he'd tell anything . . .

Whitey trembled in the front seat of the car, beside the driver who had picked him up at gunpoint, as it bumped up the sidewalk ramp into the dark Brooklyn garage. There were other men waiting in the garage . . .

Before he had time to reflect, something closed around his windpipe. He struggled, gasped, and then went "out."

Three mobsters hauled his body out of the car, tightened a cord around the neck, trussed it up doubled like a jacknife, and were lifting it into the black limousine—the "hearse"—when:

"The———bum ain't dead yet."

To make sure, they used a meat cleaver and an ice pick.

The car with its gruesome cargo was left on a quiet residential street.

The gangsters did not know it, but Whitey Rudnick's corpse was to contribute more to their undoing than anything the little loan shark had done when he was alive.

2 Go to Death House

For killing Whitey Rudnick, Frank Abbandando and Harry Maione, two of the men from the darkened garage, were sent a few days ago to the Sing Sing death house. Their departure was the first conclusive step toward the liquidation of "Murder Inc.," one of the largest and most incredible crime rings ever exposed.

"Murder, Inc.," came to light last February under the investigations of a young Irish former policeman named William O'Dwyer who worked his way up to lawyer and Judge and who only a month before had become District Attorney of Brooklyn.

With the investigation still unfolding, an estimated 100 killings during the last nine years have been traced to the door of "Murder, Inc."

Most of them were obscure underworld rub-outs, like the cases of Whitey Rudnick; Bo Weinberg, who was "frozen" by the feet into concrete and dropped into the water; Walter Sage, who was dropped into a lake weighed with a slot machine and a 30-pound rock (his body came up, nevertheless, after a few days, much to the bewilderment of "Murder, Inc"); and Harry Westone, whose body was dropped in a concrete mixer, to become an integral part of an upstate highway.

BLACK BEAR SEEN NEAR CANNIFTON

POSSE ORGANIZED

Harry Farnham, Cannifton farmer, gazed in amazement when he walked out of his home early today just in time to see a large 400-pound black bear amble through the family berry patch and hasten towards a herd of cows, grazing near the Moira River. Mr. Farnham immediately raised an alarm and headed by Provincial Police a posse of farmers hunted the large bruin the remainder of the day, but without success.

The announcement that a large 400-pound black bear was roaming the district known as "The Cedars" terrorized the farmers of the district lest their flocks be attacked and destroyed. Twice after the bruin was first seen by Mr. Farnham on the Henry Farnham farm, the bear was again sighted. A few moments after the Provincial Police arrived upon the scene Inspector Frank Gardner sighted "Mister Bruin" entering the cedar woods. Inspector Gardner was fully 150 yards from the animal, but raised his rifle and fired, but the frightened bear scampered off and became secluded in the deep brush.

Shortly before noon today Harry Farnham got a passing glimpse of the animal near the shoreline of the Moira River on the west side of the river fully a quarter of a mile from where it originally entered the wooded brush. One posse was headed by Inspector Frank Gardner, while a second one was under Sergeant H. E. Thompson and Provincial Constable Grayling.

"The deep shrubbery and heavy undergrowth made excellent hiding places for the bear once it entered the cedars," stated Sergeant H. E. Thompson this afternoon after the chase had been abandoned by police. Farmers throughout the area are still keeping watch over their flocks, however.

MAY INVADE GREECE

Rome, Oct. 3—(AP)—The Fascist publication Il Giornale D'Italia focussed Italian attention on Greece again today.

Its editorial written by Virginio Gayda aroused speculation in foreign circles whether, a campaign against Greece might not be in the offing.

ONLY ONE MEMBER HAS JOB

Vichy, France, Oct. 3 (AP).—The Petain-Laval government in a measure designed to provide equitable distribution of an inadequate supply of jobs decreed today that only one member of a family may hold gainful employment.

Men at present without work are asked to take whatever jobs the government can provide, regardless of their normal trades or professions.

N.P.A.M. UNITS TOUGHENED UP BY CAMP LIFE

Refreshing Sleep, Good Food and Regular Exercise Conducive to Good Health

DRILL ENJOYED

By Dick Sheridan Canadian Press Staff Writer.

Toronto, Oct. 3 (CP)—They build you up and toughen yo all in the one process at the Non-Permanent Active Militia camps held throughout Canada this summer. And the basis of the whole system was the nursery ditty of "Early to bed, early to rise."

Nine hours' sleep each night, with unlimited fresh air that seeped—on windy nights it just blew—through the tent openings was just what the doctor ordered.

For the two weeks the military authorities had the various units under canvas they did a neat job of ironing out the rookies and the smattering of veterans. Everything was done with the idea of taking up the slack in the militiaman's physique. Or so it seemed.

Next to sleep came the good food—good because it was plain and wholesome. Little pastry but lots of porridge.

P. T. Every Morning

The toughening-up process began right after reveille each day. It consisted of 15 minutes "P.T." that shook the sleep from one's brain and the kinks from one's limbs.

Squad drill that came later in the morning was good for both legs and arms. But the squad drill with rifles was a different thing. Carrying a 14-pound rifle at the proper slope on the shoulder while marching over uneven ground was a test for the best.

Field manoeuvres and trench digging in the afternoon topped off the sweating-out process. Running and flopping on the ground while wearing heavy battle dress wrung many a pound from a bulgy frame.

After daily sessions such as these the occasional five-mile route march or three-hour night manoeuvre was a mere stroll.

Thus the 100,000 young men and men not so young who attended camp returned home pepped up and in the best physical condition they've enjoyed for years. And the process was so gradual, few realised it.

VICHY GOV'T REFUSES TO SELL

90-American-Made Planes at Martinique Cost Nearly $9,000,000

New York, Oct. 3 (AP). — The United States has asked—without result—that the French Vichy government resell to this country 90 American-made warplanes now at Martinique.

It was disclosed by Gaston Henry-Haye, French Ambassador, who said France was prevented from reselling the planes by terms of the armistice she signed with Germany.

"It would naturally be to France's interest to sell them back to America," he said. "We paid some $7,000,000 to $9,000,000 for them, and these planes are now immobilized and of no use to us. They will soon be deteriorated, and we could use the money they cost us."

Dorothy's Stage Kisses Are Real to Dorothy

Hollywood, Oct. 3 (AP). — The genuineness of Dorothy Lamour's movie kisses has been finally established.

Dorothy went into a movie clinch with young Ted North the other day. Ted said he was much impressed, but Director Henry King was not satisfied.

He asked: "Were those kisses the real thing?"

Dorothy bristled. "They certainly were real," he said. "And if I had a machine here, I'd prove . . ."

Arrangements were made for delivery of an electrocardiograph.

Came yesterday afternoon and the machine electrodes were attached to one leg and each wrist. Then a graph of her normal heart action was recorded.

Then the test — repeated three times. Dorothy nestled nicely, tilted her head to North.

Clinical observations gave this account of Miss Lamour's reactions: Her blood pressure rose from 110 over 70 to 125 over 80; her pulse rate jumped from 84 to 110; and there was a marked "hippus reaction" (whatever that is) in the pupil of her eye, demonstrating emotional stress.

North's reactions were not taken.

TORONTO MEN INJURED

Bowmanville, Ont., Oct. 3—(CP)—Two Toronto men were taken to hospital at nearby Port Hope today with serious injuries after an accident on the highway near here today. A truck driven by William Chandler, Toronto, collided with a car containing four Toronto men. Morris Rosenberg, Toronto, driver of the car, was unhurt. A. Manella, a passenger suffered a broken pelvis, hand and face injuries and Max Solkoloff suffered side injuries and facial lacerations.

CIVIC STRENGTH MOBILIZED BY ATTY.-GENERAL

Expanded Police Force, Civil Guards and Defence Committee Some of Measures Taken for Safety

37,000 CIVIL GUARDS

Toronto, Oct. 3—(CP)—Ontario residents have an expanded provincial police force, voluntary civil guards, Ontario volunteer constabulary and the civilian defence committee, A.R.P., to defend them and their property in the event of a wartime emergency.

Attorney-General Gordon Conant, aided by a "war council" that meets almost daily in his Queen's Park office and consists of high-ranking police and law officers, has led the way in this mobilization of civic strength for emergency use.

A number of new men have been taken on strength of the regular provincial force under Commissioner W. H. Stringer, but the exact number of provincial policemen in service is a police secret.

In addition there are some 37,000 members of the voluntary civil guards in 80 units throughout the province, their commanders ranking as special provincial police officers. They are ex-servicemen, are armed with shotguns and rifles donated in a recent province-wide campaign and they hold regular drill in their respective municipalities. They report to the Deputy Commissioner, H. S. McCready.

Wear Military Uniform

They wear a type of military uniform and get no pay. Their organization is so designed that they could be hurried to any part of Ontario, particularly into the northern mining communities, should trouble threaten. They would "hold the fort" until the regular military forces arrived.

Duties of the latest "guard" force—an auxiliary to the provincial police and known as the Ontario Volunteer Constabulary—are practically the same as those of the Civil Volunteer Guards. In fact, they will work together, according to present plans. Their establishment was just announced this week and complete plans for their organization have not been worked out.

They will be subject to regular police discipline, won't get paid and will provide their own uniforms. They can't be over 35 years of age and must pass physical and educational examinations, and will receive instruction under provincial officers.

The Civilian Defence Committee is, in part, an air raids precautions outfit which will extend into all municipalities. Its duties, in case of emergency, would be to fight fires, flood or other catastrophe caused by nature or any enemy invader.

5-YEAR-OLD GIRL FRACTURES LEG

While playing in her father's barn, little five-year-old Elizabeth McCauley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ambrose McCauley, R.R. No. 3, Trenton, sustained a fractured right leg when the hay wrack wagon ran over her leg, causing the injury yesterday. The injured lass was rushed to the Belleville General Hospital, where Dr. G. H. Stobie reduced the fracture.

The little girl was playing in the barn and in some manner fell behind the hay wagon, which was being drawn into the barn. The heavy iron-banded wheels ran over her right leg resulting in a serious fracture.

British Author Thinks "Jerry" Near End of Tether

New York, Oct. 3 —(AP) — H. G. Wells, British author, arrived today on the liner Scythia and said, "I think Jerry (Nazi Germany) is getting near the end of his tether."

Some of the German planes recently shot down in Great Britain were newly completed, he said; some of the pilots young and inexperienced, and "one machine gunner we got had never been up in a plane before."

Wells did not believe the United States should enter the war. "If you came into the war with your party politics, it would interfere with final settlement," he said.

Hungarian-Rumanian Tension Reported

Bucharest, Rumania, Oct. 3—(AP)—Government circles reported new Hungarian-Rumanian tension today following upon reports of "additional atrocities" in the ceded area of Transylvania, now occupied by Hungarian troops.

Frau Willelm Fabricius, wife of the German minister to Rumania, went to Clucea to investigate reports that her friend, Viturla Goga, one-time concert singer and widow of former Premier Octavian Goga, had been mistreated by Hungarians at her Transylvania chateau.

Fabricius is expected to make a strong protest by way of Berlin if the reports are verified.

GOV'T SUSPENDS PLAN TO SEND CHILDREN ABROAD

Winter Season of Gales and Heavy Seas Approaching Forces Britain to Take Action

FEARFUL OF SUBS

London, Oct. 3 (CP).—The government has decided to suspend "until further notice" the plan to send British children abroad for security because of the sinking of the steamship City of Benares. The decision was announced last night in a statement.

The City of Benares, bound for Canada, was sunk 600 miles west of Ireland the night of Sept. 17. 81 children were lost. A German submarine caused the sinking.

"The recent loss of a number of children who were travelling in the City of Benares has illustrated the dangers to which passenger vessels are exposed even when in convoy under the weather conditions now prevailing in the Atlantic," the announcement said, "and the government have come reluctantly to the conclusion that during the winter season of gales and heavy seas they cannot take the responsibility of sending children overseas under the government scheme."

Approximately 2,650 children have departed under the scheme, most of them to Canada. The decision will not affect private evacuation of children to the Dominions and the United States.

Approximately 7,000 children have gone to Canada, 1,536 of them under the government plan and the others privately.

The War Today

By H. M. Peters Canadian Press Staff Writer.

Prime Minister Churchill altered his government today, adjusting members to positions that fit their individual capacities, upon the occasion of Neville Chamberlain's retirement to private life due to a relapse after his abdominal operation.

This was not a major reorganization of the government, or even the extensive shuffle that some quarters had predicted, the Foreign Office, the Ministry of Aircraft Production and many other key posts were left unchanged.

The war cabinet was increased to eight members—Sir John Anderson, Sir Kingsley Wood and Ernest Bevin entered it, and Mr. Chamberlain dropped out. Sir Kingsley and Mr. Bevin remained, respectively, as Chancellor of the Exchequer and Labor Minister; Sir John gave up his position as Minister of Home Security and became Lord President of the Council, Mr Chamberlain's old post.

Four changes outside the war cabinet stood out as of vital importance in the prosecution of the war.

Londoners, uneasy over the question of air raid shelters, were given back their "Prime Minister of London"—Herbert Morrison, former leader of the London County Council, and regarded as one of the most vigorous leaders that body ever had—in the capacity of Home Security Minister. His will be the task of reorganizing civilian life to meet the menace of the bomb.

Then Sir Andrew Duncan, brilliant organizer, successful president of the Board of Trade during the first year of the war, moved over to the Ministry of Supply, replacing Mr. Morrison. There he will be called upon to see that the factories building up Britain's weapons of defence, this year, and offence, next year, obtain the materials they need. He will work closely with Lord Beaverbrook at the aircraft production ministry, R. H. Cross, shipping minister, Geoffrey Lloyd, petroleum secretary, Lord Woolton, the food minister, and others.

A third change of importance was the creation of a new post for Sir John Reith, former minister of transport, Sir John, also a skilful organizer, becomes in effect reconstruction minister—his title is to be minister of works and public buildings and first commissioner of works. Pictures of destruction of buildings under the rain of enemy bombs graphically explain just what will be expected of him. He goes to the House of Lords as a peer.

The fourth in this series of changes is the appointment of Viscount Cranborne as Dominions secretary. Lord Cranborne was the last of the little group that broke with Mr. Chamberlain over appeasement to obtain a major post. For the past few months he has been on the edge of the government as paymaster general.

He resigned as foreign-secretary with Anthony Eden in 1938. Alfred Duff Cooper followed them out of the government later that same year. Mr. Eden and Mr. Duff Cooper preceded Lord Cranborne back into senior office by several months.

Two men were brought from backbenches into the government. Mr. Churchill appointed as transport minister John Moore-Brabazon the first Englishman to fly in Britain. Mr. Moore-Brabazon, a soldier in the last war, was one of those who called for rapid British rearmament years ago. In April 1938 he declared Britain should set up vast aircraft factories immediately in Canada, out of range of potential enemies.

Italian Forces in Albania Shift to New Posts Near Greek Frontier

Dictators Meet to Discuss U. S. Part in War

Italian Destroyer, Seven U-Boats, 2 Italian Subs Sunk

Dirty Weather Over London Sends German Raiders Home Four Hours Before Dawn

London, Oct. 4 — (CP)—British naval and air forces have sent an Italian destroyer, seven German U-boats and two Italian submarines to the bottom in the last few weeks, the Admiralty announced today.

The announcements, issued after the quietest night London has had since the Nazi air raiders started their heaviest attacks Sept. 7, said an Italian destroyer of the Curatone class (966-tonners fitted for minelaying) had been torpedoed by the British submarine Osiris in the Adriatic Sept. 22.

"The enemy has recently been having a greater measure of success in his U-boat attacks on merchant shipping than during the earlier stages of the war," the Admiralty also said, but added that the nine German and Italian submarines had been sunk during this period, while others had been damaged.

It said greater successes of the axis submarines had been expected "after the collapse of France and the German seizure of the French Atlantic ports" because submarines operating from those seized ports could remain longer in the ocean trade routes than those operating from Germany's ports.

Why The Weather?

By Major A. H. Thiessen

Scattering the sun's heat If it were not for the circulation of the air and the ocean currents, the tropics would be unbearably hot and the temperate zones much colder than they now are. This is because the heat received from the sun between the parallels 35 degrees north and 35 south (or roughly in the equatorial regions) is much more than that radiated away from the same area. But the oceans and air, becoming warmed there, flow toward the north and south, carrying the excess heat to temperate and even frigid zones, and making them less cold than otherwise would be the case. There are, in addition, cold air masses and cold ocean currents flowing equatorward from the poles, completing the heat-scattering process.

3 CANADIAN FLIERS HONORED

One Receives Bar to D.F.C., Others Are Awarded Flying Cross

London, Oct. 4 —(CP—Cable)—Three members of the Royal Air Force's Canadian squadron were honored in a list of awards announced today.

Pilot Officer William McKnight of Calgary was given a bar for his Distinguished Flying Cross, while acting Flt.-Lt. P. S. Turner of Toronto and Pilot Officer N. K. Stansfeld of Vancouver were granted the D.F.C.

The citation said McKnight has "destroyed six enemy aircraft during the last 13 weeks." It added that "he has proved himself to be a most efficient section leader and has consistently given proof that he is a courageous and tenacious fighter."

Turner is credited with destroying 10 German planes during engagements over Dunkerque and England. He is described as having proved himself a "most courageous and capable leader, displaying coolness and initiative in the face of the enemy."

The citation said he succeeded Sept. 15 in shooting down one Nazi plane while his own machine was hit by a cannon shell which put it temporarily out of control. On its recovery he destroyed another German plane, bringing his own damaged aircraft safely back to its base.

Stansfeld is credited with destroying seven Nazis during engagements over Dunkerque and England. The citation said "he has exhibited excellent fighting qualities, initiative and marked powers of leadership."

U. S. ADMIRAL FAVORS AID TO BRITAIN AND CHINA

Portland, Me., Oct. 4 (AP).—Aid to Great Britain and China, even to the extent of "going to war", to defeat Germany and Japan was advocated last night by the former commander-in-chief of the United States Asiatic fleet.

Asserting that defence of the United States is "a naval matter primarily", Admiral Harry E. Yarnell said that such aid might not necessarily mean sending troops to Europe or Asia but "use of the United States Navy".

Italian Fleet 'High-Tails' for Home As British Navy Heaves in Sight

By LARRY ALLEN
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

Alexandria, Egypt, Oct. 4 (AP).—After failing to draw the Italian navy into a fight during a 1,800-mile sweep of the Mediterranean and Aegean Seas, but downing four Italian planes, British warships were back in port today with a "victory" over their own air force in a mock attack.

Officers of the Mediterranean fleet said big guns were given a thorough workout in battle practice when the vessels warded off a mock raid by Britain's own fleet air arm.

A strong Italian naval force was sighted once by British airplanes, about 100 miles away from the coast of Italy, as the Mediterranean fleet made its four-day zig-zag cruise but the Italians continued at high speed to their base.

One group of Italian planes bombed the British fleet Sept. 29. The first burst of anti-aircraft fire scored a direct hit on one of the raiders, which crumbled and plunged into the sea.

British fighter planes then roared aloft from an aircraft carrier and shot down three more raiders. The others turned for home.

An officer aboard one of the warships described the attack:

"After the direct hit on the enemy plane we saw two men bail out and make a parachute landing on the sea not far from one of our destroyers, which was detached to pick up the Italians.

"One of them was dead when he was pulled aboard, having become entangled in his parachute and drowned. The other died shortly after he was taken from the sea. Both were buried at sea.

"The fleet was not bombed any more during the entire sweep."

The British ships landed reinforcements on the besieged island of Malta and twice ran along the Egyptian coast where Marshal Graziani's Italian invading force is digging in, but there was no shelling of Fascist bases this time.

130,000 MEN AND 120 TANKS IN MOVEMENT

All Precautions Have Been Taken by Greece Against Surprise

ITALY DEMANDS EPIRUS

Greek Interest Focussed on Brenner Pass Meeting of Hitler and Mussolini

By RILEY O'SULLIVAN
Associated Press Writer

Athens, Greece, Oct. 4 —(AP)—Italian army forces in Albania, totalling 130,000 men and 120 tanks, have shifted their positions to new posts near the Greek frontier in the past few days, official sources said today.

Troop movements from Italy to Albania, Italy's recently acquired territory in the Balkans, have been frequent recently, and numerous ships are available in the Adriatic to speed additional forces across the narrow sea if needed, Greek government officials said.

Official sources, however, expressed belief that Italian strength in Albania still is under 200,000 men.

"All precautions have been taken by Greece against surprise from any quarter," official quarters declared.

Press Voices Demands

The Fascist press several weeks ago voiced demands for a share of Greece's northern Epirus on behalf of Albania.

Reports of Italian troop movements reached here as Hitler and Mussolini were engaged in conference at Brenner Pass.

The Greek army is on a basis of "permanent concentration." Border garrisons have been fully manned since the anti-Greek campaign in the Italian press became hottest more than a month ago.

The government decreed that all unoccupied houses in the country could be requisitioned should air raids force removal of populations from cities.

Greek interest was focussed on the Brenner Pass meeting and what it might bring this nation, which has a guarantee of aid from Britain should her independence or territorial integrity be threatened.

ROPE HE PLAYS WITH STRANGLES INFANT

Dunnville, Ont., Oct. 4 (CP). — Tragedy struck the home of Edward King, Dunnville, yesterday when his infant son, Robert, was found strangled with a rope hanging from a tree in the garden. The child, only twenty months old, had been playing with his little sister, who told her mother that Bobby was playing with the rope.

Konoye Advises U.S. to Co-operate With Axis For New World Order

Says Axis Would be Ready to Fight to Finish Any Challenge if U.S. Should 'Deliberately Refuse to Misunderstand True Intentions of Japan and Consider Triple Alliance Hostile to Herself'

Tokyo, Oct. 4 (AP)—Domei, Japanese news agency quoted Premier Konoye tonight as saying that "whether the Pacific will become the scene of war or peace solely depends on whether Japan and the United States will respect and understand each other's position."

In an interview at Kyoto with the Japanese press the Premier urged the United States to reconsider her previous position and "positively co-operate with Axis construction of a new world order."

"Nevertheless should the United States deliberately refuse to understand the true intentions of Japan, Germany and Italy and consider the triple alliance hostile to herself and challenge the Axis nations, the Axis would be ready to accept such a challenge and fight to the finish," Konoye said.

The Premier added that efforts would be continued to adjust relations between Japan and Russia, although he reiterated Japan firmly opposed Communism and would not allow propagation of it in the Orient.

"Adjustment of diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union does not signify acceptance of Communism," he declared. "I intend to increase efforts to minimize friction between Japan and the Soviet Union.

The Premier emphasized that the pact of Berlin was not intended as a challenge to any other power and that the Axis was prepared to recognize the leading position of the United States in the Americas, provided the United States reciprocated as to Europe and the Far East.

Trade negotiations with the Netherlands East Indies are proceeding smoothly, the Premier said, and "fairly favorable results are expected."

Konoye was on his way back to Tokyo after a formal journey to the Grand Shrines at Ise to report his recent assumption of the premiership at Amaterasu, the Sun Goddess, chief diety of the Japanese.

German-Held Harbors Rotterdam to Cherbourg Heavily Bombed By RAF

London, Oct. 4.—(CP)—Through thick clouds and mists the Royal Air Force smashed at German shipping and German-held harbors from Rotterdam to Cherbourg, attacked an iron works in western Germany and rained bombs on a convoy off Dunkerque, the Air Ministry announced today.

Masses of barges were discovered when one daylight raider followed the meandering Maas river in Holland to Huesden. High explosives hit many of them, said the Air Ministry communique.

Other British planes attacked railway communications and oil storage depots in the vicinity of Cherbourg in German-occupied France.

One German bomber, the Ministry said, was shot down off the East Coast today. All the British planes returned safely.

The Ministry reported a British squadron's low-flying attack with high explosive bombs on a German convoy of 12 Merchantmen escorted by warships off Dunkerque but said the results were obscured by low clouds "in which the aircraft were quickly enveloped".

"Taking full advantage of the cover provided by yesterday's low lying clouds, bombers of the R.A.F. carried out a series of raids directed chiefly against coastal objectives from Rotterdam to Dunkerque", the Ministry said in amplification of its communique.

THAMES ESTUARY ROUTE TAKEN BY GERMAN RAIDERS

Nazis Return to Battle After Quietest Night of 27 Since Siege Began

FIRST RAID OF DAY

London, Oct. 4.—(CP)—As if attempting to even scores after Britain announced destruction of nine axis submarines and a destroyer, German planes in relays thundered up the Thames against London this afternoon and blasted viciously at a southeast coast town.

The pounding of the unidentified southeast coast town—in an area long regarded as the likeliest place for an attempted German landing—was the worst it had experienced.

Earlier, in the same region, German coastal guns on the French shore picked a British convoy out of the murky dawn on the Strait of Dover and raked the ships with booming salvos.

Shells geysering the water of the Strait shook houses on the Kent shore. It was not disclosed in London whether the Germans scored any hits, but it was said that the

'RED STAR' SAYS UNITED STATES LACKS ARMS AND TROOPS

Moscow, Oct. 4 (AP)—The United States lacks both arms and troops, the Soviet army organ "Red Star" declared today in a review of recent United States military manoeuvres.

Training of personnel is the weakest spot in the United States army, it added.

"The lack of arms could be overcome quickly," the article said. "But it is much more difficult to teach men to use arms in battle."

Unpatriotic Pupils Become Problems To School Trustees

(By The Canadian Press)

Children who refuse to take part in the patriotic exercises of their schools became an increasing problem to school trustees in Ontario municipalities yesterday. One 10-year-old boy was expelled in Tillsonburg and two girls were expelled in Tavistock as trustees decided on a rigid enforcement of regulations requiring all pupils to salute the flag and sing the National Anthem each day.

In Hamilton where there already were 26 pupils in suspension for their refusal to take part in the exercises, the internal management committee of the Board of Education decided that the suspensions would be continued and that the absence of the pupils from class would have to be dealt with by the truancy officer.

Trustees in Hamilton, Tavistock and Tillsonburg expressed their opinions that the parents of the children under suspension were active or past members of the Jehovah's Witnesses.

In Kitchener where other children have been under suspension Mrs. Mary Schmellovich and Lambro Gakeff, parents, have been charged under Defence of Canada Regulations with membership in the outlawed Jehovah's Witnesses. They allegedly instructed their children not to take part in patriotic exercises and are scheduled to appear in court today.

RUMANIAN SECRET POLICE QUESTION KIDNAPPED MAN

A. Miller Had Been Turned Over by Captors to Secret Police

SAY MILLER BEATEN

British Legation Promises 'Sensational Statement' Later in Miller Case

Bucharest, Oct. 4.—(AP)—Rumanian secret police today questioned for hours A. Miller, director, of the British-dominated Astra-Romana Oil Company, who was suddenly turned over to them this morning by persons reported to have kidnapped him two days ago.

British Legation officials, after interviewing the oil man in his cell, said he had been beaten during the 48 hours he had been held by a band of youths.

A British Legation promised a "sensational statement" later about the Miller case.

It said that still unknown was the whereabouts of Percy Clark, 60, President of the Ploesti Oil Engineering firm, who the Legation charged was kidnapped yesterday in circumstances similar to the seizure of Miller.

Legation officials sought to interview Miller but said at noon they still had no information where he had been held or by whom.

The Rumanian secret police continued an investigation into what government circles call "a widespread British sabotage plot".

Government sources said "indisputable evidence" had been uncovered to show that Britons planned destruction of oil en route to Germany for Nazi planes.

The police asserted that large quantities of bombs, fuses and other materials for sabotage had been found in British and Rumanian homes and oil fields.

ARMY COOK IS PROUD OF WORK

Soldier Liable to Get Bigger Helping if He Praises the Cook

By WILLIAM STEWART
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Montreal, Oct. 4 (CP).—Like a housewife, an army cook is proud of his work, sensitive to criticism and appreciative of praise. He is liable to heap on the porridge enthusiastically for the private who remarks on the tastiness of the food.

An average breakfast consists of oatmeal porridge or cracked wheat, bacon in thick slices or an omelette, bread and butter and coffee.

There was a variety in the heavy noon meal. It was beef or lamb stew with plenty of fresh vegetables — carrots, turnips, cabbage and sometimes parsnips. Or there was roast beef or veal with mashed or boiled potatoes. Two or three times a week there was soup, piping hot.

There was much bread and butter as the militiamen could eat and usually tea at noon.

The evening meal was usually light—perhaps soup, bread and jam, stewed prunes or apples and tea. Baked beans were on the menu in some camps.

Twice during camp at Farnham, Que., women's organizations held suppers for the men at churches in the town and did big business, particularly in pies.

Parachute Wraps About Tail Of Nazi Bomber Causing Crash

London, Oct. 4.—(CP)—A squadron Leader of the Royal Air Force declared today he saw a German rear-gunner bring down his own bombing plane when he bailed out and his parachute became wrapped around the tail of the ship.

"This started the Dornier doing aerobatics in the form of steep dives followed by zooms onto its back", the Britons said.

Hitler, Mussolini Hold Conference In Brenner Pass

Italian Sources Hint Discussion Centres Around Relations Between U. S. and Axis

Meet for 3 Hours

Brennero, Italy, Oct. 4 (AP).—The directorate of the Rome-Berlin axis, Mussolini and Hitler, held a three-hour council of war today and discussed "all the problems" confronting their countries, according to a communique issued just before their parting.

Hitler's armored train headed back through Brenner Pass at 2:40 p.m. (8:40 a.m. EDT) and Mussolini's armored train rolled away southward five minutes later, leaving the world to wonder what, if any, move had been planned.

The brief communique said:

"Within the framework of the ordinary exchange of ideas, Il Duce and the Fuehrer met today at Brenner for a cordial reunion conducted within the sphere of the axis.

"The two chiefs during three hours examined in the presence of foreign ministers Count Ciano and von Ribbentrop all the problems confronting the two countries.

(The United States and her possible place in the war plans of the axis were reliably reported in Rome to have been a prime topic of consultation, along with plans for all-front extension of the war against Britain.)

The mid-day meeting of the two

Britain, Russia May Get Together On Trade Agreement

London, Oct. 4 —(CP)— Negotiations for a trade agreement between Britain and Russia, whom some British sources describe as the "great outsider" among the European powers since the signing of the German-Italian-Japanese pact, are likely to be resumed shortly, semi-official circles intimated today.

Ivan Maisky, Russian ambassador, conferred yesterday with Richard Butler, Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, on what authoritative quarters said was "the general political situation."

A Russian trade delegation has been in London for many weeks, and there have been sporadic efforts to negotiate a trade pact. Now that Japan is allied with the Axis Powers, it is regarded as likely that concerted attempts will be made both in London and Moscow to reach some agreement.

One of the major obstacles to an agreement was Britain's seizure of the gold resources of the Baltic States of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania, which voted union with Russia, and the Soviet's seizure of British assets in those countries.

It is expected that an agreement on this ancillary question will be reached first.

Britain is in a position to supply Russia with rubber, tin and many other products needed by the Soviet and which could be delivered without interference from the Axis Powers. In return Russia might trade lumber—the whole deal on a barter basis.

Rev. C. W. DeMille Succeeds to Post

Former Minister in Bay of Quinte Conference Becomes General Secretary for Temperance

Toronto, Oct. 4 (CP).—Rev. C. W. DeMille, for 35 years in the ministry of the Methodist and later the United Church, will take over on Nov. 1 the position of general secretary of the Ontario Temperance Federation, it was announced today. He succeeds Rev. A. J. Irwin, retiring because of ill health.

Dr. DeMille was ordained in Oshawa 35 years ago and has held charges in the Bay of Quinte, London and Toronto conferences. He also spent five years as secretary of religious education for his church in Saskatchewan.

Dr. Irwin is retiring after twelve years as secretary and 52 years of service in the ministry.

FACE MANSLAUGHTER CHARGE

Toronto, Oct. 4 (CP).—Charles T. McGlade, 56, faced a manslaughter charge today following the death of his friend, John Pinn, 62, after a fight between the two last night.

Police said McGlade struck Pinn with his fist, knocking him to the sidewalk after an argument which began in a fruit market. Pinn collapsed and died shortly after being admitted to hospital.

PARTRIDGE ELUSIVE SAY LOCAL HUNTERS

That partridge are not too plentiful in the swamps and hardwoods north of the city is the report of several local nimrods returning after varied successes in bagging the elusive grouse. One hunter was heard to say that he got three birds after an all-day search through the woods and another said that he got four after tramping for hours through the swamps but all agreed the partridge were hard to find and that they were very wild. One nimrod lamented that his automobile did not have a getaway like those birds, because he said "If it did, I sure would be going somewhere."

DONATION RECEIVED FROM CALIFORNIA

From far away California came a substantial donation to the coffers of the local branch of the Canadian Red Cross today. The donor, an ex-Belleville resident sent the contribution with best wishes for the success of the campaign and the Empire's efforts to win the war.

Appreciation of the committee to managers of industrial plants, who have facilitated collections of employees through the medium of their business offices, was expressed today by Campaign Manager Howard Clarke. "They have been more than generous to us, and the campaign committee is grateful for their co-operation."

While collections are coming in, there is a long way to go before the quota is attained. Residents are urged to send in their contributions as quickly as possible.

PARENTS REPORT DAUGHTER MISSING

The parents of ten-year-old blonde Doreen Argent, of 64 St Paul Street, were filled with anxiety for the safety of their daughter when they reported she was missing from home late last night. Doreen left home for school following the noon hour yesterday and failed to return after school hours. The parents thought little of her disappearance until late last night when they reported the incident to the police. Blonde Doreen was wearing a red sweater, flowered dress and black shoes when she left home. Police stated this morning no reports of her return had been received by the department today.

HORSE ON ROAD STRUCK BY CAR

Wandering at large upon a concession road, a horse owned by Arthur Bunnett, second concession of Sidney, was struck by a motor car driven by Mrs. Jennie Benn, College Street, last night. Later the animal had to be destroyed.

Mrs. Benn told police she was driving along the Second Concession of Sidney, when suddenly a horse walked directly into the path of her motor car. The animal sustained a fractured leg during the impact and was destroyed by Provincial Constable Patterson. Slight damage resulted to the front of the automobile. Motorcycle Patrolman Siple assisted in the investigation.

"Y" BOWLING LEAGUES ORGANIZE

The Afternoon Ladies' Bowling League of the Y met yesterday to draw up rules and draft schedules for the coming season. Mrs. R. Johnston, President, was in the chair, and Mrs. Sam Cherrie was in her post as Secretary.

Last year's rules were adopted with a few minor improvements, and it was decided to start play on Tuesday, October 15th.

The schedule will not be finally set up until after a further meeting on Monday next as it has been necessary for two of last year's teams to withdraw. One of these teams has already been replaced, but there is still an opening for one and it is hoped that one may be obtained before the next meeting.

The Evening Ladies' League will hold its organization meeting on Monday next at the Y at 7 o'clock, and any persons wishing to bowl in this league should notify their former Captains before that date. New players may register at the Y office, and they will be allotted to teams, or if there are teams of young women wishing to enter, they should register at the Y.

Bear Shot in Belmont Twp.

Marmora (Special)—The bruin population of Belmont Township was reduced by one on Thursday morning as Harry Bowen came across a 275 pound specimen in a trap which had been set for the marauder on Deer Lake property of his father Edward Bowen. Eleazer Yeomans of Cordova was out scouting with Mr. Bowen at the time for twenty-nine missing sheep of the Bowen flock. The finding of the carcass of one sheep indicated the presence of bears so that their discovery was not altogether unexpected It has been known for some time that bears have been prowling around in Belmont Township but so far no stories have been forthcoming of the sighting of wolves.

'One Above Guiding Britain's Fortunes; All Will be Well'

"We, As a Nation Determined to See War Through if it Takes Ten Years," Writes English Friend of W. E. Tummon

ENGLAND BEAUTIFUL

Cornwall, Sept. 9, 1940.

Dear Mr. Tummon:

I was so pleased to get your letter this morning when I returned home from hospital where I am still working.

Much of interest has taken place since I last wrote and one finds it rather hard to know where to start when one wishes to draw a clear picture of our lives as they are today.

When we entered the war just a year ago, no one ever thought that the result would be what it has been, and a large number of people stated that three to six months would be the longest it could ever last, and all thought that in any case that was bad enough. Today we as a nation are all determined that even if it goes on for ten years, we shall see it through and have no doubt whatever as to the final result—a glorious victory for our Empire.

If we have had any bad moments over this war it was when Belgium capitulated, but after the wonderful evacuation of Dunkirk we as a nation all realized that One above was guiding our fortunes and that all would be well. It was soon seen that we were to be left as an Empire to face the foe alone; then came the change in the face of England. Today we are a fort in every sense of the word. Our coast is protected with barbwire where our cliffs are low and our beaches have tank traps and gun emplacements on them. The roads are barricaded and have pill boxes every few miles. Every active man is doing his bit in some way — some in Air Raid Services — some in the Home Guard, who patrol the roads all night and at the same time doing his own peace-time work.

The air raids are our only worry, as at present Hitler is most active in this way, but even then he fails to achieve the result that he wishes for, that of panic. The people are only very angry at the delay caused by the raids, and in many cases go on with their work, especially in the country districts. In any case the German pilots are not very good at finding their targets. Last week we had a raid a few miles from us, and over 100 bombs were dropped. The only result was one horse killed and a small bit of moorland set on fire. We are very fortunate in living out of the sound of the sirens, but we have had the house shaken with the bombs. As these raids have been at night we take no notice, not even do we stay awake, and we are only typical of most people.

After air raids the next worry is the rations, but even there we have no cause to complain. It is true that we have to think what to get for our meals, where before we just rang up the butcher and ordered a big joint. We get meat three times a day and that is all anyone can wish for. No one is as yet feeling these restrictions, and all are looking well fed and prosperous.

While the guns fire across the Channel, the life of the nation goes on as before. The beaches that are open are full of people enjoying the sun and sea. The cinemas have still a full house, and to an outsider the face of England is as ever.

England has this past year never looked so beautiful, never has the land been so fruitful. We have had rain just when it was needed and the harvest has been the best for a long time. So that with the help of the Empire we are prepared for a long siege, any way as far as food is concerned.

We were very interested to hear that you have gone back to the land. It is hard work but it is rich in its rewards. My father has had to buy a tractor and plough up a part of his farm. Before the war we only had grass but now about one-third is under the plough.

We all appreciate your kind offer to help the many friends in the old land. I do not think that we shall be coming to Canada while the war is on, as none of us would wish to leave England now, but after we have done with fighting I for one shall try to find time to pay you all a visit.

May I again remind you to tell any of the friends that I feel sure we have in your country that their boys would be most welcome if they come to England to come to us. We should feel it an honor to try to take the place to some extent of the home that they have left, especially any of your family or any Tummon.

All members of the Tummons over here are very well and join in wishing you and yours all the best of luck.

Again thanking you for your interest and kind thoughts and your letters.

Yours sincerely,

CARY SHIRLEY.

His entire life was spent on those two farms and in the community he was well known and highly esteemed.

Mr. Tucker was married twice; his first wife was Miss Sarah Jane Phillips, whom he married in December 1885; she died in August 1890, leaving one daughter, Ethel May. The injured man was taken to the Belleville General Hospital where he was attended by Dr. W. C. Morgan. Mr. Allison's injuries were not serious and he will be able to return home today.

Men Working on Trenton Watermain Want Higher Wages

Trenton, Oct. 4 — (Special) — Striking for higher wages, a number of workmen today walked off their jobs, on the sewerage contract at the north end of Front Street. The men who claim that they were only getting 30 cents an hour wanted 40 and when this contractor refused the men walked off their respective jobs.

Chief Constable W. Bain was called to the scene but the men were peaceful and no disturbance was noted. The men after waiting on the corner for a short time withdrew to their homes.

The men were working on the extension of a watermain system now being carried out by the Public Utilities Commission to the Aero-Marine Crafts Plant on Lecaw's Island. Tenders had been called by the council and the contract was let to the one submitting the lowest tender, who is an Italian by birth but is a naturalized Canadian.

The men who went on strike this morning, were all Canadians and were resentful that the contractor was of foreign birth and that the foreman and a number of the men working on the job were of foreign extraction.

Work on the project was held up for a short time, until other men could be employed to fill the vacancies of the striking men.

High School students will make a drive this afternoon to collect rags, bones, bottles and papers from the citizens in an effort to raise money for a war fund. Boys and girls will work together in the drive and intend to canvass every home in the town.

Many of the students have borrowed the family car, while others have borrowed all sorts of wagons and carts for the job. Practically every student intends to do his share towards raising money for the needs of the war.

Bank Manager Leaves for Moncton

Trenton will lose one of its highly respected citizens when Robert Hunter, manager of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, leaves to take up a new post with the bank at Moncton, New Brunswick, within the next few days.

Mr. Hunter will be greatly missed by the many societies and clubs in the town, with which he has been associated during his stay here. He was one of the chief canvassers in the Red Cross drive, in the Salvation Army Campaign, the Y.M.C.A. Campaign, the Legion's drive and the Canadian Institute for the Blind.

The members of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church last night presented him with a pipe as a parting gift in token of his work for the church during the past few years.

Stirling and District

Stirling—The anniversary services of Carmel United Church were held morning and evening on Sunday, Sept. 29th with overflow congregations at both services. Rev. A. M. Laverty, B.A., B.D., conducted the fine services. In the morning he spoke on the text 11 Chronicles 20-17 "Stand still and see the victory of the Eternal who is on our side," a timely message exceptionally well presented. In the evening his subject was St. John 3, 7 "Ye must be born again." Special music was rendered by a full choir under the direction of Mrs. Arthur Pyear and solos contributed by Wm. Reynolds.

On the following Monday evening over four hundred attended the annual fowl supper served in the church dining hall followed by a splendid program featuring the talented Atkinson family of Warkworth and Miss Marion Rose.

St. Paul's W.A.

On Tuesday afternoon the members and officers of St. Paul's United Church W. A. met at the home of Mrs. D. A. Burkitt for their October meeting. The meeting opened with the usual devotional period under the direction of the president, Mrs. F. N. McKee who also directed the business portion of the meeting. Mrs. Nora Wescott gave the secretary's report and read several communications reporting also that 16 letters had been sent forth during the month to shut-ins etc. The attendance recording system revealed 35 ladies present. In giving the Treasurer's report Mrs. R. B. Duffin, treasurer, reported a bank balance of $114.67.

Preparations were made for the fall meeting of the Belleville Presbytery which will be held in Stirling and committees appointed. Mrs. C. Macklin reported for the visiting committee and Mrs. Girdwood and Mrs. Utman were appointed in that capacity for the coming month.

Splendid Program

At this point the meeting was taken over by Mrs. Geo. Pollard, convener of the program committee who opened the program with the use of hymn selected by Mrs. Geo. Rosebush who was unable to attend. The scripture lesson was read by Mrs. G. Keegan followed by prayer by Mrs. J. J. Wilson. In keeping with the Thanksgiving theme Mrs. N. Wescott gave a splendid paper under that title. Mrs. Wescott reviewed the history of Thanksgiving tracing it to its origin in Biblical history. This was a most interesting address exceptionally well given.

Guest Speaker Mrs. Chester Sills

The guest speaker of the day was Mrs. Chester Sills of West Huntingdon who presented an address of outstanding quality on the subject "The Lord Reigneth" in which she described historic events that were miraculous in scope God's will for righteousness prevails over all, she declared. In the darkest hour of the Great War of 1914-18 someone asked King George where it would all end....? He replied that God would have to perform some miracle. Several times, seven times at least, Germany had victory within their grasp and seven times a seeming miracle of the hand of God turned them aside from pressing home their last drive to certain victory.

The first use of poisonous gas was an example of this. Germany's meteorological authorities told the leaders that the wind was fixed and settled for 36 hours and it was the right time to use the gas. But in the midst of the attack the wind changed whirling the deadly poison back on the gasping, choking German soldiers. A miracle at the hand of God and accepted as such by German authorities who stated that such an occurrence had never taken place before in forty years of Meteorological recording.

This was one of the finest addresses ever presented to the organization. An expression of gratitude on behalf of the ladies to Mrs. Sills was included in a well worded address of thanks to the hostess, speaker and program committee by Mrs J. B. Thompson. Dainty luncheon was served by the following ladies who were responsible for the entire program: Mrs. Geo. Pollard, Mrs. D. A. Burkitt, Mrs. G. Rosebush, Mrs. W. Gunning, Mrs. H. Wescott, Mrs. J. J. Wilson Mrs. G. Keegan, Mrs. Gordonier and Mrs. Rodgers.

Former Marmora P. S. Principal Visits Village

Marmora — Marmora was favored with a visit last week end by a school principal of over half a century ago in the person of T. T. Grimmett, barrister of Edmonton, Alberta. Mr. Grimmett took over his duties at Marmora Public School in 1883, and continued in that capacity for two years, when to quote his own words, he went west "to gravitate" into law. When resident in Marmora, the residence now owned by Frank Sweet served as the school. In whimsical mood, Mr. Grimmett remarked that he did not apply for the school, but the school board under chairmanship of the late T. P. Pearce applied for his services. At the time he was teaching at Maynooth and he came to Marmora on the recommendation of the late Inspector Mackintosh, accepting the salary of $450.00 a year, which later was raised to $500.00. It is interesting to note that Mrs. C A. Bleecker commenced her scholastic duties here under Mr. Grimmett.

While paying this recent visit to the scene of his former labors, he called upon Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Bleecker and Thomas R. Warren, the latter being one of his old scholars. He also attended services on Sunday evening at St. Andrew's United Church, where during the ministry of the late Rev. Andrew Wilson, he officiated as organist. A native of Oxford, England, Mr. Grimmett is eighty-four years of age. Beside his wife, there are five children which complete the family circle. Three are resident in the United States and one of these, Dr. Grimmett, accompanied his father on his visit. He last visited the village seventeen years ago. He possesses great virility and is still a keen observer of the events of life and is a very interesting conversationist.

FRIENDLY AMERICANS CONTRIBUTE TO CANADIAN RED CROSS

Out in Hollywood last Sunday night, leading Canadian and British stars of the stage and screen took part in a Red Cross broadcast appeal for funds in behalf of the Society in Canada. It was a particularly fine effort and the reward was, also, splendid. Contributions will total $50,000 and most of them came from the generous residents of the United States who can be depended on to aid worthy charitable appeals. Donations ranged from small sums of ninety-five cents up to thousand dollar cheques. Along with many of these contributions were messages of encouragement and unselfishness that go a long way to further cement the friendly relationship now existing between Canada and her neighbor to the south.

One of the letters was outstanding in its unselfishness and we quote it in part: "The friendly relations which exist between Americans and Canadians are something to be more cherished as these days of struggle for liberty continue. In every way we should co-operate with each other to help carry the burden. As it is not possible for me to visit Canada this year, may I ask that my dividend, amounting to $95, be given to the Canadian Red Cross for the relief of the Canadian forces who, for us, are 'carrying on' overseas."

The Red Cross Campaign in Belleville is in urgent need of more funds in order to reach the objective that has been set. When we see how people in the States contribute to a war charity that is outside their country then that is the more incentive for us here to do our share and see to it that the Red Cross will receive the funds that are so much needed by the hard-pressed people of London and Britain. Give now and give generously.

FREEDOM OF PRESS ASSURED IN U.S.

Residents of Canada and the United States should be thankful that they have a press that can print the news as it sees fit and is permitted to criticize the governments of either country when, by that criticism, the men in power are reminded that they enjoy their privileges through the electorate and are responsible to the common people.

In Canada we have a certain amount of censorship involving military matters but the public is not excluded from the general news of the world and is able to read the good news along with the unpleasant. We know that everyone would soon get 'fed up' with the constant flow of propaganda and lies that the dictatorships feed their people. There is no one to question their method of doing things and if it is done once the rash person is quickly placed in confinement of such a character that his ardor for trying to improve on his leader's policy is quickly chilled.

This week in the United States is National Newspaper Week. Letters have been received by officials from both President Roosevelt and Willkie that further reassures the press of freedom from domination of either man. They express the sentiment that the future of the institutions in that country will never be jeopardized with the press on guard.

Mr. Roosevelt, in writing to the President of the Newspaper Association, has this to say: "I hope in observance of National Newspaper Week that due emphasis will be placed on the necessity of maintaining the freedom of the press in a democracy. Freedom of conscience, of speech, of assembly are among the very fundamentals of democracy and all of them would be nullified should freedom of the press ever be successfully challenged. If the press exemplifies a passion for truth and justice and fair play to all it will avoid that spiritual decay which is the deadly enemy of our free institutions."

The letter of Wendell Willkie expresses similar thoughts in saying: "News, accurate and unbiased, is the daily bread upon which a democracy feeds. Pervert the news and control the views of the press—those are the first aims in the would-be dictator's effort to undermine democracy. Freedom of the press is the staff of life for any vital democracy. So long as it remains true that our press is free so long will our democracy survive. So long as it remains true that the press of other nations is shackled so long will their peoples be living either under the urgencies of war or the whims of despots." He says further: "If I am elected President of the United States I shall fight for the right of the press to report honestly, and their right to honesty to disagree with me and my administration. I shall not try to coerce the press down the disastrous road of intellectual dishonesty nor to undermine the economic foundations of a free press."

We are glad to see expressions of such opinions coming from the leaders of the two large American political parties. It augurs well for the future of the country.

SELFISH DRIVERS

Down in Arkansas an elderly negress testifying in a traffic accident case told the court she did not see the collision, although she was a passenger in one of the cars. She said, "I was looking straight ahead and praying. I always pray when I gets in one of them things and keeps right on praying 'till I get out."

The way some drivers pursue their erratic way about the city and on the highways, must cause some of their companions in the cars to reflect on their past misdeeds and wonder if they will ever reach their destination safely just as the negress wondered although, perhaps, she distrusted all modes of modern transportation no matter how safe.

When one reflects on what use these lads make of the time they save by fast driving, cutting-in and whatnot we pause to ruminate over the frailties of human behaviorism. We would guess that ninety-five per cent of the time saved is spent in idle conversation, reading or other idle diversions and for that the lives of the drivers and their friends are risked and many times sacrificed just because they think they always have the cars under control. It is the unpredictable that is responsible for a lot of accidents and for that reason careful driving should always be the watchword and that does not mean driving at twenty-five miles an hour either. The too-slow driver is as much responsible for causing accidents as is the reckless motorist and both pursue their selfish way without regard for the rights of others. These are the ones we have in mind.

Battleships Still Supreme

It is said that the long-drawn-out controversy among naval and military strategists regarding the respective value of the warship and the aeroplane in modern warfare has been decided, on the experience of the present conflict, in favor of heavy sea-going armament. That is good news for the Empire, for Britain still rules the waves and all the deviltry of Hitler has not been able to wrest the predominancy from her or to seriously impair her naval might. The relative strength of axis and British sea power is in fact, considerably improved in favor of the latter as compared with conditions at the beginning of the war, much greater damage having been inflicted on Germany's fleets than that received from Nazi submarines, aeroplanes and mines. As for Italy's navy, it is careful to avoid any test, which is another proof of the importance attached by the axis to sea power.

The United States, facing an increasing menace in the Pacific, is spending an additional four billion dollars on its fleet, with special appropriations for the building of new battleships of huge dimensions. It has been argued that the days of super-warships are over, that aircraft has rendered them too vulnerable to justify the cost of construction. But that, evidently, is an erroneous opinion. Means have been found of coping with this threat from the skies, changes in fighting methods and naval armament are providing effective protection.

So let us rejoice that Britain is still mistress of the seas and that, in addition, she is rapidly assuming a position of supremacy in the air. With the United States organizing her immense resources in defence of human freedom, democratic countries can take heart and be of good cheer, as Prime Minister Churchill bids them. Our enemies may enter into new military alliances and do their worst; they have lost the power to dismay. The navy stands up to perils unknown to past generations; in the competition of new-found implements of warfare Britain is able to more than hold her own—stoically enduring and returning blow for blow.— Hamilton Spectator.

Another Cause of Low Back Pain

Backache is so common that any information regarding its cause and treatment is of interest to many.

For years it has been thought that most cases of pain in lower back were due to infection or injury, the joints between the last spine bone and the hip bones being the usual places where the inflammation started. From these joints the pain often extends down from hip to knee or even to ankle. This is called sciatica.

That another condition may be causing this pain in the lower back is now stated by research workers at the Mayo Clinic and elsewhere. They believe that the little disks or cartilage that form the "cushions" between the bones of the spine, can become inflamed or infected and cause the pain. The spine bones are called vertebrae and the disks or cushions are called intervertebral disks.

At the last convention of the Canadian Medical Association held in Toronto this subject of infection or by Drs. J. C. B. Grant, A. A. Fletcher, W. L. Donohue and J. Wallace Graham, Toronto.

Slides were shown illustrating the changes in the tissues of these disks due to infection, injury, or other causes. The substance forming the inner part of the disk broke through its outer covering, the shape of the disk was changed and pressure from the misshapen disk on nerves of the spine caused the pain. Some of these cases reported a slight backache followed by severe pain and a rise in temperature.

It is, however, difficult for the physician even with the Xray film showing the "bulging" of the disk to say definitely that this bulged or "prolapsed" disk is the cause of the pain because while 40 per cent of patients have changes in the disk only 5 per cent have symptoms.

Fortunately it doesn't matter whether your low back pain is due to injury or infection in the joints —sacroiliac and sacrolumbal —or to trouble in the intervertebral disks because the treatment is the same.

Treatment consists of getting rid of any infection present and rest in bed followed by the wearing of a belt or support.

British Bombs Welcomed

London — English girl dancers, thrown into an Italian jail as political suspects, heard from their cell the wail of sirens. Then came the sound of bombs—R.A.F. bombs.

There were 500 convicts in that prison. Panic-stricken, they beat on the iron doors and yelled to be let out.

Miss Catherine Dunne, safely home with her parents at Clare-road, Whitstable, after a flight across France, told of this prison adventure.

For five months Miss Dunne had been touring Italy. She was leader of a troupe of dancers from the Folies-Bergere.

Detectives went to their hotel, arrested her and two other girls, and confiscated their money.

As far as Miss Dunne could make out, they were accused of being concerned with gun-running to Greece.

"Our cell was verminous," she said. "We were in jail for nine days—and the food made me ill.

"On June 10, about 6 p. m., we heard cheering. I could hear Ciano speaking over the radio. And after we could hear Mussolini's voice shouting.

"Then I heard the Duce saying they were at war with England and France. His voice was drowned by cheering.

"It was on the next night that the air raid came. I don't like air raids here, but I thoroughly enjoyed that one! The din in the prison was terrific.

"On June 12 we were taken to the police station and told we should be repatriated:— and some sort of apology was offered.

"We were given two hours to pack, but could get none of our belongings from the theatre.

"We learned that the R.A.F. had caught the Italians quite unprepared for raids. The whole town was in a panic."

Miss Dunne described how the party reached Lausanne and were quickly sent to Lyons by the British consul. There they joined other British refugees.—Hamiton Spectator.

Nazi Plane Secrets Now Well Known To British Experts

London, Oct. 4 — (CP)—British air experts said today they have examined so many German planes shot down over Great Britain that they know almost all German aircraft secrets—even those of the latest planes.

Many of the planes, these experts said, have been in such good condition even after they landed that they had no trouble seeing every part.

They concluded that, while the performance of German planes has not been as good as the British planes, generally speaking, materials used in construction of the German aircraft were good, the workmanship sound, and the finishing excellently done.

The British experts said they found the fuel used was up to standard, although some of the planes had devices which made possible the use of substitute fuels.

In some planes, for example, there was a special tank of high-test fuel used in starting, after which the pilot switched over to a lower grade gasoline.

The German craft carried some instruments which are not in use on British planes, but these were not described by the experts.

Examination of the planes, the experts said, revealed that the night bombing of London has been carried out mainly with Heinkels, and with only a small number of Junkers 88's. The latter are used for daylight attacks.

The reasons were believed to be that the Heinkel night bomber has less defensive equipment than the Junkers 88. Consequently the Junkers are reserved for daylight, as they are able to put up a better fight against the British defenders.

The expert said that exhaustive tests have convinced them the German Messerschmitts are neither as manoeuvreable nor as fast as British Spitfires and Hurricanes.

British pilots, however, acknowledge they have a healthy respect for the Messerschmitt 110 twin-engine fighter bomber, which is regarded as an excellent plane and, the best in German production.

Another development discovered was that the Junkers 88 dive bomber has had its number of free machine guns doubled from three to six. This particular plane, dated Aug. 7, was regarded as one of the newest German designs.

DEFENCE MINISTER TO VISIT ENGLAND FOR CONFERENCE

Whole Defence Situation Will be Discussed With British Officials

HOUSE MEETS NOV. 5

Prime Minister King Announces, However, No Business Will be Conducted

Ottawa, Oct. 4 (CP). — Defence Minister Ralston and several of his officers plan to leave shortly for the United Kingdom to discuss the general defence situation with British officials.

Prime Minister Mackenzie King made the announcement to twenty Ottawa correspondents who gathered in his East Block office for a press conference last night. He said the intention is for Col. Ralston to return before the next business session of parliament meets, probably early in January.

Mr. King announced that the House of Commons and Senate will meet Nov. 5, but only for the formality of adjourning again. They will reassemble early in the new year unless some emergency like an attempted invasion of Britain or serious developments in the Far East make an earlier sitting advisable.

The prime minister also announced:

That Hon. Joseph E. Perrault of Arthabaska, Que., has been appointed a member of the international joint commission, replacing Sir William Hearst who has resigned.

That Dr. Bryce M. Stewart, Canadian-born authority on unemployment insurance, has been appointed Deputy Minister of Labor, replacing W. M. Dickson who is retiring on superannuation.

That James S. Duncan of Toronto, Deputy Minister for Air, will remain in that office for a further four months. Mr. Duncan accepted the post on a temporary basis six months ago.

Mr. King said "the situation as we see it now is really less anxious than when we adjourned."

Defence Minister Ralston would go to England "soon" with some of his officers. It was highly desirable that the minister learn at first hand the recent war developments before parliament meets.

Subject To Call.

Adjournment was taken in August, instead of prorogation, because of the general belief that members should stand ready to resume business in the event of an emergency. It was then arranged that if no emergency meetings were held earlier, parliament would meet Nov. 5.

Mr. King stessed that after the new adjournment Nov. 5, parliament will be in the same position it has been since August—being subject to recall if circumstances warrant.

In reply to a question, on the government's stand on exports of metals to Japan, following the recent United States restrictions on shipments of scrap iron and steel, Mr. King said that Canada has been retaining virtually all her resources in these metals for empire purposes during recent months.

The prime minister said that the three vacancies in the senate will be filled before the next business session of parliament. Filling of the vacancies will give senators appointed by Liberal governments a majority in the senate.

Discussions Due To Start.

Halifax, Oct. 4 (CP).—Discussions on the joint defence of the America's North Atlantic seaboard against invasion were due to start here today between United States, Canadian and Newfoundland officials, but delay in the arrival of Newfoundland representatives due to bad flying weather was expected to slow up the deliberations as they affected that island outpost.

Members of the Permanent Joint Defence Board of Canada and the United States were here for the one-day conference, for them the second in three days. The board met at Boston Wednesday before setting out for this key city of the eastern Canadian defences.

Whether the delegates were to consider the question of strengthening Nova Scotia's protective facilities was not stated on their arrival here late yesterday. None of the board members had any statement to make, but Mayor Fiorello La Guardia of New York, chairman of the American section, indicated one would be issued at the close of the talks today.

Col. O. M. Biggar of Montreal, Canadian chairman, also was non-committal on the question of what would come before the meeting. When he was asked if the board had considered any suggestion of U.S. troops being based in Canada, he said Mayor La Guardia had stated previously no such idea had been put up to the organization.

GERMANS SHELL BRITISH CONVOY

Two Salvos of Three Shells Fired but Convoy Escapes Around Coast

London, Oct. 4 (CP). — German guns firing across the English Channel today shelled a British convoy at the Strait of Dover.

The shots were fired at dawn, two salvos of three shells each from guns mounted near Cap Griz Nez.

The convoy carried its own balloon barrage—balloons riding high on cables attached to the vessels to keep possible air attackers at levels where anti-aircraft guns would find them better targets.

Inhabitants of the Kent coast were awakened by the gunfire which shook their houses.

ACTION DISMISSED

Toronto, Oct. 4 (CP).—Mr. Justice Ainslee W. Greene dismissed with costs the 300,000 action of John R. Green, Toronto lawyer, against a number of doctors and lawyers over his former committal to an Ontario mental hospital. Green was confined for a time in the Ontario Hospital at London, Ont.

He indicated, however, that Nassau itself might satisfy the United States' needs for airfield and seaplane facilities. Pan American Airways operates an amphibian airport here and Sir Harry Oakes, wealthy Canadian mine owner, has an airfield.

Representatives of County Gather at Bancroft as Guests Of Warden John L. Churcher

SPLENDID BANQUET

Worth of Host to County of Hastings Extolled by Many Speakers

Bancroft, Ont., Oct. 4.—(Staff)—Hastings County's famous northland, with its rugged grandeur and scenic beauty, provided a perfect setting here last night, when municipal, political and civic dignitaries of the county peacefully invaded this gate of the vacation lands as guests of Warden John L. Churcher at the annual warden's dinner.

The banquet usually held during the December session of the council was pre-dated due to the fact that the Warden not only desired to entertain in his own constituency but at a time when travelling conditions would be most favorable.

The mantle of natural beauty that envelops the woods, streams and other famed northland spots was outdone only by the aura of northern hospitality characteristic of residents of this part of the county. And if Warden Churcher had the motive in his selection of the locale of his banquet, to further cement the strong bonds of amity and good fellowship, that are already evident between the northern and southern communities of the county he succeeded beyond all expectations.

All Walks Represented

Naturally the members of Hastings County Council were the guests of honor. But augmenting the governing body were representatives of practically every walk of life, members of parliament, business and professional men of all parts of the county and the rugged agriculturists that are the life-stream of the country in these times of stress.

But officialdom was dropped in that easy atmosphere that is at once apparent when men of responsibility gather together socially. The only note of council decorum and sentiment came when Reeve George West, Madoc village, read an address that preceded the presentation of a handsome cabinet of silver to Warden Churcher and a beautiful tea-service to Mrs. Churcher. The address follows:

Presented With Silver Service

"Your Honor, Warden John L. Churcher and Mrs. Churcher,—

"The wardenship of the County of Hastings is an honor that comes to but few men. The exigencies of the offices demand loyalty, foresight, hard work, the well-being of not only the wardens own constituency but those of the far-flung sections of the county, sacrifice of time and other essentials, a keen brain, and an ability to assume a great responsibility.

"It is indeed then, a great honor, that comes to him who is selected to guide the destinies of this great county for the period of a year. It was with these qualities in mind, that we, the members of your County Council, selected you to lead us for the current year. That our trust in you was well-placed is beyond the shadow of a doubt".

"To you, sir, we wish to express our whole-hearted appreciation of the manner in which you have carried out your duties as the warden of this county. Your fairness and impartiality in dealing with questions of great importance as well as those of minor quality has marked you as one of the finest leaders this council has ever had. Your devotion to the welfare of each and every community within the broad confines of Hastings, has been an outstanding characteristic during your tenure of office".

"You have proven an able leader within the council chamber and a devoted friend in ordinary life. And we realize, that your efforts have not and could not have been done without the inspiration and assistance of a true and loyal helpmeet. To Mrs. Churcher and your family we likewise express our appreciation of their loyalty and help".

"To you, Your Honor, we present this cabinet of silver, and to you Mrs. Churcher we tender this tea-service. May they ever remind you of the many splendid associations made during the year 1940, and may they bring you the long life and continued happiness you so richly deserve".

Sumptuous Turkey Banquet

In the comfortable atmosphere of the Community Hall where Warden Churcher welcomed his guests a sumptuous turkey repast was served by the members of the Bancroft Lodge of the Eastern Star.

Chairman James Haggerty, took charge of proceedings shortly after the Bancroft Troubadors" a smart three-piece orchestra had played the National Anthem, and in a brief address welcomed the guests on behalf of the warden. He thanked the County Council for the co-operation given him and his staff during the year and without more ado opened the elaborate program of toasts and responses.

Warden's Address

In his address of welcome to his guests, Warden Churcher felt assured that paving of Madoc-Belleville road would be completed in its entirety. "I am in favor of a pay-as-you-go policy", he said, "so that we can stretch the cost over a period of years, I look in the future to see Hastings County have as fine a county road system as you will find in Ontario."

Warden Churcher paid a fine tribute to his predecessors. "If it had not been for their foresight, and that of the county officials, this county would not have its present fine financial status", he said. An added tribute was paid by the Warden to the present county council members and officials. There has been none but the happiest of associations between the county council and officials for a number of years, he said, and he hoped to see the same conditions continue.

Urged to Have Faith

He urged his listeners to have faith and confidence in the British Empire. "We are going to win this war, and after it is over we shall bring an everlasting peace and contentment to the world".

Replying to the Warden's address, Reeve Charles Rush, Hungerford, pinch-hitting for Reeve Chas. Wilson, Sidney, paid a fine tribute to the qualities of the warden. "He has given the members of the County Council, fine co-operation", he said, "and I speak for the body, when I say we are greatly appreciative".

County-Clerk Erle Denyes in his response also paid tribute to the warden.

"The northern part of our county, he said, "has always sent outstanding men to our county council and you Mr. Churcher have been no exception." Your ability to conduct the affairs of the council in a fair and business-like way has been a pleasure to the members".

"We have always had the co-operation of the wardens in council and you Sir, have given us your very best in this respect during your year in office. I would like to mention the fact that your section of the county has set a noble example to the southern municipalities in its response to the defence of the British Empire".

Canada is looked upon as the granary of the empire, Reeve Sam Nicholson said in proposing the toast to the Province of Ontario, and Ontario is looked upon as one of her main sources of supply. Her resources prove her to be a productive province and it is up to Ontario to provide those things that are so necessary to the empire. Canada demonstrated in 1914 that she could produce men and she is again demonstrating to the world that she can still produce men.

R. D. Arnott Responds.

Responding to the toast to the province, R. D. Arnott, K.C., M.P.P., in a ringing address, stressed the fact that there should be no politics in municipal, provincial or dominion affairs during the war. "Canada has one universal thought in mind," he said, "and that is the speedy prosecution of the war. We have no time for politics, nor no room for racial or any other discord. We have a terrific responsibility and must think of the generations to come rather than of ourselves. How we govern Canada now is what will happen to future generations.

"We can't be whipped," Mr. Arnott said, "and with the example of Britain in front of us surely we can bear our share of the load without any petty squabbles. The banner province of the dominion will again show the way to back up that grand old John Bull, and Winston Churchill to the hilt."

Mr. Peter McLaren, who took the place of Dr. Harold Welsh unable to attend through illness, in response to the toast, paid tribute to Warden Churcher, and the ladies who supplied the delightful meal. He also eulogized Dr. Welsh as "one of the most popular members in Ontario today."

"When we think of what goes on in Europe today," he said, "then we must realize what a wonderful heritage we have."

At this point a letter of regret at his inability to attend from Dr. Welsh was read. The popular Roslin physician urged County Council and residents of Hastings to "carry on" in the great struggle for democratic principles.

Toast To the Militia.

Dr. S. S. Lumb, Reeve of Bancroft in a brief toast to the militia pointed out the work and hardships of these units. He stressed the fact that 400 men from Bancroft had enlisted in the C.A.S.F. and "these men will meet Hitler on his own ground, and lick hell out of him." (Cheers). He closed with an appeal for funds for the Red Cross.

Major Babcock, O.C. the Bancroft Company of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment N.P.A.M. Battalion, outlined the work of the militia previous to the war. The permanent force numbered roughly 5,000 men and all militia units wondered which would be called.

Hastings County should be proud, he said, of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment, the first rural unit to be mobilized for active service. It was an honor for the community, he said. He paid tribute to his Bancroft company, saying there "were none more willing or enthusiastic than the boys from this village."

"We are here to back up the C.A.S.F., our parent regiment of the H. and P. E. Regiment." He suggested that the singing of "O Canada' be made compulsory in the schools of the Dominion, also of the favorite song, "There'll Always Be An England".

Dominion of Canada.

Reeve William West, Stirling, in the toast to the Dominion paid fine tribute to the British Navy, because "it ensures for us freedom as never enjoyed by any other country in the the world. "Thank God we have the men and the ships to defend us," he said.

While Canada's natural beauties and her resources and industries are something to be proud of, we must not forget that agriculture is helping feed the people who are defending us." He paid tribute to the Canadian farmers who are growing produce for the nation and not squabbling over the price. "If Canada produces the stuff," he said amid applause, "the British Navy will see that the boys get it."

Canada is playing a remarkable role in this war, George H. Stokes, M.P., said in responding to the toast to the Dominion. The axis powers are jealous of Great Britain because they want to reap what she has sown. "They are nothing but parasites", he declared. Canada does not really realize what war actually means because she has not been attacked, he said. "We must realize what a blessing it is to live in this Dominion".

County of Hastings

Alderman Harry Rollins, who represented the City of Belleville, in place of Mayor G. E. Thompson, who was unable to attend through a previous engagement, paid tribute to the men and women of the county who have joined the colors. He brought greetings from the city of Belleville and noted with enthusiasm the fact that the communities of the county have been drawn closer together through the medium of good roads and automobiles.

He predicted a wonderful future for the County of Hastings, with her as yet undeveloped resources and natural vacation attractions. The greatness of Hastings County, he said, was due to the leadership of its wardens, illustrious men, who gave wise guidance and brought the county to its present fine status.

"Yet, looking over the lists of his predecessors", Alderman Rollins said, "I do not think any one of them has added as much dignity to the office or lived up to county traditions as has Warden Churcher".

Responding to the toast Reeve W. J. Davis, Bangor, stated "there is no more north and south in Hastings County. We are all one family". We in the north are pleased at the treatment we received in the south especially the city of Belleville and we hope we can return that treatment with our vacation possibilities".

Reeve Davis felt, that those left behind are doing as much for the Empire in their own capacity as the boys overseas. Hastings County was the banner county of the best province in Ontario and he hoped the association between north and south would inspire residents to better fellowship, which will lead to democracy and the ultimate victory of the Empire".

Reeve Charles Kerr, Tweed, in his response, felt that Hastings County provided the most progressive farmers in Ontario. The county also provided the best resources, and attraction for tourists in the district and he urged that everything be done to bring them here. He reviewed the history of the county from the early pioneers to the present day.

Our Guests

Bancroft has long been noted for its hospitality, Reeve Thomas Fleming, said in proposing the toast to "Our Guests," "and tonight is no exception." He extended on behalf of the County Council a hearty wecome to the guests closing with a humorous poem pertaining to the banquet.

In his response Mr. C. L. Jewell, Belleville, paid a tribute to Warden Churcher in the way in which he conducted the county's business during his tenure of office. He thanked the warden on behalf of the guests, adding the time was most opportune to see the northland in all its autumn splendor.

Farmers of Hastings County have increased production in all phases of agriculture. H. L. Fair, county agricultural representative said, in his response. It is the definite job of the farmer to keep up the production of cheese for that is a basic food of the boys overseas. Hastings County is producing more than her quota, he said.

The Ladies

Reeve G. B. Bedford paid tribute to the ladies of the Eastern Star lodge, who served the sumptuous repast. "No organization does more work and gets less credit than do women's associations, he said in proposing the toast. Mrs. C. O. Fuller, official of the Eastern Star replied briefly adding her appreciation of the warden and wishing him and Mrs. Churcher every success.

At this point the presentations to the warden and Mrs. Churcher were made. Both gave appropriate appreciative responses.

COLDS

Don't Upset Stomach By Drastic Dosing

Taking strong medicines into the stomach for colds may add to the misery by upsetting digestion. That's why 1 out of 3 Canadian mothers treat colds externally with Vicks VapoRub.

Just rubbed on throat, chest and back at bedtime, VapoRub acts on the skin like a warming poultice and —at the same time—gives off soothing medicated vapours that are breathed direct into the irritated air passages. Often by morning most of the misery of the cold is gone.

The Stars Say

For Saturday, October 5

By GENEVIEVE KEMBLE

ACCORDING to the lunar aspects this should be a very lively day with things of major consequence stirring in connection with groups, public or fraternal or humanitarian projects. Some rather drastic or seemingly ruthless action may be required to launch such promotions on a safe and enduring basis, as they may have profound and far reaching consequences involving the public welfare In these efforts confer with superiors or those in authority, for they will be in approachable mood.

Those whose birthday it is are to have a year of major importance, with much very decisive activity in the cause of public welfare, either of a political, diplomatic, spiritual or humanitarian purpose. Such aims and ends will be best promoted by the endorsement and practical support of those in power and authority. Seek this with confidence and sound plans.

A child born on this day may have much capacity for public work, with sympathy, understanding and insight into reforms, social and humane needs, general public well-being.

BYRNE—MURRAY

St. Lawrence's Church, Barry's Bay, was the scene of a wedding at nine o'clock on Tuesday morning of Norah Murray, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Murray to Dr. John V. Byrne, son of Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Byrne, of Stanleyville. The ceremony was performed by Rev. M. S. MacNamara, who later celebrated high mass with Rev. D. Breen and Rev. S. Flynn assisting.

Rev. Sister Theodosia presided at the organ and Miss Gwendolyn Billings sang an "Ave Maria" at the Offertory and later during the signing of the register, Miss Billings contributed "On This Day, O Beautiful Mother".

Mauve and white chrysanthemums were used to adorn the church. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Anna Mary Murray, and Mr. Edward Byrne was best man. Mr. Martin Murray and Private Wilfrid Murray were ushers.

A street length dress of French crepe in Airforce blue was worn by the bride. It was designed with a draped bodice and bracelet length sleeves. Her hat was a georgette model in a matching shade. She wore navy blue accessories and a corsage bouquet of orchids.

The bridesmaid wore a street length crepe dress of Dubonnet shade with navy blue accessories and a corsage bouquet of Token roses. A reception was held at the home of the bride's parents. The rooms were decorated with mauve and white chrysanthemums.

Dr. and Mrs. Byrne left on a motor trip to the Maritime provinces. The bride travelled in a dressmaker suit of British blue with Dubonnet shade accessories. On their return, they will take up residence in Trenton.

Those Unwanted Bristles

Eyelashes are a fragile growth.

By HELEN FOLLETT

It's no fun to look into a mirror and note that ugly bristles are sprouting on one's chin or that an incipient moustache lays a dark shadow on the lip. Superfluous hair is no minor beauty sorrow; it is a real grief and no mistake.

What causes that blemish to appear—it may come in early girlhood or in old age—nobody knows exactly. It is believed that some glandular disturbance is responsible though it has been observed that the daughter of parents who have coarse, thick hair is likely to suffer from this affliction.

For nearly forty years electrolysis has been used for the removal of hairy growths. The electric needle is placed in the pore beside the hair shaft. With a delicate sense of touch the operator can direct it to the papilla though the pore may slant or turn. Once at its destination, the current is turned on, the papilla destroyed so that a new shaft cannot emerge.

The skilled, conscientious operator will cause no scars; returned hairs will be few.

There must be a number of treatments because hairs that are close together cannot be treated; there is a chance then of scarring. Fifteen-minute sittings are long enough. The discomfort is slight, so no patient need be fearful.

x x x

Eyelashes are a fragile growth. The silky shafts are short lived, not like the hairs on your noble head that may be with you for six or seven years.

Styes and other infections of the eyelids can ruin the pretty fringes. To keep the eyelids in good condition, circulation on the go, bathe them night and morning first with hot water, then with cold.

To make the winkers grow long and curly and to give them luster ing. If the oil gets on the lids, so much the better. Shining eye shutters are more attractive than powdered ones. That's what I think, anyway.

DR. DAFOE'S COLUMN on the Quintuplets and the Care of Your Children

Bowel Control

I don't suppose anything gives a mother more pleasure than to be able to announce to other mothers that she has taught her baby to control bowel movement. I have talked to a lot of parents who pooh-pooh the idea that young baby can be taught not to soil its diapers, but I know differently. Our experience with the Dionne Quintuplets in the early days showed me just what can be accomplished through patience and perseverence.

The trouble is that many a mother waits until the child is six months or more before she decides that little Jimmy might begin to learn proper toilet habits. Then, when she has difficulty she becomes discouraged. Actually, during his first six months that baby has learned a lot of bad habits as far as bowel control is concerned. So he has to unlearn these before he can begin to master the proper ones.

The time to start a child on the path to proper toilet habits is before he has learned any careless habits. Obviously that will have to be right after he is born. As soon after as possible, in fact.

All this is somewhat of a new departure in the field of child hygiene, of course. Twenty or thirty years ago, we never thought of such a thing as teaching a newborn child bowel control. So, you mothers, don't be upset if some of the other generation laugh at you when you start it. Remember, the old timers know plenty about bringing up children. But they don't know it all, for new wrinkles are being discovered every day.

I think the proof of the fact that children can be taught toilet routine lies in the fact that children today graduate from diapers to panties much sooner than they did a few generations ago. I would say that today, the young idea dons pants at about eighteen months, or less. When I first began to practice over thirty years ago, the pant age was nearer two years.

Don't put off the bowl control routine for more than the first month of the child's life. We all know that as soon as the baby has its first nursing, then digestion begins and as the food passes down into the bowels, these organs begin to do the work nature intended. These bowles work with a certain ryhthm, and a watchful mother will soon catch on to this rhythm. That is, of course, the baby's bowels will have a rhythm so long as his feedings are kept to a regular and strict schedule.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Perennial Romance a Recipe For Spinsterhood

A 24-year-old girl, who seems to have troubles enough of her own on hand, now writes the column about an extra worry — her mother's lack of sympathy for the boy friend.

The facts of the case are these. The girl has been going "steady" with a young man of 28 for the past five years. The undeclared "steady" calls once a week, has Sunday night supper with the family, or he and the girl go on some outing. He's never breathed a word about marriage, unless his vague reference to their perfect companionship, even in old age, may be construed into some sort of long-distance proposal.

Her mother, who seems to be a practical sort of person, is infuriated with the "chair-warmer," as she calls the young man, and says, not without truth, that sort of man is "a barrage, smoke-screen and barbed-wire entanglement" (mother has been reading war news) against her daughter's meeting the right man and getting settled in a home of her own.

Now here comes the barbed wire. The girl is entirely and unselfishly in love with the man who is "wasting her time," as the expression goes. She says even if he has no intention of marrying her, she prefers his companionship to that of any other man she's ever met.

Her mother's railing against his stinginess cuts her to the quick, though to my way of thinking, mother seems to have some practical arguments on her side. This slow suitor never forgets her birthday. No, indeed. He sends her the nicest of cards. He is equally aware of Christmas, and gives her a box of candy — three pounds of the very best. And so devotedly in love is this young lady that she never eats it all, but saves a few of the choicer pieces, from one year to the next, just as souvenirs.

It's a question whether anyone so completely hypnotized by another can have this spell of spurious enchantment broken. Every argument that her mother brings up is true. The world is full of just such cases, utterly selfish men who absorb a girl's youth, opportunity and generosity like a sponge, and then leave her in middle age for something fresher and fairer. And these later fancies they invariably marry.

Would that any word of mine could make this girl — and others like her — see the sense of coming out of her trance, drop the dilatory chair-warmer, make new social contacts, and charge up the affair to experience.

There is another phase of these romances that go on interminably like a Chinese play. That is, that a girl's name becomes so linked with men of this type that a cynical world imagines she is his property and takes their association for granted. Her girl friends marry. They have their delightful enthusiasms over their new homes, later over baby showers and babies. The girl with the laggard lover has no part in these heart-warming experiences.

She becomes an onlooker before whose doorway the procession of life passes.

No use reasoning with men of this type. They are so ingrained in their own selfishness that they think the birthday card, the three-pound box of candy and their own society are a splendid reward for the sacrifice of a girl's youth and opportunity. We feel exactly like mama about this case. How do my readers feel? I should be glad to hear from them and publish some of their letters in this column.

GOOD MANNERS

MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

Condolences

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

What do you say when you wish to express your sympathy to some one who has had a death in the family?

P.O.

If you meet the bereaved friend on the street or in any other public place, it is kinder not to mention the loss or sorrow unless the friend mentions it first and thereby gives you the privilege of referring to it. In your greeting and in your warm-hearted handshake, you can express your sympathy and understanding. Then, if the friend mentions the loss, you can say. "You have been so much in my thoughts, and you have my deepest sympathy."

The point is that we should give the privilege of first mentioning the loss to the person most concerned. We must remember that to some people it is agony to talk about a loss or sorrow so near the heart, while other people find relief in their friends' words of sympathy and understanding.

If, by your question, you mean what we should say when we go to the home of a friend, much of what I have said above applies to this visit to the home. Again, a warm-hearted handshake and an understanding manner as we say, "Please know, Mary dear, what deep sympathy I have for you. I wish that there were something that I could do to help."

The friend's reply to this question will give the cue as to whether she wishes to talk about the loss, or prefers to speak of it as little as possible.

Proxy

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I am to have a formal wedding very soon, and of course this means a wedding rehearsal. I have been told that it is incorrect for me to take part in the rehearsal. Is this really correct?

Alicia

Yes, this is correct. The bride-to-be is at the rehearsal but she should not take part in it. She asks a friend to take her part, as a proxy.

The house was beautifully decorated in a colour scheme of yellow and white with trailing moss and autumn leaves. The dining table was centred with two bell-shaped cakes, one in yellow and white, the other pink and white and the names of Hubert and Carlyn adorned the cakes.

The guests had all assembled when the bride arrived and as she entered the room Miss Ana English played "Here comes the bride."

Miss Barbara Whitehouse gave a humorous paper on "Current Events" all about the bride and groom. Two romantic contests were staged and prizes given to the winners, a game of cross-words, a relay race called "Literary Events" and a game of "Drop Pins" provided an hour of recreation.

The bride was blindfolded and led to a previously arranged shower bath and as the shower of autumn leaves fell the blindfold was removed and Miss Hazel Dunham and Miss Gladys Pauley carried in a decorated bath tub containing the cup and saucer gifts.

Miss Isobel Beckett read an address of appreciation to Carlyn as she has always been a willing worker in the Sunday School Class and she will be missed greatly.

The bride unwrapped the gifts which revealed a lovely array of dainty China. She graciously thanked all the members of the class for their thoughtfulness and the members sang heartily "For she's a jolly good fellow."

Mr. and Mrs. Morton served a delicious lunch of sandwiches, cookies, bride and groom's cake, ice cream and fruit punch.

The evening broke up at a late hour with a vote of thanks to the host and hostess for hospitality and with every good wish to Carlyn and her husband for a matrimonial voyage of happiness.

Tommy Bridges and Jim Turner Engage in Pitchers' Duel

By JUDSON BAILEY
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

Briggs Stadium, Detroit, Oct. 4 (AP).—Two Tennessee boys who made good in baseball, Tommy Bridges and Jim Turner, shared the spotlight today as Detroit Tigers and Cincinnati Reds collided in the third game of the 1940 world series.

The sun broke belatedly through Detroit's morning mist to provide bright, cool weather for the game. Although he big park was sold out to its capacity of about 55,000, fans holding reserved seats were late arriving and at the time the game was to start several thousand empty seats were visible. Many fans had on topcoats and the women wore furs.

McKechnie said Lombardi who sprained an ankle on the Reds' last eastern swing, had improved daily and wanted to try again. The low screen in left field, 340 feet from the plate, may have looked inviting, too.

The lineups:

Cincinnati Reds—Werber 3b, M. McCormick cf, Goodman rf, F. McCormick 1b, Ripple lf, Lombardi c. Joost 2b, Myers ss, Turner p.

Detroit Tigers — Bartell ss, McCosky cf, Gehringer 2b, Greenberg lf, York 1b, Campbell rf, Higgins 3b, Tebbetts c, Bridges p.

Umpires—Plate, Lee Ballanfant, National League; first base, Steve Basil, American League; second base, Bill Klem, National League; third base, Emmett Ormsby, American League.

First Inning.

Reds—Werber hit the first pitch into the deepest corner of left field for a double. Trying to bunt, M. McCormick missed one strike, fouled another and then fanned. With the count of one strike, Goodman drove a sharp single to centre scoring Werber. F. McCormick looked at one bal land then lined to Campbell, Goodman holding first. Ripple was called out on strikes, after swinging viciously at four of Bridge's curves, foul tipping two. 1 run, 2 hits, 0 errors, 1 left.

Tigers—Myers threw out Bartell by a couple of yards. McCosky waited out a two and two count and then grounded out, Joost to F. McCormick. With the count two and two, Gehringer bounced out to McCormick. 0 runs, 0 hits, 0 errors, 0 left.

Second Inning.

Reds—Lombardi waited out a two and two count, then hit to deep right field and hobbled to second base ahead of the throw, sliding into the bag. Joost was called out on strikes on four pitches. Myers took two strikes and then lifted a high pop to Bartell in front of second base. Turner lifted a short fly to McCosky. 0 runs, 1 hit, 0 errors, 1 left.

Tigers—As Greenberg came to bat, the fans, some of them still filtering into their seats, gave him a big ovation. The slugger looked at one curve, fouled another into the dirt, and then swung futiley at a bad ball on the outside. York was called out, also on three straight strikes. Turner pitched another strike to Campbell, then a ball, and then Campbell doubled deep into left centre field. Higgins hit the first pitch directly at Werber and was easily thrown out. 0 runs, 1 hit, 0 errors, 1 left.

Third Inning

Reds—Werber bounced the ball over Bridges' head and Bartell came over fast to make a spectacular pickup almost on top of second base and threw him out. With the count two balls and one strike, M. McCormick punched an easy hopper back at Bridges and was thrown out. Goodman lined the first pitch to McCosky who made a running catch in short centre. No runs, no hits, no errors, none left.

Tigers—Tebbetts lifted a high fly to Ripple in left field. Bridges fanned on three consecutive pitches. After looking at two balls, Bartell lifted a high fly to M. McCormick. No runs, no hits, no errors, none left.

Fourth Inning

Reds—F. McCormick topped one ball which rolled foul by inches outside the third base line, and then grounded out to Higgins. Ripple took one strike and then was thrown out by Gehringer. Lombardi took two strikes and then grounded to Higgins and was thrown out by 15 feet. 0 runs, 0 hits, 0 errors, none left.

Tigers—McCosky looped the first pitch into left centre for a single. Gehringer also hit the first pitch through first base, F. McCormick just getting his bare hand on the ball, and it went on to right field for a single sending McCosky to third. Greenberg looked at a ball, and then grounded into a fast double play, Werber to Joost to F. McCormick, McCosky scoring. York hit the first pitch sharply to right for a single. Campbell grounded out to F. McCormick, unassisted. 1 run, 3 hits, 0 errors, 1 left.

Fifth Inning

Reds—Joost fouled once, waited out a three and two count, and then lifted a fly to McCosky. Higgins, who was supposed to be unable to go to his left, made a great pickup of Myers' grounder, spinning clea raround and then threw him out. Turner hit the first pitch high and far into right field but Campbell pulled it in. 0 runs, 0 hits, 0 errors, none left.

Tigers—Higgins struck out on five pitches, one of them a foul. Tebbetts lined to Werber. On a three and one ball, Bridges sent an easy grounder to Werber and was thrown out. No runs, no hits, no errors, none left.

FEUCHTWANGER FLEEING TO U.S.

Great German Novelist is Pursued Through France By Nazis

Lisbon, Portugal, Oct. 4—(AP)—The shores of the United States are fast drawing near for Lion Feuchtwanger, little man who won fame as one of Germany's greatest novelists. He is a fugitive now from the concentration camps both of his native land and of France.

After months of hardship and adventure, he boarded the American export liner Excalibur, due in New York tomorrow.

Once aboard ship, the man who wrote "The Ugly Duchess", "Power" and other books, and recently "Paris Gazette", paced the deck and talked of his experiences.

Only September 18, it was reported in Berlin that he was in the hands of German police, but he was not.

House and Belongings Confiscated

"In March, 1933," he said, "my house and all my belongings were confiscated and I had to build a new home in France, near Toulon.

"There I lived during seven years writing and fighting in my own way. These were years of hard work, but more of worry. I was much concerned to see that the harder Germany was working toward war, the deeper and sounder seemed to become the sleep and indifference of certain countries—of France, mainly".

Then came September, 1939, and war. As an anti-Nazi leader, Feuchtwanger conferred with President Albert Lebrun. A few days later he was interned, then released.

'Hidden Power' the Gestapo

The novelist sought to leave the country, but was blocked, despite the aid of influential French and British friends, he said. He blames the German secret police, the Gestapo.

"Call it the Fifth Column if you like", he said, "but it had increasing power in France. A hidden power was holding me there".

On May 20, he was interned again, in a concentration camp near Marseille, while his wife was interned at Gurs in the Pyrenees.

"Forty-two persons in this camp already had been sentenced to death by Hitler. For us it was the approach of the execution squad.

"That night the German playwright, Hassen Clewer, went to sleep and did not awake. He had taken enough of a sleeping potion to give him eternal sleep.

Only Standing Space in Train

"He died a few minutes before a train came and took us to Bayonne—2,600 prisoners with space in the coaches only to stand.

"At Bayonne we learned that the German army was only two hours away. Our journey recommenced. Once our train stopped in a tunnel and we heard with terror that the Germans had blocked its passage to trap us there. Finally, we reached Nimes and there were interned again. . . .

"My only desire then was to escape and with the help of some American friends I did."

GERMAN-HELD NORWAY PERSECUTES JEWS

Berlin, Oct. 4—(AP)—The newspaper Boersen Zeitung, in a dispatch from Copenhagen, said today Jews would be excluded from German-occupied Norway's civil service and that Jewish stores in Norway must be marked as such.

The dispatch also said the Norwegian Rotary Club had been banned.

Many Experienced American Airmen Now Instructors in RCAF

New York, Oct. 4 (CP)—A bomb released from an aircraft strikes the earth in 10 seconds. Disregarding air resistance, at what altitude was the bomb released?

Many applicants for a commission in the United States army air corps couldn't answer that test question—it's 1,608 feet—and that's one reason why some of them now are instructors in the Royal Canadian Air Force.

They may be married and have dependents or haven't the college education required for admission to the peacetime American air corps but they can fly—many of them have hundreds of hours in the air—and they can teach greenhorns to fly. That's all Canada is asking right now.

Indicative of the publicity Canada and Canada's war effort is receiving in United States newspapers just now, PM, New York's new evening paper, currently runs pages of pictures of Americans who now are in the R.C.A.F. Most of them are instructors in the schools set up under the Commonwealth Air Training Scheme.

There's John Curry of Dallas, Tex., who has 1,500 hours in the air. Frank Sage of Los Angeles tired of the life insurance business and went back to flying. Bill Decker of Madison, Wis., wearied of 'hanging around" trying to join the United States air corps. He jumped at the chance to fight for Britain. They are among scores of American fliers believed to be in the R.C.A.F. now.

Air Scheme Featured

The Air Training Scheme and Canada's part in it has been prominent in articles written by the score of American newspapermen who toured eastern Canada last week at the invitation of Canadian publishers. They got a close-up view of the Dominion's war effort and upon returning home wrote of what they saw. No restrictions were placed upon them.

Lowell Limpus, military expert of the New York Daily News, deals today in the third article of a series upon conditions at Camp Borden. Summing up his reaction, he wrote that Canada "has created a great 'air university'," and went on to tell of the extensive training fledging pilots receive.

Limpus added:-

"Students from all over the British Empire are at last beginning to slide through this 'air university,' like mechanical parts on a conveyor belt. All of them go from one of the three manning depots, where they are sorted out into potential pilots, gunners and observers, to the initial training schools for the basic four weeks' course. Then they're separated and put on different belts."

Writing in the Watertown, N.Y., Daily Times, John B. Johnson also dealt at length on his impressions of Canada's effort in the war. He termed it "one of the biggest features of the present British war organizations." The program "is well into second gear with about 2,000 men receiving instruction as pilots and about 4,000 in other phases of air work."

Somewhat neglected in the American press' current attention to Canada's armed forces, the Royal Canadian Navy is the sole topic of William Davis Taylor's third article in the Boston Daily Globe. He summed it up: "Her navy is very young but proves to be very smart."

Spanish Non-Belligerency Eases Britain's Great Task

(By Kirke L. Simpson)

Washington, Oct. 3—(AP)—The Battle of Britain roars on amid an exchange of lethal and verbal bomb blasts by the belligerents; but Spain has voted to stay out. She is not convinced that her Nazi-Fascist friends have yet licked John Bull and his navy.

This is the crux of the war news on the political front. It has military potentialities far deeper than the mere matter of Spain's future role in the struggle. It could go far toward reshaping the course of the war either in the West or in the Mediterranean theatre.

The most obvious explanation for Spain remaining out of the war is General Franco's apprehension that an airtight British blockade of Spain would invite starvation-bred disorders there that could unseat him as military dictator.

As the nation in Europe occupying the best ringside seat to observe the Battle of Britain, Spain's indicted decision to stay out of it is an important development. It means Britain faces only a two-front, not a three-front attack this winter.

There is not going to be a siege of her Gibraltar sentry-box at the western outlet of the Mediterranean. It could be attacked by land only from Spain. That, added to rising doubts that Hitler will dare to invade Britain in the near future, is cheering for Britons.

Yet they cannot dismiss the invasion danger entirely. If Hitler loses confidence that Italy, with what additional help he can supply, can crack Britain's hold on the eastern gateway to the Mediterranean, the Suez Canal, he may be forced to risk invasion despite ever-mounting odds against success.

Autumn and winter are the seasons of military hibernation in all schools of strategy. To military minds, an Indian Summer attempt on Britain would be an evidence of German desperation, not strength. A few days' repeat performance of summer weather in mid-October would hardly suffice for as big a job as invading Britannia, who still rules the British air in daylight, in addition to holding sway on the wave.

Yet Spain's non-involvement also must be reflected in changed factors on the other possible winter front, the Eastern Mediterranean. The Italian advance in Egypt seems already desert-stranded, far from its goal of the Suez Canal. With the Straits of Gibraltar open and invasion of Britain definitely off, Britain could easily reinforce her sea and air power in that sector, even ship additional troops to Egypt.

She already can prevent German or Italian troops and supplies from reaching Egypt by sea on any important scale. Whether Mussolini will risk disaster there, and the possible internal repercussions in Italy which could end his sway remains to be seen. There is much to indicate he started that drive on the same principle that timed his entry into the war. He believed the Battle of Britain was already just about won.

The Italians are "consolidating" at the Sidi Barrani spearhead of their Egyptian thrust. In lay language that means digging in for defense, not offense. It may be that Rome never expected to go farther; that she expected to fall off Britain weeks ago. Taking on a full-sized desert campaign with hundreds of waterless miles still to go is something else, particularly if Nazi abandonment of the invasion threat frees Britain to reinforce her Eastern Mediterranean flank.

MARRIED HAVE FEWER PROBLEMS

More Successful in Avoiding Prison, Asylums and Undertaker, Says Dr. Popenoe

Eagle Rock, Calif., Oct. 4 (AP)—Married people have fewer problems than unmarried and are more successful in avoiding prison, insane asylums and the undertaker, Dr. Paul Popenoe, General Director of the Institute of Family Relations, declared today.

The extraordinarily high rate of insanity, suicide and imprisonment, and the short span of life, of the single, divorced and widowed as compared with married persons, is the best possible evidence that those outside of marriage do not lack serious problems," he said in an address.

A study of 5,000 persons made by the National Recreation Association, Dr. Popenoe said, "showed that it is the unmarried, not the married, who slump steadily into a rut."

Dr. Popenoe cited the fact that the divorce rate of college graduate women is four times as high as that of college graduate men" as indicating that "the present education of women, largely dominated by unmarried women, is a failure in too many instances."

HIGH EXPLOSIVE DOES DAMAGE

Canadian Government's Exhibition Warehouse in London Sustains Damage

By J. F. SANDERSON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Oct. 4 (CP).—The Canadian government's exhibition premises in London have been severely damaged by a high explosive bomb. None of the employees were injured. All were in shelters when the bomb fell.

The premises were used to house the permanent staff of the Department of Trade and Commerce who handle Canadian exhibition displays in Europe.

There was no estimate of the damage to the building but it can be repaired and used again. One official described the building as looking "as if it had been hit with a hammer."

Used As Storage.

Ottawa, Oct. 4 (CP)—The Canadian government's exhibition location in London, hit by a high explosive bomb, is a warehouse used for storing exhibits. Information received here today is that whereas the building which is leased by the Department of Trade and Commerce suffered considerable damage the exhibits, some of which are valuable, escaped.

Since the Wembley Exhibition in 1926 the Trade Department has kept intact its exhibits in the United Kingdom which before the war were used for a series of Canadian shopping weeks in various centres to encourage the purchase of Canadian products.

No One in Building

The department also joined frequently in fairs held by the manufacturers of the United Kingdom. The warehouse was used to store these exhibits and as a place where carpenter work could be done in rebuilding them. Except for a few workmen and watchmen there is no staff in the building. As far as can be learned no one was in the building when it was hit.

L. R. Avery, director of exhibitions and publicity for the department, in the United Kingdom is in charge but his offices are in Canada House.

Planes Massed By Thailand, Bangkok Reports

Thai Legation in London Declares Demands Are 'Based on Equity'

London, Oct. 4—(CP)—The Thai legation, in a statement issued today, described demands by Thailand (Siam) for settlement of frontier questions in French Indo-China as "based on equity" and intended to strengthen friendship with France.

An exchange telegraph dispatch from Bangkok said Thailand is massing planes and troops at the northwestern frontier of Indo-China to enforce settlement of territorial claims in the Me Kong River region which constitutes part of the border between Thailand and the French colony.

The Manchester Guardian, discussing "Thailand and the 'new order,'" said:

"The wretched Petain Government, having been obliged to grant Japan a right-of-way and air and naval bases in Indo-China, is now being harried by Japan's client state (Thailand) in that area."

The Guardian said that "under Japanese domination, Thailand—within easy flying distance of Singapore—could cause us a deal of trouble."

60-Year-Old Widow Sobs As She Sits in Ruins of Parlor

Carries Away Parrot Which She Has Had for Thirty Years

4 HOURS OF BOMBING

(By Douglas Amaron, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Oct. 4—(CP)—Sobbing, her bloodshot eyes all but hidden behind circles of sleeplessness, a 60-year-old widow sat amid the rubble of her bomb-shattered parlor and exclaimed "God knows I'm no coward but it's done for me."

She was one of hundreds of women and children who went through four hours of hell on one of the nightly raids when Germans unloosed their bombs into a densely populated section of central London.

Her home escaped the full force of the Nazi blast but windows were shattered and broken glass and the dust of fallen plaster made their mark in every room.

Controls Sobs

When I saw her she was trying bravely to pull herself together, trying to control the sobs that came only after the raiders had passed and she had done all she could for her less fortunate neighbors.

The streets, the broken remains of houses still smouldering, as worn firemen poured water into them and the dazed, weeping women in doorways told of the night.

A cup of tea quietened the widow's nerves and she began packing two suitcases preparatory to leaving for the country.

"I'll get a few things away anyhow," she said. "They may get the rest but I can't help it. I can't stay tonight.

Does Not Forget Parrot

She finished packing and called a cab. Then she took down her parrot from his perch.

"There's no room but I've had Polly for 30 years. I can't leave him."

As she drove away she looked back at the littered street and called out good bye.

"I'm sorry I broke down," she said, "but I'm an old woman. If I were younger, I would stay. They wouldn't get me away. I hope you'll understand."

ITALIANS BITTER AT GEN. FRANCO

Traveller From Spain Reports Italy Needs Spanish Help to Close Gibraltar

New York, Oct. 4—(CP) — The New York Times today published an account of conditions in Spain, obtained from a traveller who has just been through that country, in which it was stated the Italians are bitter at Gen. Franco for keeping Spain out of the war.

The traveller said he was "not yet convinced that Germany is particularly anxious to have Spain in the war." He continued: "Germany has her troops at the frontiers; she has her agents throughout Spain and is generally strengthening her grip over the government. But Spain is a valuable source of supply and means of communication as a non-belligerent, while if she gets into the war she will be a weak ally."

The Italians are bitter, however, he said, because "their fleet cannot keep the sea against the British, and they desperately need Spanish help in closing the Strait of Gibraltar."

Those who want war are the Falangists, led by Ramon Serrano Suner, Gen. Franco's brother-in-law, "and the Falange is steadily becoming more unpopular."

The traveller saw the possibility that a coup d'etat backed by the Germans and Italians might oust Gen. Franco. "The axis people are more and more dissatisfied with Gen. Franco because of the firm rein he has kept so far on Senor Suner."

Delegates From Three Counties Attend Women's Institute Convention

Women's Institute Convention Reveals Active Part of Members In Program for Home and Country

Delegates Assemble in St. Thomas Parish House for Annual Meeting of Prince Edward, Hastings and Northumberland Districts

At St. Thomas Parish House on Thursday morning visitors delegates to the annual Women's Institute convention for Hastings, Prince Edward and Northumberland opened the carefully planned sessions with a review of the highlights of each district. Flags, Institute banners, flowers and a display of beautifully finished handiwork decorated the room and made the surroundings ideal for event. Community singing was led by Mrs. H. Harrison, with Mrs. Snider as pianist.

Mrs. Jas. Bailey, Eldorado, convention chairman presided at the opening of the convention and in her interesting address on "Home and Country". When one considers what home and country mean, she said, it is a very big special. Every woman in her own home, knows the profound significance of the word "home."

Miss Mary A. Clarke, superintendent of the Ontario Women's Institute, Toronto, and Mrs. E. Duke, Provincial President, Federated Women's Institutes of Ontario, brought greetings to the convention stressing the spirit of friendliness which prevailed at Belleville area convention.

A survey of each district was made in reports of the highlights of the past year. Prince Edward, reported by Mrs. E Gorsline has ten branches and 345 members banded together to work for home and country. An officers' rally was an interesting event. Of late months the members specialized in making 2160 lbs jam for soldiers, for the manufacture of which half a ton of sugar was used.

Mrs. R. E. Drope, Harwood, gave a resume of West Northumberland activities in which Red Cross work took the lead. Girls' work was given a special importance. The refinishing of furniture is the project undertaken by West Hastings, the report of which was submitted by Mrs. Heasman, East Hastings, too, stressed patriotism in its endeavours of the past year. Refinishing of furniture was the project, Mrs. R. Bunnett reported.

Mrs. G. Helson in her report showed that steady progress had been accomplished by East Northumberland. Girls' Club work took a leading part and the many peace time activities were maintained while patriotic ventures were undertaken zealously.

A most informative address was delivered by Mrs. T. L. Nickle, Provincial Board Director, speaking on the topic "The way I see it." Mrs. Nickle expressed her thanks for her appointment to her position and for the co-operation shown throughout her term of office. In visiting the district annual meetings she found that branches were all stressing war work, many linking themselves with the Red Cross, others working as independent units. One criticism the speaker made of district annual meetings was that the programs were too filled to allow discussion among the delegates on mutual problems. Nominating Committees greatly facilitated the business of the meeting. Mrs. Nickle advocated the gathering of historical data by each branch as a vital contribution to the archives of the district.

The treasurer's report was presented by Mrs. A. Mitchell and the auditor's report by Mrs. M. Vandervoort, Stirling.

Mrs. Duke in commenting on the morning session expressed pleasure at the progress of the work by girls, the future Institute members. She suggested that the agricultural representatives be consulted more often; they are always willing to be of use to farmers. Mrs. Duke congratulated the members on the year's progress. Miss Clarke also spoke briefly.

A delicious luncheon was served by the ladies of St. John's Mission at the conclusion of the morning session.

Mrs. J. Black, Warkworth, was presiding officer for the afternoon's session, which was opened by community singing, led by Mrs. H. Harrison North Hastings' achievements were outlined by Mrs. Woods, who proffered the sage advice, "don't walk in last year's rut." Red Cross work was undertaken and a splendid record realized by the district.

The report of Home Economics prepared by Mrs. C. Ketcheson, was given by Mrs. Hogle and showed that this all-important phase of the Institute's program was carried out in all branches. She spoke of the many items regarding Home Economics at the meeting and of the various projects undertaken. The report stressed the value of rural sanitation, and the free service of the Department in testing samples of water supply.

Mrs. Holmes presented a comprehensive outline of the study made last year in Canadian Industries and Agriculture, accomplished through papers on projects. Mrs. Holmes pointed out that women of Canada must carry on the very important battle on the home front by normal activities. The glamor of service as ambulance drivers must not overshadow the realization that there is an essential war service at home in Canadian farm kitchens and living room. Avoiding waste, buying Canadian products, saving materials formerly discarded, fostering handicrafts and cottage industries to replace imported articles were some of the ways in which the home front can be defended. The sowing of clean seed could not be stressed too much if successful crops are to be realised. The price spread should be studied carefully.

Mrs. G MacLaren, Melrose, reported on Peace activities. These included the study of geography, and history and interesting papers. The welcome of "war guests" and the endeavour to put them on a friendly footing was a step forward in peaceful relations. Above all, peace in the home and the training of children to respect the rights of others made for true peace.

Mrs. R. Badgley, Shannonville, showed the scope of the Educational activities undertaken by the district in her report on this subject. Increased interest was shown in all branches and one common factor predominated, a deeper appreciation of the Institute's organization and motto "For Home and Canada". The handbook was the subject of keen study. Following the "today's children live in tomorrow's world" branches fostered everything for the advancement of the school child. The new course of study was thoroughly examined. Adult education was not neglected and an encouraging number of branches had local leaders.

Mrs. Badgley advocated self education and improvement especially through the use of reading and radio. Self examination should be thorough questioning one's voice, logic, ability to relax, accuracy, realization of faults will be the first step in improvement.

Broadening out of interest among Institute members in the vital problems of health and child welfare was noted by Mrs. J. A McDonald, Hastings, in her report on these subjects. Increasing consciousness of proper diet, rest and recreation in their own lives and that of their families, and intelligent care of the sick was the first phase. Later was developed an interest in preventive medicine. Two suggestions as possibilities for study were public health services available and the state medicine. Last year, each branch introduced papers on the subject of Health and Child Welfare while practical interest was demonstrated by financial aid to hospitals, improvements in school conditions, vacations for underprivileged children and dozens of other sympathetic interests in child welfare.

Ontario President

Throughout the convention the comment and helpful suggestions of Mrs. E. Duke, president of the Ontario Federated Women's Institutes were of great assistance to the members during the discussion periods. Mrs. Duke addressed the convention on the "Building Up of the Provincial Federation". In 1914 there was one convention held, now there are 13 conventions held each year in the province which tells the story of the achievement, advancement and progress in the field of Women's Institute work.

While the Women's Institute always has been an educational organization members are only now becoming fully awake to the possibilities that are theirs through the materials supplied and the courses generously given for their betterment by the Department.

The twenty sub divisions into which the province is divided enables that number of representatives, composing the Provincial Board, to act as a central organization for the branches throughout Ontario. The Provincial Board is affiliated with the Dominion organization and the Affiliated Countrywomen of the world, and is represented on countless organizations for the welfare of the province. Convention areas should select as federated representatives women with keen understanding of branch, district and area work, who can contribute intelligent comment, and judicious advice on problems of the Board. Federated representatives should be able to give of their time and knowledge on matters pertaining to their sub division.

Mrs Duke discussed the many national enterprises undertaken by the Women's Institutes. She spoke of the life membership pin given to Lady Tweedsmuir on her acceptance of the position of honorary president and of the gift presented her on her departure from Canada: of the illuminated address to the Queen and the welcome extended the Governor General and Princess Alice.

Constantly changing constitutional laws and working plans keeps the Women's Institutes abreast of the trend of advancement today.

Wartime Work

The speaker dwelt at length on the war work of the organization, and the Central Fund for war charities ready for an emergency. A letter was read from England in reply to one from the Federation proferring help to English women, which stated that the women of England would not think of making any demands on their Canadian colleagues who were busy with their own war responsibilities and ties but asked only that the Canadian become letter-friends of their sisters abroad and form correspondence partnerships which made no other demands but that of friendship. This was felt to typify the fine spirit of the British people and the members were invited to make pen-friends if they so desired.

Art of Homemaking

Mrs. A. H. Foster, Cherry Valley, had an inspiring message for the members when she said she gloried in the growth of Institute work which had popularised the technical knowledge of housekeeping and made a career of home keeping and home making.

Cooking, sewing and the simple work of homemaking is not a haphazard occupation but a real art to be delighted in and contributing its share to the world's happiness and well being.

With patriotism uppermost in all minds it is well to remember that the first patriotism is to discard fear, to overcome moodiness and discontent and to inspire cheer. Above all, members should realize the profound fact that they are partners with God for home and country.

Yesterday afternoon's session was brought to an interesting conclusion with a Question Box conducted most ably by Miss Mary A. Clarke, superintendent of Ontario Women's Institutes who answered many problems submitted by the convention and in whose discussions the members took an able part.

Time of Challenge Confronts Groups, Individuals Today

Miss Mary A. Clarke, Ontario Superintendent, Dr. J. B. Reynolds, Port Hope, Address W. I. Convention

Outstanding addresses by Miss Mary A. Clarke, superintendent of Ontario Women's Institutes, Toronto, and Dr. J. B. Reynolds, M.A., LL.D., Port Hope, president emeritus of Ontario Agricultural College, featured the evening session in St. Thomas' Parish Hall last evening of the Women's Institute convention. Mrs. Jas. Bailey, convention chairman, made a most capable presiding officer. The Austin orchestra, smart in red and white uniforms, provided an interesting musical program during the evening, and were especially well received during their rendition of Mr. Harry Moore's patriotic song hit. Miss Phyllis May contributed a vocal solo in her charming style and the entertainment part of the program was completed with readings by Mrs. T. A. Tucker, a very clever artist.

The Parish House was filled with guests for this meeting which was one of the most successful evening programs in some years. Miss Mary A. Clarke, superintendent of Women's Institutes had a forceful and timely challenge for all earnest Institute members in her address on the importance of women's organizations in moulding public opinion. The Women's Institute is especially important in this regard because of its educational features. At this time all women's organizations are searching ways to serve to work and to sacrifice for their country's cause in its battle for Christian civilization where justice, truth, individual rights, neighbourliness, loyalty and interest in others are respected and encouraged.

Women's organizations whose members today, through the efforts of their mothers' battle for the franchise, enjoy the rights of citizenship, have the responsibilities that go with this privilege. Institute members in moulding public opinion begin in the home, with the youth, training them in good citizenship and responsibility.

In today's great struggle women's part is that of upholding of morale and in planning the reconstruction that must follow victory. This reconstruction can begin with the making over of the Institute program, perhaps, retaining the normal activities that are worthwhile, dismissing those which are merely frills. From this members turn to moulding public opinion in public life by making one's influence extend to home and community. Women's organizations should be one of the forces towards making more intelligent citizens by enlarging vision, giving knowledge and creating understanding of today's problems.

First of all one should learn more about Canada, about the people in districts far from home, study the importance of Canada in the world today and tomorrow, decide what should be her place and do the best possible to achieve it.

"Does the Women's Institute program contribute to this moulding of public opinion," asked Miss Clarke. "Is it living up to its responsibilities as an organization? We have a challenge to meet. May we face it as well as the King has asked us to, 'with courage, with heads held high, and chins up'."

Miss Clarke introduced Dr. J. B. Reynolds, M.A., LL.D., president emeritus of Ontario Agricultural College, distinguished at the convention last evening. Dr. Reynolds in a searching address spoke of the world of the past twenty-five years and of that period which preceded it and which offered such a striking contrast to the last quarter century. In the last two years in Europe many kingdoms have fallen, and Britain stands alone against the foe, shorn of even her allies of the first great war, facing with courage and steadfastness a formidable array of powers and making a splendid showing against tremendous odds.

Contrasting this situation with the Victorian era, the speaker pointed out some of the things of benefit handed down and wondered if those in the year 1940 are going to be able to hand down anything to the next generation, save the memory of the glorious deeds being accomplished in Great Britain in defence against the enemy. Like Mr. Valiant-for-truth in Pilgrim's Progress, perhaps the heritage will be the means to fight, for right, the skill and courage to fight, and some evidence of what we have done, in the scars and wounds received.

The Victorian was a pioneering age, as typified by Dickens, by Florence Nightingale. It was a period not altogether peaceful but peaceful when compared to the time of total war, today. It was an era of great medical discovery and of growing prosperity, climaxed by 1914 the most prosperous the world had known to that time or since.

No advancement and development in the 19th century was greater than that of literary achievement. Since 1914 there have been few first class authors, and English poetry has suffered tremendously, the speaker pointed out.

Reading from Dorothy Thompson's description of the miraculous evacuation of Dunkirk these moving words, "God means England to do something. I never felt like that in my life before, as though everyone was your brother; like the children of Israel after God divided the Red Sea; a nation belonging to the people who would die to save it. The little men in England would die to save it."

Heroes fighting and dying will remain a treasured memory in all people of the Empire for generations to come.

"THANK YOU, CANADA"

An expression of appreciation by the Bata Shoe Company of Canada Limited, on the first anniversary of its operation.

WE are one of Canada's youngest industries. Yet we have reason at this time to acknowledge gratefully the chivalrous consideration that we have received from the people of this great British Dominion. We appreciate the opportunity that the free Dominion of Canada offers to industrial effort honourably conceived and honourably developed.

And because of this sense of gratitude to Canada, we feel that it is a privilege to declare our unswerving loyalty as a Canadian Company, not only to Canada, but to that glorious Empire of which Canada is a part.

We are a Canadian corporation, without direction or control from any person or corporation in the United States or elsewhere beyond the borders of the Dominion.

When we sought to establish our plant in Canada, we gave the Government of Canada an undertaking that:

(a) We would strictly live up to all laws, Federal and Provincial, that control hours and conditions of labour and rates of pay;

(b) We would employ Canadian labour;

(c) We would employ no under-age labour;

(d) We would pay our employees wages comparable with or better than the average of the industry in Canada.

(e) We would grant our employees holidays with pay consistent with sufficient length of service;

(f) We would plan our production policy to provide our employees with all-year-round employment.

We have faithfully carried out each of these undertakings—and this has been officially ascertained. Indeed, we have done even more for the welfare of our employees. Already, our factory is now employing over seven hundred Canadian workers, a large percentage of whom are making shoes for export and so aiding Canada's vital need for foreign exchange. In addition, we are happy that the establishment of our plant has brought new life and activity to the communities surrounding it.

The resources of this Company are already pledged to the furtherance of Canada's war effort. Moreover, we have encouraged our men employees to offer themselves for military service and many of them have done so. Many of our women employees are actively engaged, in their spare time, in providing supplies for the Canadian Red Cross. We are proud of the spirit that animates these activities, and we are glad to encourage them, for the sake of Canada and for the cause for which Canada and the Empire are fighting so bravely.

It is a wonderful thing to live and to work in a free country, and to Canada we reaffirm our loyalty and our faith.

Beautifully Pitched Game By Bucky Walters Puts Cincinnati Back in Running

Allows Only Three Hits in Taming Tigers in Second Game of Series 5-3

RIPPLE HOMERS

Gorsica Gives Fine Relief Hurling Exhibition After Rowe Knocked From Mound

(By Gayle Talbot, Associated Press Sports Writer)

Detroit, Oct. 4—(AP) — A few well-spaced smacks by Cincinnati's batters and one beautifully pitched game by Bucky Walters had changed the entire complexion of the 1940 world series as the reviving Reds tackled the Detroit Tigers in the third struggle of the autumn series at Briggs stadium today.

Before yesterday's game anybody who would have offered a dime for the Reds' chances must either have been psychic or an incurable sentimentalist. The National League champions had looked plain terrible as they lost the opening game at Cincinnati, 7 to 2, and they were the first to admit it.

Today they had to be accounted almost a new ball club. They finally had crashed through and won a world series game, 5 to 3. Bill McKechnie's boys, who have felt for two years that they were a fine ball club, were riding the crest of victory and confident that they were on the brink of showing the American Leaguers a thing or two.

Win Helps Series

It was a brand-new series, as full of fight as a mountain bob-cat and packed with potential thrills. The Reds, after losing four straight to the Yankees last fall and another to the Tigers Wednesday, at last had got on the winning track and were out to do no good. A majority of the country's baseball writers who crammed a special train from Cincinnati last night were feeling much better about their original hunch that the Reds were due to win.

There was some substance to their feeling, since Walters who won his game and the Reds had knocked Schoolboy Rowe, Detroit's second-best pitcher, from the hill. The Reds appeared to be in vastly better shape for pitching.

Detroit's logical pitcher today—in fact, about the only flinger Del Baker could call upon — was the veteran Tommy Bridges. This admittedly would be Tommy's last appearance in the big series. Great star as he has been, Tommy is 34 years of age. He was tired in the latter stages of the American League race and was knocked from the box the last two times he started.

Reds Have Pitchers

The Reds, on the other hand, had a couple of strong winning pitchers to try to follow the example set by Walters yesterday. It either would be "Milkman" Jim Turner or Junior Thompson, either of whom would be a welcome addition to the Detroit staff at this juncture. And after this pair the Reds could come right back with Paul Derringer, who was knocked from the hill in the opening game, somewhat inexplicably.

An individual hero? Outside Bucky Walters, who limited Detroit to three hits yesterday, that probably would be Jimmy Ripple.

He is a somewhat corpulent young gent, who was sent kiting first by the New York Giants and then by the Brooklyn Dodgers. Neither team considered him a big leaguer. Yesterday he came up, all unbeknownst, and slapped a fine left-handed home run into the far distant right field stands with a mate on base. That was the Reds' winning margin. He looked offhand, like a good man to have around.

MAY BE SERIES' HERO

One-time manager of the Phillies and latterly coach of the Cincinnati Reds, veteran James "Pop" Wilson may prove to be the hero of the current World Series tussle between Cincinnati and Detroit. If Ernie Lombardi's injured foot goes back on him during the series, "Pop" may get the Reds' assignment behind the plate.

BURRARDS SCORE 17-8 VICTORY OVER CORNWALL

Vancouver Lacrosse Team Needs Only One Game to Make Finals

MORPHETT STARS

Centreman Henry Payette Scores Three Goals and Three Assists for Cornwall

Montreal, Oct. 4.—(CP) —Only one more hurdle stood in the way today between Vancouver Burrard Blue Bombers and a berth in the Canadian Senior Lacrosse final, and the British Columbians were confident that the obstacle would be negotiated easily.

The Blue Bombers took the first jump last night when they defeated Cornwall Braves 17-8 in the first game of a best-of-three Mann Cup semi-final series. Even the most ardent Cornwall fan couldn't see anything other than a Vancouver sweep after the game was over.

Once the first half was over, and the Burrards had become accustomed to the Cornwall style of game as well as the floor, it was easy to tell the eventual outcome of the game. The half ended with Burrards ahead 7-5, and the Braves were able only to add three more scores while their opponents fired home ten more goals.

The big star in the Vancouver victory was Bill Morphett, who tallied five goals and helped in another. Morphett started the Vancouver team off with a pair of goals on the first two shots of the game, got another in the second quarter and then added two more in the last quarter.

By far the outstanding player for Cornwall was Centreman Henry Payette, who equalled Morphett's point total with three goals and three assists. Beau Bradford was second high scorer for the winners with three goals and one assist.

Coach Les Dickinson of the Burrards expressed confidence after the opening tilt that his team would be able to end the series tonight when the teams meet in the second game. His players, too, echoed his sentiments.

Dickinson reported that the Burrards found a bit of difficulty at first in playing on a sandy-colored floor with white side-boards. The Vancouver coach said his team was accustomed to green floors and background against which the white ball showed up much better.

SERIOUS SALLIES ON THE SERIES

Attendance and Receipts of First Two Games Down From Last Year

Cincinnati, O., Oct. 4 —(AP)— Serious sallies, on the series!

Unless attendance picks up a bit at Detroit today in the third game of the world series, the principal actors in the big baseball classic are liable to get a slight slash in cash.

With the two openers at Cincinnati out of the way, attendance and receipts are a country mile behind the 1939 figures set in the Yankee-Red event which ended in a 4-0 route for the Gothamites.

The first two games at Yankee Stadium last year attracted 118,332 paying customers, the cash registers ringing to the cheery tune of $445,058. This year, in the limited-capacity Cincinnati park, the two tilts drew only 62,443 fans, and receipts of $292,542.10.

The players' pool last year, with the New York contests out of the way, totalled $226,979.58, while this year's two-game cash for the all-star cast was only $149,196.47—a slight difference of $77,783.11, which "ain't hay."

Players Share in Four Games

The players cash in on only the first four games, so the Detroit fans had better flock into the stadium today and tomorrow if they want the boys to get the right kind of a bonus for their good work this season.

Of course, the Tigers and the Reds aren't the only ones who will go hungry this winter if the ante isn't "upped," for the next three clubs in each loop cut a slice out of the world series coin.

And that fund, which for the first two scraps last year soared to $151,319.72, is down to $99,464.32 this season. Commissioner Kenesaw Mountain Landis, who took about 90 players away from the Tiger chain this year and then sat back to watch them take the American loop bunting, also comes in for a slash, on present returns. The Judge, who derived $66,758.70 from the first two 1939 games has only $43,880.31 coming from the Cincinnati set.

HONOR MEMORY OF KNUTE ROCKNE

South Bend, Ind., Oct. 4.—(AP) —This stronghold of football tonight and tomorrow will honor the memory of Knute Rockne, famed University of Notre Dame coach, with two premieres—in pigskin and pictures.

The Warner Brothers movie, "Knute Rockne—All American", will be given its first showing in four South Bend Theatres tonight.

The 1940 Notre Dame football team will make its bow tomorrow in a game with college of the Pacific.

More than 1,000 persons attended a memorial banquet last night in the University dining hall. Among them were Franklin D. Roosevelt Jr., Mrs. Bonnie Skiles Rockne, the coach's widow, and screen players Pat O'Brien —Rockne in the picture—, Gale Page, Donald Crisp, Charles Ruggles, Rosemary Lane, Rudy Vallee, Kate Smith and Bob Hope.

Rockne was killed in an airliner crash in 1931. In his 13 years of coaching, his teams last 12 games against 105 victories and five ties.

NEWARK BEARS WIN SECOND GAME OVER COLONELS

Chances of Taking Little World's Series Appear Extremely "Bullish"

SCORE 3-2

Base-Running Ability of Ed. Levy Turns Triple Into Homer

Louisville, Ky., Oct. 4—(AP)— Newark Bears' chances of winning the Little World's Series appeared extremely "bullish" today.

The International League representatives scored their second victory in two starts last night on the base-running and batting ability of big Ed Levy, first baseman, who turned a seventh inning hit inside the park, which normally would have been a triple, into a home run when Louisville Colonels were slow on handling the throw-in. The final score was 3-2.

Another homer, by Alex Kampouris, his second of the series, also figures in Newark's 12-hit assault on big Jim Weaver. Levy, who smacked four hits in five attempts, helped drive in the Bruins' first run.

Louisville kept pace with Newark for five innings, but after that they were kept in check by George Washburn.

The teams meet here for the final time tonight and Charley Wagner, who has won 11 games in a row, is the likely Colonel choice while Steve Peek is listed to start for the Bears.

The clubs will complete the best of seven series in Newark.

HAYMAN PREDICTS TORONTO ARGOS WILL WIN TITLE

Argos Clash With Montreal in First Game of Season at Toronto

TEAMS READY

Ottawa Rough Riders Journey to Hamilton in Other Big Four Tilt

By Sydney Gruson, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

We give you for what it may be worth as a portent of surprising things to come in the east's football season, opening tomorrow, the statement of Lew Hayman that Toronto Argonauts will win the Canadian football championship. Anything can happen now and no one will be overly surprised.

This brash statment of Hayman's might be considered as just another holler from a coach, a breed of man liable to say anything in the excitment attending the approach of the opening game. But viewed in the light of past experience in getting Hayman to predict anything, this statement has significance.

Just in case someone might like to throw Hayman's prediction right back at him after the season, or even when Montreal's entry gets through with Argos Saturday, it is given here in full.

"Take a good look at them," he said after practice last night. "Here's the ball club that has it—and will have it when the shouting's all over. This is the club to win the Canadian championship."

The Montreal-Argo clash is just one of the pleasant offerings in store for the east's football-hungry fans as the interprovincial and senior Ontario unions get under way. Montreal is the scene of the Argo debut while Hamilton Tigers entertain the union champions, Ottawa's favored Rough Riders. Hamilton Alerts travel to Toronto against Balmy Beach in the O. R. F. U. headliner. The soldier teams, Camp Borden and the 2-26 Battery of Sarnia, will try to make Sarnia fans forget about the old Imperials.

H. ARMSTRONG MEETS ZIVIC

Hammerin' Henry Makes 20th Defence of Welter-Weight Crown

(By Sid Feder, Associated Press Sports Writer)

New York, Oct. 4—(AP)—Hammerin' Henry Armstrong, the record-bustingest fighting man since the Marquess of Queensbury wrote the rules, adds a mark tonight for flaillers of the future to shoot at.

The little buzz-saw, who skyrocketed out of Los Angeles four years ago with his fearful pace and solid. wearing punches, and became the first fighter to hold three world championships simultaneously, now makes the 20th defence of his welterweight crown against the challenge of tough Fritzie Zivic in Madison Square Garden. Some 15,000 customers and a gate of $40,000 are expected.

If you listen to the gambling boys, Li'l Perpetual Motion has no more to fear this time than from any of the contenders he brushed off since he took the title from Barney Ross back in 1938. They're quoting odds of 1 to 3 in the Broadway betting booths, and there were few takers.

Yet some of the shrewder judges of the business fellows like Jimmy Johnston and Johnny Ray, were warning the public not to sell the Pittsburgher short in this one.

Armstrong is heavier now — around 145. He doesn't punch so often any more, but he takes time to get set to make every punch he tosses that much harder. And he still keeps up that eternal pushing forward against a foe.

Fritzie is no lightly regarded foe. He whipped the National Boxing Association's lightweight champion, Sammy Angott, a few weeks ago.

FIGHTS LAST NIGHT

Philadelphia—Billy Mims, 145, Philadelphia, outpointed Joe Ghnouly, 135, St. Louis (8); Lou Fortuna, 143, Philadelphia, outpointed Frankie Wallace, 143 1-2, Cleveland (8).

Between the Lines

with Ken J. Colling

A unique record never before attained by a Belleville lawn bowler, and perhaps not by any lawn bowler, was established by Clarence Clapp, of the local lawn bowling club this season. Mr. Clapp had the distinction of being skip for three club championship teams of the Belleville Lawn Bowling Club for the year 1940. The club doubles, trebles and rink championship teams were all skipped by Mr. Clapp, a record we believe was never before held by any Belleville lawn bowler and perhaps by any club member in the game. Clarence Clapp is far from a veteran lawn bowler, having taken up the game, made famous by Sir Francis Drake, in 1937. Two years later, that was last season, Mr. Clapp and H. E. "Sarge" Thompson won the men's club doubles of the Belleville Lawn Bowling Club when Clarence tasted his first morsel of bowling championship honours. Incidentally the Belleville Lawn Bowling has not decided its club singles championship.

Here is the unique record as established by Skip Clarence Clapp and his club associates in the winning of the Belleville Lawn Bowling Club doubles, trebles and rinks championships. On July 10th with "Irvy" Hefkey as his partner, Skip Clapp won the club doubles and Robertson trophy On Labor Day Skip Clapp retained "Irvy" Hefkey as vice-skip and added Doug Row his lead player to win the club trebles and the Corbin Cup. Then on Wednesday last with Row leading, Hefkey second, H E. "Sarge" Thompson was added as vice-skip and Skip Clapp's quartette was thus annexing the three club titles in one season, a truly remarkable accomplishment in lawn bowling annals. Strangely enough, if you will glance back over these names, you will find that Skip Clapp merely kept adding to his initial team of Hefkey and Clapp Row coming in for the trebles and then continuing in the rinks championship as "Sarge" Thompson was added to the championship team. There's one for Ripley and the book.

Two local baseball enthusiasts, Bennie Yanover and H. "Dolly" Gray, left yesterday for Detroit where they intend to take in all of the world series games played in the frenzied, baseball-mad Michigan City.

We wonder if "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling" is likely to be the theme song of the Yankees when Jim Farley becomes president, and with Joe McCarthy still directing things in the dugout

Do you remember when Walter Johnson, "The Big Train" of baseball, was fired as manager of Washington Senators at the expiration of his four-year contract eight years ago today. A former pitcher with the Senators, he led American league hurlers three times before singing as pilot.

Shades of winter, we understand the Jock Harty arena in Kingston will be open for skating sometime during the latter part of October. It won't be long before we'll hear the cry—"He shoots, he scores."

In case any person might become interested there is the nucleus of a strong baseball infield available for Belleville baseball next year. When Skipper "Doc" Empson moved Russ "Ripper" Collins over to first base against the Columbus Grads on Wednesday we firmly believe Collins has at last arrived at his proper infield post. "Ripper" has been kicked around the infield filling in capably at every position, but it looks as though he's set for initial sack work from now on. With Bill McQuaid at third, Nicky Sero at short, Lorne Jarrell at second and Collins holding down the initial sack, we suggest that combination is the best defensive inner works seen locally since Belleville had a good senior team, too many years ago Perhaps with "Speedy" St Louis and Alex Simpson around the catching duties for an intermediate team might be taken care of, but a reliable pitcher would have to be procured, to assure a league contending team in a district league. However, if a senior berth was sought a couple of other players would be necessary to round out a contender. It's a thought for 1941.

The National League threw off the shackles of American League world series bondage and domination when Bucky Walters fired a three-hitter against the Detroits yesterday. After a shaky initial inning it was all Walters and he stood alone between the Tigers and victory. Incidentally it marked the first win the National League has registered over their American League rivals in eleven world series starts over a period of three years and four series, including the present one. It was in 1937 that Carl Hubbell of the Giants beat the Yankees the only game the National League winners have won since 1936, up to yesterday when Walters really gave the Detroiters a pitching lesson.

SPORT SPICE — When Jimmy Wilson caught Bucky Walters yesterday, he was catching the slants of a former third sacker, who he personally had converted into a pitcher while manager at Philadelphia. . . . It must have been a proud day for Jimmy Wilson, as well as Walters. . . . They're calling them the "rebellious Reds" now. . . . The Tigers are blaming Greenberg for the loss. . . . They say had Hankus Pankus hit in the first inning, instead of hitting into a double play, Walters would not have lasted the inning out. . . . Ah, but maybe Walters had something to say about Greenberg's inability to hit. . . . Today we find a direct reversal of world series statistics, with a team batting average of .254 the Reds are leading the Tigers, who are hitting an even .200 as a team. In fielding, however, the strong defensive Reds are trailing the Tigers as the Cincinnatis have booted three to the Tigers' two miscues.

BELLEVILLE BOY SHINES AT HOME
—DAD GLADLY PAYS

You've got to take your hat off to this boy. He'll go places. Why? Because already he knows what it means to make and save money. He likes to earn his weekly allowance and he planned the way to do it—Yes sir—made a gentleman's agreement with Dad that nets him his pocket money every week. How? He keeps Dad's shoes spic and span—every day with a touch of Nugget Shoe Polish and a brisk rub-up. They're a great team Billy and Dad. And both agree that Nugget is a grand shoe polish!—Adv.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Oct. 4—(CP) — Stocks continued strong today, with prices rising higher. Several Gold issues registered new high prices for the year, the buoyant ones including Kerr-Addison, MacLeod-Cockshutt and Broulan.

Industrials were mainly steady. Abitibi common firmed 5 to 60 and Loblaw and Orange Crush Pfd. were stronger issues in the Foods. Bell Telephone weakened 1-2 to 155 1-2.

WALL STREET

New York, Oct. 4—(AP)—While Airplane, copper and Specialty Stocks edged forward in today's market, many leaders were unable to overcome light profit selling.

Steel and others recent climbers faltered at the start and, in the forenoon, losses running to a point or more predominated. Volume was about two-thirds that of yesterday. Near the fourth hour prices were above the lows in most cases.

Prominent stocks in the lower drift were U.S. Steel, Chrysler, Sears Roebuck, Douglas Aircraft, Du Pont, General Electric, Eastman Kodak, Johns-Manville, and N.Y. Central.

Resistant were American Airlines, Pan-American Airways, Anaconda, Phelps Dodge and U.S. Rubber.

Hiram Walker and Lake Shore Mines, in the Canadian section, dipped fractions. Distillers were steady. Canada 4s, in the Bond market, gained 1-2 point.

Prices Strong For Toronto Butter

With the outlook for the butter industry growing more optimistic because of the good domestic consumption and of some improvement in the supply position indicated in the latest stock report from Ottawa holders raised prices yesterday on the butter market. Trading was not active and buying was spotty, but buyers in need of supplies found offerings still light even at the advanced quotations. The first grade Ontario product sold at 24 3-4 cents to 25 cents per pound, the bulk of the business being transacted at the lower figure.

Sellers asked 25 1-2 cents for the product near the close.

Trading maintained a slow pace on the egg market, particularly on pullets, which showed some accumulation. Best demand was for grades B and C. The three top grades again eased one cent in the retail section, while grade C rose a like figure. Prices to shippers on pullets declined one cent.

HITLER, MUSSOLINI

leaders, here in the Italian Alps where their two realms join, lasted for two hours and forty minutes, ending at 1:50 p.m. (7:50 a.m. EDT).

At that juncture Hitler, Mussolini and their foreign ministers, Ribbentrop and Ciano, went to lunch in the dining car adjoining Mussolini's parlor coach, perhaps to continue their talks informally over the luncheon table.

No News Given Out.

Here at the little border town of Brennero, nestling in Brenner Pass, there was, of course, no word as to the precise nature of the conference, one of a series in which Hitler and his partner have planned world-shaking events.

Not a word filtered through the strong guard about the armored train, not a word through the drawn blinds of the parlor car. German sources at hand would go no further than to say that the conference was "lengthy".

Despite the unheralded nature of the parley, the entourages from Berlin and Rome mustered a show of ceremony never lacking from such events.

While the morning sun gilded the Alpine peaks and strove against the fog lying deep in Brenner Pass an Italian band played the Nazi and Fascist anthems, Hitler and Mussolini flung out their arms in the Nazi and Fascist salutes and shook hands on the red, flower-banked carpet spread on the station platform.

Mussolini was half an hour ahead of his collaborator at their rendezvous. He had time to review an honor guard of the Fascist militia and chat with Ciano and Hans-Georg von Mackensen, German Ambassador to Italy, before Hitler, travelling in an armored train, arrived.

Col.-Gen. Wilhelm Keitel, chief of the German high command, and Dino Arfieri, Italian Ambassador in Berlin, accompanied Hitler.

After this brief greeting Hitler and Mussolini crossed the platform to the latter's strain and shortly after 11 a.m. began their talks in the presence of Ciano and von Ribbentrop.

Nazi and Fascist gun crews manning the anti-aircraft batteries of the dictators' trains were guests at noon mess given by the Brenner Fascist Recreation organization.

British Comment.

Without disclosing the precise topics under discussion, an Italian source said the talks did not concern Soviet Russia, Spain or a peace move. In reply to a direct question he said it was possible the leaders were discussing the relations of the axis toward the United States in line with the whole war perspective.

Officials did not deny reports that Ciano and Ribbentrop might confer with Premier Molotoff of Soviet Russia after the Brenner meeting but said that nothing was known of this possibility in Rome.

Spain Excluded

Mussolini's train arrived at Brennero about 10 a.m. (4 a.m. EDT), two hours after that in which Ciano left Rome with the German Ambassador, Hans Von Mackensen. Steffani, Italian News Agency, said the meeting was arranged suddenly.

Although Ramon Serrano Suner, Spanish Interior Minister, remained in Rome, Fascists said he would have no further conferences with Mussolini — thus apparently emphasizing Spain's exclusion from the subjects under discussion at Brennero

Spain's position as a non-belligerent has been settled for the time being, it was indicated.

In line with Italian press comment on the possibility of a long war, authoritative sources emphasized that the campaign in Egypt would require special preparation and that a lightning campaign was not to be expected

Marshal Graziani, commander of the Italian forces in Egypt, was reported in foreign circles to be in Rome awaiting Mussolini's return to confer on the African campaign.

The newspaper Il Popolo Di Roma indicated the purpose of the mid-day conference was formulation of a joint axis plan for a long fight, to the finish against Great Britain.

Press Still Talks "Big"

The newspaper, which frequently reflects the views of Mussolini, thus envisioned the prospect of a long-drawn war. It declared no compromise is possible and that "it is our aim to end the war, but only in victory."

Il Popolo Di Roma claimed both Italy and Germany are operating at full war efficiency and "time is working against Britain" instead of for her.

"The British political situation is already showing its cracks. The resignation of Chamberlain is the first symptom of them."

The paper claimed that neither the Italians nor Germans were anxiously awaiting the landing of Nazi troops in Britain, and added:

"The Italian and German people are conscious in the moments through which we are passing of the difficulties to surpass, the sacrifices to bear. The probability of a long war does not frighten them at all."

"Britons," Il Popolo Di Roma said, "are speaking of Germany's invasion plans having failed and are saying that Italy and Germany consequently have lost the possibility of winning a short war."

It then advanced this contention:

"It would be well for the British to know that both Italy and Germany prepared in time to conduct the war, whether long or short, to complete victory. This excludes a priori any possibility of compromise."

New York, Oct. 4 (AP).—The first British comment on the Hitler-Mussolini meeting at the Brenner Pass today, as heard by Columbia Broadcasting System from the British shortwave, was that "apparently the dictators are having difficulties."

"At this moment, Hitler and Mussolini are meeting to discuss war problems," the announcer said.

"Apparently the dictators are having difficulties and are trying to find some way out.

"It seems that each of the axis partners wants to get help from the other one—and both want to discuss ways and means of keeping the United States out of their fight with Great Britain."

Rome, Oct. 4 (AP)—Virginio Gayda, Fascist editorial spokesman, wrote today that Hitler and Mussolini are so certain of victory they can now begin drafting "the great constructive lines of their new European and African edifice."

"The new points" decided by the axis leaders at their Brennero meeting today, Gayda asserted, "are destined to affect deeply the course of the war and the political and economic evolution of the continents into which the war of the axis more directly cuts."

ITALIAN

It said it was not the practice of the government to announce successes against submarines as they occur, or even periodically, because such information was useful to the enemy.

But it must not be assumed that because no successes had been announced, there were none.

Second Victory for British Sub

The Osiris' victory was her second. On September 9, it was announced that she sank an Italian supply ship of about 3,000 tons in the Mediterranean. She is commanded by Lt.-Cmdr. J. R. G. Harvey.

Meantime German long range guns on the French coast fired shells at a British convoy in the Strait of Dover, dropping two salvos of three shots each from near Cap Gris Nes. The convoy, carrying its own balloon barrage, continued on around the coast and there was nothing to indicate the shore guns had registered any hits.

Dirty weather over London sent German raiders home four hours before dawn today.

Describing weather conditions as "very unfavorable", the government said the German attacks were concentrated largely on the London area but that bombs were dropped in other parts of southeast England and at two places in southwest England.

Eleven outlying districts of London were bombed, it was reported, and the raiders found their way to 20 districts in other parts of England.

"Little damage was done and the number of casualties was small", a statement said.

Bombing Far Inland

Despite a curious quiet along the Channel Coast —the Dover area was bombless for the first time in 41 days and observers failed to note the customary explosions caused by Royal Air Force raids on German "invasion ports" in France—the government said British night operations went on as usual, presumably far inland, in the Reich or in German-occupied territory.

Even before the last of the Nazi raiders over London had turned for their home bases early today there were two brief periods of quiet. It was the first time since the air attack started 27 nights ago that the all clear had sounded twice between dusk and dawn.

Most Londoners refused to believe their ears and remained in their shelters.

The raiders struck at a small village near an ancient castle in southeastern England; others were reported over a town in Wales.

The light raids of the night followed one of the heaviest series of daylight raids since the war began. The invaders struck repeatedly at the industrial Midlands and hovered over London all through the day, dropping their bombs through a fog which hid them from the anti-aircraft gunners.

Lone Woman Only Private Citizen To Defy Members of 'Murder Inc.'

(Editor's note: This, the second of three stories about "Murder, Inc.", the amazing crime ring now being exposed in New York, describes the personnel and their contrasting activities.)

By GLADWIN HILL
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

New York, Oct. 4 (AP). — The only private citizen on record as having successfully defied the ruthless activities of "Murder, Inc.", Brooklyn's newly-exposed crime ring was a lone woman.

In the midst of the nine-year orgy of racketeering and killing which has already sent four of their members toward the Sing Sing electric chair, the cold-blooded desperadoes of "Murder, Inc.", decided to muscle in on the profits of Mrs. Ruth Sewall, a 41-year-old divorcee who ran a bridge club for the diversion of Brighton Beach housewives.

The mobsters had the temerity to call on Mrs. Sewall and drop hints of dreadful consequences if they were not cut in on her "take".

Instead of cringing, as had a long series of "sheep" ranging from rival gangsters to sedate business men and union executives, Mrs. Sewall ordered the gangsters off her premises.

But she didn't stop there. Mrs. Sewall put on her hat and coat and stalked down to the sanctum of their leader, Seymour (Blue Jaw) Magoon and read him a riot act that led the gangsters to cross her forever off their list of prospects.

Yet these were the specialists in death who executed an estimated 100 gang homicides in the last nine years for the nation-wide post-repeal racket "combination". They were a strange composite of spine-chilling ruthlessness and infantile cowardice.

Practised Shooting On Chickens.

One of their leading trigger men, 250-pound Vito (the Pig) Gurino, is reputed to have kept in practice by shooting the heads off chickens. He has killed, by his own admission, no fewer than seven men, says District Attorney William O'Dwyer, who is engaged in exposing and prosecuting the ring.

A few days ago, after he learned that the outstanding members of the mob were out with well-oiled guns to forestall decisively his "squealing", Gurino fled in terror to the sanctuary of a downtown Manhattan church altar.

"Murder, Inc.,, could blandly chop a man to death with ice picks and meat cleavers, or, in the case of Bo Weinberg, "freeze" his feet in concrete and drop him in the river.

Yet the third and fourth of its killers to stand tried, Mertin (Buggsy) Goldstein and Harry (Pittsburgh Phil) Strauss, last week in the court room could shriek hysterically at Blue-Jaw Magoon-turned state's evidence: "For God's sakes, Seymour . . . you're burning me!" — and heave a petulant shoe at newspapermen as they were carted off to the death house.

Bomb Splinters From Battle of Britain

(By D. E. Burritt, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

A suppertime explosion at a north London factory sent everyone scurrying to shelter. Later the explosion was found to have been nothing worse than a tin of beans bursting while being heated.

"The only time I enjoy my wife's company is in the air raid shelter," a man told the Tottenham police court magistrate. "Then she is too frightened to speak."

London's weightiest air raid problem is Mrs. Jessie Hornsby, 308 pounds. She can't get through the door of her Anderson shelter so remains in bed during air attacks.

A Nazi bomber pilot brought down by a Spitfire during his first flight over England fumed for three days before he would answer any questions. Finally, he confessed his superiors had told him Britain's fighter planes had all been wiped out and he was angry at the British Government for deceiving the German authorities into believing such a thing.

Three girls and two boys, waiting to be evacuated to Canada, were in a shelter when a direct hit destroyed their home. Next morning, they were taken straight to a port, given new clothes and now they're on their way.

Nine days after being bombed, S. C. Champion returned to the debris of his home in northwest London to dig out a few personal belongings. He heard a faint whine and found his dog, Jerry, trapped but still alive.

The War Today

By H. M. PETERS
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Hitler and Mussolini conferred at the Brenner Pass today at the same time that the Italian press advised the people not to expect a quick victory over the British Empire.

The dictators met under the shadow of a crisis in their affairs caused by the failure of Hitler's air force to blast out a path of invasion across the English Channel, and the delay—to put it mildly—in Italy's planned advance through the Egyptian desert to the fertile valley of the Nile.

At sea the Axis Powers have scored some successes in sinking British shipping, but at the large cost of nine submarines lost in a few weeks. In the Mediterranean the Royal Navy moved at will, seeking to swing its guns on Italian ships, but with no luck.

In the face of this situation the dictators presumably sought some means of striking new blows at Britain or the countries friendly to her.

Relations of the new alliance—Germany, Italy and Japan—with the great non-belligerents, the United States and Russia, were possibly also under discussion.

Greek-Albanian Frontier Uneasy

The Greek-Albanian frontier was uneasy, with troop movements reported. Greek statesmen looked uneasily toward Brennero, wondering if the order for an Italian attack might result from it.

Most signs seemed to point to action somewhere around the vast Mediterranean. An attempt with Spain's connivance to get control of the Straits of Gibraltar, a drive to reinforce the Italian army in Egypt, an assault by the German-Italian air force on British fleet units and naval bases, an attack on Greece, or all of these seemed possibilities.

Or perhaps the conference had to do with home affairs. Italy and Germany faced the problem of obtaining supplies this winter, with the Royal Navy blocking the way. Italy practically admitted at the time she entered the war that she was not prepared for a long struggle.

SCAR OF VICTORY OVER ITALIANS

Sailors of the Australian cruiser Sydney wave happily as their ship comes into a home port following its Mediterranean battle with the Italian cruiser Bartolomeo Colleoni, which was sunk. Only damage inflicted on the Sydney, was this hole in one of her funnels.

200-Pound Black Bear Treed, Then Killed in Thurlow Twp.

Bruin Treed by Clarence Hall, Armed With Pitchfork, and Shot by R. A. Scott

ALL-DAY HUNT

Culminating an all-day hunt through the woodlands of Thurlow Township, a large 200-pound black bear was treed and then shot by R. B. Scott, College St., early last evening on the farm of John Chisholm, four miles north of Belleville. The bear was first seen on the farm of Henry Farnham, near Cannifton, early yesterday, but evaded a large posse of Provincial Police and farmers until sundown. Today the large bruin attracted the attention of hundreds of citizens while on display in front of Clarke and Miles butcher shop.

Following the all-day search for the animal, three farmers saw Mister Bruin ambling across the farm of J. Vandewater, Thurlow, and headed westerly towards Highway No. 14 about sundown. The farmers, armed with pitchforks and clubs, gave chase and finally Clarence Hall treed the bear, armed only with a pitch fork. Shouts attracted the attention of another party of the posse and with three well-aimed shots Mr. Scott shot the bear dead from out of its lofty perch.

Time-worn Bruin

Subsequent investigations revealed the bear was very old and thin from the lack of nourishment. Its teeth were well worn, indicating its age. Farmers believed the animal followed the banks of the Moira River southerly until it was observed on the Farnham farm early yesterday. Accompanying Mr. Hall was Douglas Reynolds.

On two occasions yesterday the bear was sighted by Provincial Police posses and shots fired, but the distance was too great to effect proper aim. One story is told about yesterday's bear hunt, but no names given. It seems a resident of Corbyville, who knew nothing of the incident, was fishing from a boat anchored near the shores of the Moira River north of Cannifton. The fisherman heard a noise in the nearby thicket and looking up saw the form of a large bear only a few feet from the bow of his boat. The angler is said to have leaped from the boat into the water and after making the shore, beat a hasty retreat, while Mister Bruin nonchalantly ate the fish catch, which had been abandoned in the boat by the frightened fisherman.

The bear was treed over a mile west from where it was first sighted by Harry Farnham. Farmers had organized and were prepared to keep an all-night vigil in the protection of their flocks in the event the bear was not found before nightfall. Dusk was slowly falling when the animal was treed by Mr. Hall and later shot by Mr. Scott.

'Canada's Young Defenders' Report for Duty Next Wed.

29,750 Men, Most of Them 21 Years Old, Will Start 30 Days' Training

FIRST MEN CALLED

By FRANK FLAHERTY
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Ottawa, Oct. 4 (CP)—The first of "Canada's Young Defenders"—that's what the Department of National War Services would like to have them called—report at military training centres across the country next Wednesday.

These 29,750 young men, most of them 21 years old, although a few slightly older are included open a new chapter in Canadian military history.

They are the first men called to don uniform under the National Resources Mobilization Act passed at the last session of parliament. Within the next twelve months, eight groups of the same size will pass through the 39 training centres, each receiving 30 days of drill and instruction.

No exemptions are allowed. When a man is called and is found medically fit he must report for training. If he is engaged in an occupation in which it is more convenient for him to leave his work at some other time of year he may have his training period postponed temporarily and if he is a bona fide member of a religious body whose teachings forbid the bearing of arms he may have his training period postponed indefinitely.

45,000 Notices Sent Out

It was to allow for such postponements and a possible 25 per cent. rejection on medical grounds that notices were sent to 45,000 men, although only 29,750 are required for the opening of the training centres.

The War Services Department doesn't like to hear the men called up for training described as "Trainees," "Draftees" or "Conscripts."

A department spokesman said: "The regulations refer to them simply as men. In a military sense they are recruits. Sentimentally they might be called 'Canada's Young Defenders'."

The start of training marks a new departure in Canadian military organization, because never before has a compulsory call been sent out for service in the non-permanent active militia.

Hitherto military service in Canada has been voluntary except for a period in the first Great War when conscription was in effect. Then, however, the men called went into the army to serve for the duration of the war, anywhere in the world.

The men starting training next week will train for 30 days and then unless they enlist in the Canadian Active Service Force, will in all probability return to civilian life. They will be members of the militia liable to be called for service anywhere in Canada but, under terms of the National Resources Mobilization Act, not for service overseas.

convoy, tugging its own anti-aircraft balloon barrage, steamed on around the coast, past the Cap Gris Nez promontory where the German guns were firing.

Four Houses Damaged

The roar of attackers coming up the Thames Estuary signalled the Nazis' return to the Battle of London after the quietest night of the 27 since the air siege of the capital began.

During the afternoon alarm two bombs fell in an East London district, damaging four houses in which eight persons were believed trapped. It was London's first air raid since dawn.

At least six high explosive bombs were dropped on the southeast coast town by six planes in attack formation. A Press Association correspondent said they scored a direct hit on the front part of an historic castle and demolished houses in two streets.

There were a number of casualties, some fatal.

The blasts shattered windows, tore craters in roadways and set rescue squads to digging for survivors in wrecked buildings.

"All This And Heaven Too," becomes a completely appropriate title when it gives us Charles Boyer and Bette Davis as the co-starring team in the film version of Rachel Field's unforgettable novel. The film is now playing at the Capitol Theatre.

CHAPTER THIRTY-SIX

Sonia drew a deep breath; then said, "There's another reason I wanted to see you."

"Yes?"

"Michael Dudley!"

"That's over," remarked Judith.

"If I'd gone to Tex when he was dying, things might have been different for you and Michael. If I'd rushed to him, you wouldn't have had to go."

"Let's not talk about it."

There was desperation in Sonia's voice. "We must! You love Dudley, don't you?"

Judith observed, "There isn't anything anybody can do."

"Yes, there is. You can do it!" Sonia leaned forward, put her hand on Judith's arm. "Go abroad; make him see you."

"Why, he won't even answer my letters!"

Sonia stood up, took Judith by the shoulders. "Get on a boat and go over there! Make him see!"

"I couldn't. He doesn't want me."

"Don't be absurd! Dudley loves you. I'm sure of that. I know!"

They had to go back to the rest then. Judith did not speak with Sonia alone again.

* * *

Next morning, the maid awakened Judith at nine. She brought a note from Dick Van Mathas. She put on a new yellow linen frock.

"I've got the prettiest girl on all Long Island to take flying!" Dick exclaimed as a breakfast greeting. When he was escorting her into the front cockpit of his new plane, he promised, "No tricks! Just a nice little Sunday cruise."

They were up fast, climbing swiftly. Below, the Sound was deep blue; The wind and the sun were good. Then Dick throttled down and yelled suddenly.

"Belt fastened? Here we go!" screamed Dick. The ship looped neatly. As the sky reeled around them, Judith fell hard against the side of the cockpit. Her belt was loose. How easy to throw it off!

As they hung there between sky and water, for one quivering instant the temptation was overwhelming. But Judith slumped back into the seat as the ship righted.

Later, when they landed back at the airport, Judith was deadly pale. "You were scared!" Dick laughed. "Just for a moment," she said. Afterward she remembered little of what they did the rest of the day.

Next morning Dick drove her into the city. They did not talk much. She pleaded a headache.

All day she was in a semi-trance. De Franc was impatient with her. But during the day she had made up her mind. She waited until the other girls had gone that night before she spoke to De Franc.

Then she faced "the boss" in his office. Without preliminaries, she began: "Will you loan me 300 on my ring?"

He eyed her for a moment. "What for?"

"I am going to Paris."

He stood up, came over to her. "You're going over to see Dudley?"

"I must."

He slumped visibly. She felt sorry for him. Judith had never believed she was serious about her. But now she understood. . . . After a long pause, he said, "I'll lend you the money."

With a smile, gallantly forced, he took her hand in both his, with, "If you miss out, Judith, I'll be waiting."

* * *

Judith sailed early in September. Only Hugh Lanning and De Franc were down to see her off. Nobody else knew she was going. She had her round trip ticket. She had allowed herself eight days in Paris. That would be enough.

De Franc planned everything once he realized she was determined to go. Hugh arrived with orchids and a taxicab to take her to the ship. "I had to give you a proper send-off." He bowed low as he handed her the flowers. "It's like going to my own funeral."

Never had a traveler had a less hilarious send-off than Judith. De Franc arrived in her cabin with books and a big basket of fruit. Judith's eyes were full of uncertainty. Hugh tried to cheer her, but he, too, was uneasy. For he had heard rumors in newspaper circles that Dudley was being seen constantly with a pretty English girl. De Franc was obviously nervous. . . .

Soon Judith was alone at the railing as the big ship was moving slowly into mid-river. She could see Hugh and De Franc standing side by side, waving good bye. . . . The docks disappeared. . . .

Afterward, Judith remembered nothing about the details of her first ocean voyage. People were kind but she kept much to herself. She had no heart for gaiety. . . .

One day the coast line of France came into sight. Watching it, she said a little prayer. But her courage was at low ebb. Hours later Judith was in her room at a small hotel. It was early evening. She dressed hurriedly. How often she had rehearsed this moment during the crossing. She knew just what to do: Walk two blocks to the river, then across a bridge. Turn left, through the Tulleries Gardens. Michael's hotel would be on the right.

Down on the dark street she hurried, her breath coming in gasps. Soon the magnificence of a smart hotel lobby awed her. A man with gold braid on his uniform was behind a desk. He could speak English. She asked for Mr. Michael Dudley of New York.

"I am sorry, Madam, but Mr. Dudley is in the country for the week-end."

When would he be back? Usually Monday morning; came the answer. She turned away uncertain.

Back in her room, Judith threw herself on her bed, burst into tears. The next morning she pulled herself together. She did as De Franc had told her, went to the American Express and bought a trip on a sightseeing bus.

Somehow Judith had to get through Saturday night. Sunday evening she took a walk. She strolled slowly across the bridge and into the gardens. She could see the windows of Michael's hotel—some dark, some lighted—and she wondered if one of them might be his.

It was a gorgeous night. A full moon was rising, turning the evening into a white twilight, bathing the trees with silver. Lovers strolling hand in hand down the path. Sometimes they kissed, disregarding all but their own eyes. Ahead of her along the path came a man, strolling leisurely, smoking a pipe. There was something familiar about his shoulders. "I see Michael everywhere I look," she chided herself. He came closer. Judith bit her lips to keep from crying out.

It was Michael! As he came opposite her, she cried his name.

Judith stood before him then in the bright moonlight. He did not speak. Just stood there staring at her. Then he touched her arm. "You're real! I thought I was going mad!" he exclaimed.

"Michael, I had to come!" She put her hand on his arm. "I had to talk to you."

In a daze he led her to the bench she had just left. "Why didn't you let me know you were coming?"

"I was afraid you wouldn't see me." Neither of them spoke for a little. Then she added, "I love you, Michael. I came to tell you that."

Dudley sat looking straight ahead as though turned to stone. "I'm sorry," he said very slowly.

"I don't want your pity, Michael." Desperately Judith fought for the right words. She felt as though she were pleading for her very life. "Try to understand, Michael. If I hadn't gone to Tex when he needed me, we'd never have been happy. That was my esponsibility. Nothing could change that. If I have lost you, it just had to be. I couldn't let him die alone."

"Sonia?" he asked.

"She wouldn't go. He waited and waited. It was awful. I told him to the end she was coming. He believed me." Judith's hands were clenched in her lap. She waited. . . .

"I want to believe you!" Michael said finally. "You see, I've been through—"

Suddenly both his arms were around her. Then he put her from him, with "Come, we must go where I can see your eyes. We must talk." He drew her to her feet and they found a little cafe down the street, took a table in the corner.

"You're thinner," he said leaning across the table. His hand touched hers as it lay on the marble. "I never should have left you."

Uncertain, Judith waited. She could see new lines around his eyes. Her eyes did not falter under his, even when he asked: "Just why did you come?"

"To tell you I love you, and al-

"To tell you I love you, and al-

He smiled a little. "I did that a long time ago. It's the forgetting which is hard."

He moved his shoulders impatiently. "I might as well confess. I went out in the park tonight to decide whether or not I'd fly back to . . . you."

"Did you decide?" she asked softly.

Her eyes were shining. "I promise, you'll never be sorry. I'll prove it to you."

Michael watched her eager face. There was so much she wanted to say to him. "I was so young when I married Tex. And he depended on me. I protected him. He was so vulnerable!" Judith leaned across the table. "But I didn't know the meaning of love till I met you, Michael. Now I'm free—free as I'd never have been if I'd failed Tex in the end. You see that, don't you? We shouldn't have any regrets now!"

He held her hand tight. "Come. Let's go for a drive."

They found a cab in front of the cafe, and started for the Bois. Michael's arms were about Judith as they talked. He said: "For weeks every night I'd come home and answer your letters. Then I'd tear them up! I was a fool!"

"I understand."

"And there's something else. There was a letter for me tonight from Sonia. That told me a lot. That's why I had decided to go back to you."

"And I wouldn't be here except for her!"

Michael touched Judith's left hand. "Your ring?"

"Darling, I—I pawned it to get here!" she confessed.

Michael threw back his head and laughed.

"Yes, De Franc loaned me the money."

He held her close. Then he tapped on the window, ordered the driver to turn back. "There's an errand we must do."

They whisked back into the downtown district. At a cable office, the car stopped. "Come, help me."

Judith watched him over his shoulder as he wrote the message. It was to De Franc and read: "Three hundred in mail. Married Monday U.S. Embassy."

The letters blurred as Judith read them. Michael murmured, "Is that all right?"

"Perfect!"

He kissed her there before the clerk.

"Now you must cable your mother," he suggested.

"And Sonia," Judith added.

Hand in hand they went out together onto the broad boulevard in the moon-and-star-lit night.

Farmers Notice Marked Decline In Milk Flour

The long period of dry weather, continuing almost without a break since Spring, has taken its inevitable toll in dried up pasture lands and low wells with a resulting marked decline in the milk flow throughout September, according to farmers attending cheese board on Thursday evening. The milk-flow fell away much more during the past month than has been the case for several years, it was revealed, although it was admitted that luxuriant pastures and a corresponding heavy milk flow during the early summer months made the recent decline more noticeable.

Low wells and a scarcity of water supply on most farms was also partly responsible for the marked decrease in the milk supply, it was said.

It will take many heavy rains to again fill the wells and assure an abundant water supply for the winter months, said farmers. Recent rains did little more than soften the ground to permit easy cultivation it was claimed.

Letter to the Editor

London Destroyed

To the Editor:

Sir,—A copy now before me of the London (Eng.) Gazette of Sept. 10th, 1666, contains a description of the great London fire which destroyed much of the city. The interesting point in the article is a reference to the suggestion that the fire was caused by the enemies of England on the continent of Europe. After 274 years, the enemies of Britain on the continent of Europe are still trying to destroy London. "There Will Always be an England."

How To Overcome Piles And Rectal Soreness

If you are annoyed with itching piles or rectal soreness, do not neglect the same or run the risk of an operation. Any itching, soreness or painful passage of stool, is nature's warning and proper treatment should be secured at once. For this purpose get from J. S. McKeown or any druggist, a package of Hemroid and use as directed. This formula which is used internally, quickly relieves the itching and soreness and aids in healing the sore, tender spots. Hemroid is highly recommended, is easy to use and it seems the height of folly for anyone to risk an operation when a simple remedy, which is so pleasant to use may be had at such a reasonable cost.

POLICE COURT

James Sidey, who was arrested in Belleville last week on a charge of common vagrancy, following alleged peculiar actions on the part of the accused, was today committed to the Ontario Mental Hospital at Kingston for observation by Magistrate E. J. Butler, K.C., in today's loal police court. When he appeared before the court last week Sidey complained to His Worship that he had been "shot at on two occasions near the Trenton Air Base."

Rex Bridge, 19, of Thurlow Township, appeared on a charge of careless driving, but his case was enlarged for one week: "I would suggest we lay this matter over for a week in order that a settlement may be arranged between certain parties," requested Chief Kidd as he added that the charge arose out of an accident, which occurred at the intersection of Victoria and Foster Aves. recently.

A Mountain View resident appeared charged with failing to remain at the scene of an accident. The accused pleaded guilty but assured the court he did not realize there had been any collision. Settlement of damages has already been amicably made, the accused man was only assessed the costs of the court.

A local young man was sentenced to a small jail term after being convicted of intoxication, to conclude a short session of court here today.

Police Blotter

A valuable female black Scottie dog was recovered in Belleville after being reported lost by its Toronto owner yesterday. Mrs. F. Marion, 449 Crawford St, Toronto, reported to police that her pet Scottie dog had been lost while in Belleville. Later the canine was found at Albert College, where it had taken shelter. The dog was given into the custody of the city dog pound and is being sheltered until its owner is notified of the recovery.

James Annis, 291 Front St., reported the loss of a child's tricycle to the police today. The tricycle was apparently stolen from out of the Front Street hallway leading into Mr. Annis' apartment.

No arrests were reported in Belleville during the past 24 hours, which left the cell block at the police station available for the peaceful slumbers of four transients, who sought shelter in the city last night.

TEA DANCE—

The first social event of the year got off to a fine swing with finer "swing" contributed by nickelodeon records. About four-fifths of the school attended, and all had a good time. The gym was decorated with goal posts at either end, in honor of the cause for which the dance was held, as well as dummies hanging around the wall . . . surely not representing our rugby team (?) . . . The much promised soft lights and smooth floor were as promised . . . as well as the refreshments . . . cider, ice-cold apple cider, served in good measure. Talking about measures, one of the hits of the evening was the treading around of Claude Mulholland, who was cutting the rug with a vengeance. The crowd overflowed into the boys' gym causing slightly less congestion. The dance was semi-organized, but most of the dancers kept on doing what they wanted—dancing—and so not much could be done. The dance kept on for about an hour after the allotted time—six o'clock.

SMALL TALK—

Wonder why Gordon Theobald, intermediate track champion, wasn't at assembly to claim his well-earned prize? He attends his class regularly. . . . Miss Ash is apparently thinking of starting the Art Club again, and soon. . . . Name of the "Elevator" editor should be forthcoming soon. Those in the know pick Lois Bankier. Good pickin'. . . . The masters should have a nice, quiet nervous breakdown after last Wednesday morning. . . . "Time table changes come but once a year" —we hope.

Just overheard: All students in Grades XI, XII, and XIII will be called upon to do one period of military training a day, including the girls. . . . How many people noticed the groggy but game look on three Third Formers last Friday? . . . Despite the mysterious malady the fellows managed to crawl to the tea dance.

Society note: With the summer apparently staying over for a week or two, the classes are having their weiner roasts in the interim—wonder where they find the time? . . . We know that you're breathless with excitement to know the name of the Green Room play this year. Look over the latest Broadway hits before making your guess, and one guess is as good as another. . . . The girls are wearing their school-spirit on their sleeves—and jackets—loath to give up their pretty ribbons after field day, they're wearing them for the next month or so—it seems the more of them the better—quantity and quality and stuff. . . Notice the pile of tin foil in the corner of Miss Priest's room. "Jeep" has contributed a lot—from guess where?

RED CROSS ACTIVITIES—

John White Unit:

On Wednesday the second, at 4:15 p.m. in 318, the second meeting of the John White Unit was held, under the capable supervision of Miss Dwyer and Miss Smith. The meeting started as a knitting bee with all members trying their best to catch up with their work, but ended with election of officers.

Those chosen to guide the efforts of our unit were: President, Margaret Coulby who retains office for a second year; vice-president, Anna Hogle; secretary-treasurer, Lois Liddle; knitting conveners, Helen Douglas, Margaret Clarke; sewing conveners, Margaret Kellar, Dorothy MacDonald.

The B.C.I. Red Cross is asking for funds in connection with the national drive for funds by the Canadian Red Cross. Any small donation will be much appreciated. Do your bit to help win the war.

The Red Cross groups in the school are all forging ahead with an extra burst of speed this week. All the girls were supposed to have saved an amount of money during the summer, preferably made by herself.

"The Susannah Moodie" Group:

This group of the Red Cross received a donation of ten dollars from its president, Gwendolyn McElrath. Gwen knitted a sweater at her own cost during the summer, and sold tickets for a raffle on it outside the school. The draw was made by Miss Grout last Wednesday, and the proceeds were turned over to the club. The sweater was won by Miss Pearl Tulk, a former student here.

"The Winston Churchill" Group:

About fourteen members of this group met last Wednesday, collected 'talent money' made during the summer, a few fees, two sweaters, two pairs of socks, etc. This is not all the girls in this group, and they are urged to attend in greater numbers.

WAR SAVINGS STAMPS!—

We are very proud to report that for the month of September the Collegiate has sold $1500.00 worth of War Savings Stamps and Certificates. . . . Imagine! . . . The extra work this entails for the masters who dispense the stamps, receive the money, and keep all the records—and for the students who do the actual selling—is considerable, but it is one way of "doing our bit to stop Hitler."

Daughter Born To Mrs. Lindbergh

New York, Oct. 3 (AP)—Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh gave birth to a daughter at Doctors Hospital Wednesday—the eve of publication of her third book.

The child was the fourth born to the famous aviator and his wife, but was their first daughter. Hospital officials declined to give any statistics on the infant, but said mother and child are doing well.

Mrs. Lindbergh is the former Anne Morrow, daughter of the late Dwight Morrow, former United States Senator and Ambassador to Mexico, and Mrs. Morrow, now acting head of Smith College.

She married the aviator in Englewood, N.J., on May 27, 1929, two years after he won world acclaim by flying the Atlantic alone.

Their first-born, Charles, Jr., was kidnapped from the nursery of their Hopewell, N.J. home, March 1, 1932, and was found dead several weeks later—a crime for which Bruno Richard Hauptmann died in the electric chair at Trenton, N.J.

Jon Morrow Lindbergh, their second child, was born Aug. 2, 1932 and Land Morrow Lindbergh on May 12, 1937.

Author of "North to the Orient" and "Listen, the Wind" in 1935 and 1938, respectively, Mrs. Lindbergh's latest book, "The Wave of the Future," departs from their theme of romantic travel. It discusses the war and the world's future.

Sees Isms Future Force

After analyzing the war in Europe as a struggle between the forces of the past and the future and putting Germany, Italy and Russia in the latter category, Mrs. Lindbergh suggests that the United States pursue a course "which took advantage of rather than opposed, the great forces pushing in the world."

A little volume, the book expresses, in her words, "some new, and perhaps even ultimately good, conception of humanity trying to come to birth, often through evil and horrible forms and abortive attempts."

She cannot see the war, she writes, simply as a struggle between the "forces of good" and the "forces of evil."

"If I could simplify it into a phrase at all, it would seem truer to say that the 'forces of the past' are fighting against the 'forces of the future.' The tragedy is, to the honest spectator, that there is so much that is good in the 'forces of the future.'

Admits Evil in Systems

"It is not to claim that the things we dislike in Nazism are the forces of the future. But it is to say that somehow the leaders in Germany, Italy and Russia have discovered how to use new social and economic forces; very often they have used them badly, but nevertheless they have recognized and used them. They have felt the wave of the future and they have leaped upon it. The evils we deplore in these systems are not in themselves the future; they are the scum on the wave of the future."

Mrs. Lindbergh decries the war fear she says exists in the United States and expresses hope that Americans may meet the demand for reform without bloodshed.

"We may ask ourselves whether," she writes, "we must jeopardize the reforms already started here in our own country by plunging into the turmoil abroad; whether the efforts of our present pioneers also shall be wasted. Or might not a course be found which took advantage of, rather than opposed, the great forces pushing in the world?"

Little Benny's Note Book

Pop and I took a walk so pop would injoy his supper more, and on the way home pop bought a bunich of mixed flowers at Pockadopolo's to surprise ma, and we went in the house and pop quick arranged the flowers fancy in a vase on the dining room table, and ma came down and saw them and I said, Surprise, ma, surprise, pop got them to surprise you.

Well well, ma said.

And she went and looked at them close, saying, Deer deer, where did you get them, Willyum?

I picked them myself, at Pockadopolo's, pop said, and ma said, I suppose you bought them on the assumption that they were perfectly fresh.

I bought them on the assumption that they were flowers, but judging by your expression they must smell more like dissepointed eggs, pop said and ma said, Not at all, I mean dont be silly, I dont mean anything personel and I certainly appriciate the thought, but it's just criminal the way these florists will take advantage of men.

Chuck them out, rouse with them, stick them in the ash can, pop said, and ma said, Now Willyum that's abserd, a couple of aspirin tablets in the water will bring them up like new, I've heard that works like a charm.

A liberal coating of iodine and a couple of rolls of gauze bandage and you wont reckonize them, I'm sure, pop said, and ma said, Now Willyum they're perfectly beautiful

So was a man I saw in the hospittle once, just between his 3rd and 4th operation, pop said, and ma said, Why you crazy silly thing, if they were perfectly dewy and fresh I'd know somebody had helped you pick them out and I wouldn't have, the same thrill at all, so it just only goes to show I appriciate them.

And she kissed him thanks and we started to eat supper, being lamb chops with parsley around them, nothing special.

AT THE BELLE

"The Return of Frank James"

It is not surprising that 20th Century-Fox studio has "shot the works" with lavish production treatment of its new Technicolor picture, "The Return of Frank James," which is the attraction at the Belle theatre.

For last year, when the same studio produced "Jesse James," the resulting audience enthusiasm demonstrated beyond question that the colorful doing of the bandit brothers made the kind of movie material that draws crowds.

It is fortunate for the producers—although it was not so lucky for the forces of law and order in the 1880's—that there were two James brothers, and that the adventures of Frank continued in exciting fashion after the sudden demise of Jesse. As a result, two different pictures of equally high merit could be based upon the James' saga.

The cast is headed by Henry Fonda in the title role a part which he also played in "Jesse James". In the feminine lead is a lovely newcomer to the screen, Gene Tierney, who earned fame on the New York stage by her portrayal of a leading role in "The Male Animal." Jackie Cooper, Henry Hull, John Carradine, J. Edward Bromberg, Donald Meek, Eddie Collins and George Barbier are included in the large featured cast.

Filmed in technicolor, "The Return of Frank James" is one of the outstanding "big budget" pictures of the current season. Aside from extensive shooting at the studio, the company went on location at Senora, Calif., and Owen's Valley in the High Sierras. For the scenes involving train hold-ups—a form of undertaking much favored by the James boys—20th Century-Fox hired an entire railroad and made over the equipment to match the rolling stock of wood-burning locomotive days.

Perhaps the hardest working member of the cast was John Carradine. Simultaneously at work on "The Return of Frank James" and "Bringham Young," the lanky screen player had to "commute" between the two location sites, several hundred miles apart. To add to his difficult assignment, he is a villain in "The Return of Frank James" and a hero in "Bringham Young."

Three Junior Features

An excellent array of short treats have been assembled for exhibition on the same program including the latest of the Canada Carries On series, "Wings of Youth" revealing the Commonwealth Air Training Scheme,—35,000 skilled fliers a year, Canada's answer to the warfare against women and children—airfields from coast to coast.

Walt Disney's latest color cartoon "Mr. Duck Steps Out," and the popular Belle Newsreel, will also be exhibited. On the week end matinee a thrilling chapter of the western adventure story, "Oregon Trail" is announced for presentation.

Pride and Prejudice"

Hollywood has hit on another happy romantic teaming with lovely Greer Garson and Laurence Olivier perfectly cast as the spirited lovers in the picturization of Jane Austin's amusing comedy "Pride and Prejudice" now being presented at the Belle.

Top comedy performances are given by Edmund Gwenn, Mary Boland, Edna May Oliver and Melville Cooper.

AT THE McCARTHY

"I Was a Captive of Nazi Germany"

What an amazing story Isobel Lillian Steele relates in her dramatic picture, "I Was a Captive of Nazi Germany," the most outspoken and impressive blasts against dictatorship ever filmed, and now showing at the McCarthy Theatre, for all Belleville and district citizens to see.

An almost unbelievable tale of international hatred, intrigue, persecution, spying and counter-spying.

To what depths of infamy European espionage systems will sink to siphon precious military and political secrets from its male and female dupes.

"I Was a Captive of Nazi Germany" is a true pictorial account of Isobel Steele's experiences in fashionable Berlin society and her subsequent four months of incarceration in two of Europe's most notorious prisons on semi-starvation rations," simply because this pretty Toronto-born girl, college graduate and student of music, happened to be acquainted with a reputed secret agent of another country. Miss Steele later escaped to Switzerland, found friends who to show to the rest of the world the terrible life that exists behind the Nazi political life, produced this striking motion picture "I Was a Captive of Nazi Germany," placing the girl who lived to tell her own horrible adventure in the featured role.

America's funniest comedians, the Three Stooges in their newest comedy scream, "Calling All Curs," is also now showing at the McCarthy Theatre plus "Terry and the Pirates," Columbia's greatest chapter-play production.

AT THE CAPITOL

BETTE DAVIS, CHARLES BOYER BRING 'HEAVEN' TO SCREEN

"All This and Heaven Too", the brilliant novel by Rachel Field which has been one of the best-selling books of the decade, has come to the screen in all its dramatic essence with Bette Davis and Charles Boyer in the starring roles. The film is currently shown at the Capitol Theatre.

Jeffrey Lynn, Barbara O'Neil, Virginia Weidler, Henry Daniell, Waltel Hampden and George Coulouris head the featured supporting cast. Directed by Anatole Litvak from the screen play by Casey Robinson, based on Miss Field's novel, "All This And Heaven Too" is a deep-stirring romance based on actual events in the life of an ancestress of Rachel Field. The film marks the momentous first meeting of Bette Davis and Charles Boyer as a co-starring team.

Three German Machines Seen to Dive into Channel Out of Control

London, Oct. 5 (CP). — Massed German bombers, escorted by fighting planes, ushered in the fifth week of the air siege of London today but lost fifteen planes to the fierce fire of Britain's round and aerial defences.

The thrusts at London were parried in a three-hour battle over the coast of Kent, where at least eight attackers were shot down.

The few planes that broke through the coastal front, with its smoking batteries of ground guns and its interceptor patrols, met another screen of air and ground fire over London. One plummeted to destruction and the others scattered after dropping a few bombs.

Wide-ranging Assault.

It was a day of wide-ranging assault for the Nazis. Aside from London and the southeast coastal region, invading plants were reported over northeast and southwest England and the industrial Midlands.

In the battle over Kent and the Channel waters three of the eight German planes were seen to dive

Why The Weather?

By Major A. H. Thiessen
Science Service Meteorologist

The earth's spheres! Most of us think of the earth as a single sphere—but no there are now many spheres. We have all perhaps heard of the lithosphere, or solid earth; the hydrosphere or water portion; and the atmosphere or air portion. The atmosphere is subdivided into stratosphere which is the air above ten miles and the troposphere which is between the stratosphere and the earth. In the atmosphere there is in addition the "konisphere", or dust sphere, upon which depend many phenomena of the sky. The konisphere is responsible for coronas, halos, sky colors, haze, and some electrical effects. To a great extent it also provides the nuclei upon which water vapor condenses to form clouds and fog.

Japanese Report Troop Concentrations On Indo-China Border

Tokyo, Oct. 5—(AP)—Domei, Japanese news agency, reported today from Bangkok that both Thailand (Siam) and French Indo-China were concentrating troops along their common frontier, where border incidents were said to have occurred in the past few days.

Natives are withdrawing from border areas, Domei said, as a result of growing tension.

The news agency reported that Indo-China planes were reconnoitring daily deep in Thailand territory, and said that on one occasion a Thailand scouting plane had been fired on by anti-aircraft guns on the French side of the frontier.

ATTY. GENERAL REVIEWS CASES OF CHILDREN

States Problem Entirely a Matter for Hamilton Officials as to What Action is Taken

GOES TO COURT

Toronto, Oct. 5 (CP)—Hon. Gordon Conant, Attorney-General of Ontario, said last night that the conviction under Defence of Canada Regulations of two Kitchener parents whose children had refused to take part in patriotic exercises in schools had been effected under prosecutions started by local authorities in Hamilton, where 26 children have been suspended from school for a similar refusal, he said the problem "is entirely a matter for the Hamilton officials as to what action is taken."

Mr. Conant said that the Kitchener authorities had been assisted by law officers of his department in drawing new charges in the place of the ones on which the parents originally had been taken to court but it was for local authorities to deal with each local case.

(Mrs. Mary Schmellovich and Lambro Gakess were convicted in Kitchener yesterday under Defence of Canada Regulations of charges associated with the refusal of their children to salute the flag and sing the National Anthem.)

(In Hamilton on Thursday night the internal management committee of the Board of Education decided to stand by the previous suspension of 26 children who had refused to patricipate in patriotic exercises and left any action against the children's parents to "the proper authorities.")

ERNEST NEULLER DIED UNDER GUNS OF SEARCH PARTY

Rudolph Rauschenbach, Who Escaped With Neuller on Friday, Captured

DETAILS LACKING

Pair Thought to Have Made Escape While Working Outside Camp

Ottawa, Oct. 5—(CP) — Ernest Nueller was shot and killed when he rushed an internment camp guard, internment officials announced today.

The shooting occurred yesterday, officials said, while the guard was trailing Nueller and Rudolph Rauschenback after the two internees had tried to gain their freedom from a northwestern Ontario internment camp.

Nueller was killed some distance from the camp after he and Rauschenbach got away from a fatigue party working in the bush.

The guard came on the two men just as dusk fell over the northwestern bushlands.

Alone, the guard heard voices coming from a shack on the top of a hill. Taking his stand with rifle at the ready just outside the door to the shanty, he called to the men to come out, officials said.

Suddenly the door burst open and Neuller, a powerful fellow, rushed the guard.

There was a shot and Nueller fell, Rauschenbach then surrendered.

Escaped from Work Party

The men escaped from the camp work party about 1.30 p.m. yesterday.

Informed late yesterday of a news report from Port Arthur of their escape, authorities here said they had word of the break but expected the men to be recaptured shortly.

It wasn't long after that that Nueller died under the guard's gun and Rauschenbach surrendered.

As soon as their absence was noted Indian guides had been put on their trail and the country in the vicinity of the camp was carefully searched.

Not until early in the evening however did the guard investigate the possibilities of the shack, some distance from the camp and the place where the work party had been working in the bush.

Both interned men were prisoners of war. Both were Nazi seamen, formerly in the German merchant marine. Nueller was described as being a giant of a man, six feet three inches tall and weighing 200 pounds.

He was 38 years old. Rauschenbach was described as a 17-year-old sailor.

The shooting brought the first death as a result of escapes from internment camps but details of the search and its fatal result were not known here.

Victory, Not Peace, Dominant Note Of Conference Berlin Reports

Berlin, Oct. 5,—(AP)—Authorized German sources claimed today that Hitler and Mussolini had planned striking at Britain in "a particularly vulnerable spot" during their conference yesterday in the Brenner Pass.

Victory, not peace, these sources claimed, was the dominant note of the conference, which was described as a "war and diplomatic council".

While thus hinting that a plan of action had been evolved, the spokesman emphasized the importance of the parley by saying that in part of their three-hour talk Hitler and Mussolini were alone.

German commentators centred attention on Africa and the Mediterranean theatre of the war as they confidently awaited developments from yesterday's session at the Brenner Pass.

The Press predicted important happenings as a result of the conference and dwelt on what it called the "unity" of Europe and Africa in the "new order" of the dictator states.

Daily Mail Comment

(In London, the Daily Mail said "we must assume" that the axis chieftains met to plan "the next blow", and looked for it in the Mediterranean area.)

The National Zeitung of Essen, owned by Marshal Goering, emphasized—as did other sources— that Britain's fighting front now extends from the Thames to the Suez Canal and that the British Empire faces "world-wide pressure" from the axis military pact with Japan.

"The most important question (before the Brenner conferees) was the final defeat of Britain, as in March the main question was elimination of France", the National Zeitung claimed.

"Europe and Africa represent a whole, and corresponding to this conception, the axis makes its political as well as its military decisions for both continents in one inclusive program of action."

The news commentary service Dienest Aus Deutsch sai: "It is pointed out in well-informed circles that Europe and Africa form a unity and that military and political decisions at Brenner were taken in the light of this unity".

Wife of Oil Director Roughly Handled by Rumanian Police, Claim

Bucharest, Oct. 5 (AP).—Mrs. J. E. Treacy, who with her Canadian husband had been held by Rumanian police for fifteen days for alleged oil field sabotage, was released today.

The British legation said her condition "is as good as can be expected". It had been reported that she was roughly handled by the Rumanian secret police.

Mrs. Treacy's husband, Capt. John E. Treacy, formerly of Calgary and Chatham, Ont., is still in custody, and will be tried with three other Britons on what government circles called "very serious charges".

Turkish Pro-British Attitude Worries Italian Mouthpiece

Rome, Oct. 5 (AP)—The Turks today were termed "servile satellites" of Britons and the "American columns which stand beside them" by Virginio Gayda, editorial commentator of Fascist Italy, who declared war operations of the Axis will be intensified immediately in the wake of the Brenner Pass conference of Hitler and Mussolini.

Gayda asserted the Axis is not worried at "British attempts" to gain the United States as an actual ally, nor concerned at which of their two candidates, "with their more or less interventionist policies", wins the United States presidential election.

Italian forces were reported again in motion in Egypt, where the high command claimed they had routed British armored units southeast of Sidi Barrani, coastal town 80 miles inside the frontier where the Italians halted two weeks ago.

(There was no immediate comment from British sources on this enemy claim.)

"The two Axis powers are resuming their war operations, never interrupted, with the greatest intensity," Gayda said. "The effect will be seen soon."

But he was as mysterious as all other Fascist commentators on the direction of the next moves, despite his references to Turkey.

He advised Britain "to be patient" and suggested an attempt to land troops on the British Isles requires months of preparation.

German sources here asserted that air bombardment of Britain would be itensified before any attempt is made to land troops.

Ramon Serrano Suner, Spanish minister of the interior, who has been conferring with the Axis leaders in Berlin and Rome, left today for Spain.

DEFENCE BOARD READY TO REPORT ON EASTERN PLAN

Set of Recommendations Will be Laid Before Respective Governments

EACH TO ASSIST

Halifax, Oct. 5. —(CP)—Representatives of Canada and the United States prepared today to lay before their governments a set of recommendations distinctly delineating the tasks of each country in the event of an invasion of America's North Atlantic Coast.

The outline of proposed co-ordinated functions drawn up by the permanent joint Defence Board of the two countries constitute, in the words of U.S. Chairman Fiorello La Guardia, mayor of New York, the first definite mutual defence plan in history between Canada and the United States.

"Each nation will contribute to the defence of the other", he said as the Board finished its eastern recommendations at a conference here yesterday. "Each will assume a certain amount of responsibility for the other."

Two members of the Newfoundland Commission Government, Finance Commissioner J. H. Penson and Justice Commissioner L. E. Emerson, conferred with the Board Members at the meeting in the legislature building here yesterday. La Guardia said later that the Board's work with respect to establishment of U.S. Air bases in the Old Colony was now "complete".

Some of the Board's recommendations, the Mayor and Col. Biggar said jointly after their conference, call for immediate action. Others would be implemented immediately in the event of attack. The Nature of the recommendations was not divulged.

BOMBER NAMED "BOSTON"

FIRM OVERPAID ACCOUNT

Buffalo, N.Y., Oct. 5 (AP). — A Canadian munitions firm overpaid its account with the Erie Electric Company, Buffalo, by several thousand dollars and John W. Darby, the electric company president, said he would return the balance immediately. He did not identify the firm.

"The way things are over there, they'll probably be glad to get it back," he remarked.

QUEEN'S BROTHER SAYS BLOCKADE MUST BE FIRM

Britain Will Supply All Countries Once Occupation of Nazis is Broken

CALLED THIEVES

London, Oct. 5—(CP) — David Bowes-Lyon, brother of Queen Elizabeth who is connected with the British Ministry of Economic Warfare, said Friday night "We must and shall blockade enemy-controlled countries for fear of assisting the Nazi war effort."

In an address in the British Broadcasting Corporation's nightly feature "Britain Speaks," Mr. Bowes-Lyon said Prime Minister Churchill has solemnly declared that the day the German occupation ends supplies to these countries will be renewed. "But while the occupation lasts, we cannot agree to swell the Nazi loot," he said.

"What would happen if we did relax the blockade?" he asked. "Occupation by the Nazis means control by the Nazis, control of everything in the country. What has been happening to the food which the Germans found in Denmark, Norway, Holland, Belgium and France? Each and all of these were lands of plenty. Each now is a land of want. Not because of any blockade but because a thief has systematically ransacked them from end to end."

London, Oct. 5.—(CP) — Royal Air Force bombers, in a daylight foray yesterday, wrecked a railway outside Cherbourg, occupied France, used by Germany to send supplies up to the "invasion coast", the Air Ministry announced this afternoon.

"Direct hits left the rails twisted and useless, with big craters in the tracks", said the Ministry.

Other successful attacks were made on an airdrome at Bleville, near Le Havre, where a hangar was set afire.

"Murder Inc." Permitted No Resignation of Its Members

By GLADWIN HILL
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

New York, Oct. 5 (AP).—"Pretty" Levine was pleading for his life.

The Brooklyn youth who had been stealing cars for "Murder, Inc.", had decided to quit and go straight.

He didn't realize he had got into a one-way occupation, from which the usual retirement was on a slab in the morgue.

When you tie in with a gangster slaughter syndicate, charged with eliminating the human obstacles to the coast-to-coast racket "combination", you don't quit.

But Pretty was asking to, with the assistance of the syndicate's amateur lawyer, Abe Reles.

Reles, who, with a record of 43 arrests at the age of 34, had quixotically adopted the old-time underworld sobriquet of "Kid Twist", was a prominent member of the gang and had participated in some dozen of its killings.

He was sympathetic to Pretty Levine's idea. He backed Levine's request, and offered his personal guarantee of the youth's discretion.

The joint plea not only failed, but also boomeranged. The very suggestion of quitting marked both Levine and Reles as potential squealers. The Murder, Inc., higher-ups marked them both for death.

They were saved by the collapse of "Murder, Inc."

The crime "corporation" went bankrupt—for the same reason that regular corporations often go bankrupt—over-expansion.

From its Brooklyn base "Murder, Inc." had extended its traffic in death all over the country, committing about 100 killings already traced and possibly dozens more yet to be related.

Over-expansion Ruined Gang.

It extended so far, involving so many people, that it left the vital basis of all crime: secrecy. Too many people were getting to know about its doings; too many people were in a position to tell.

"Murder, Inc." reached this stage, and Reles and Levine were cast into the perilous nether-world of outlawed outlaws about nine months ago just as William O'Dwyer became district attorney of Brooklyn, determined to break up gang organizations.

O'Dwyer, in orthodox police manner, first sought stool pigeons. In a series of raids he rounded up a dozen members of "Murder, Inc." just to get them in jail where they might be persuaded to talk.

The initial roundups included Abe (Pretty) Levine and Abe (Kid Twist) Reles — already on the spot with nothing to lose by talking.

Soon District Attorney O'Dwyer's "singing school" of stool pigeons included such figures as Anthony (Duke) Maffetore; Seymour (Blue Jaw) Magoon, whose testimony only a few day asgo sent Martin (Buggsy) Goldstein and Harry (Pittsburgh Phil) Strauss to the Sing Sing death house; Oscar (the Poet) Friedman, the lyrical junk man who broke up the ring's "hot" cars; and, within the last few days, Vito (the Pig) Gurino, "Murder, Inc's." fat erstwhile head killer who fled from prospective rub-out to the sanctuary of a church.

From the "singing school" came a daily chorus of details of scores of unsolved killings of the last decade —the almost weekly Brooklyn gang street shootings; cases like the death of Hyman Yuran, who was found in a lime pit at upstate Monticello; and of Puggy Feinstein, burned in a vacant lot, the death for which Goldstein and Strauss became "Murder, Inc." convictions 3 and 4.

Nazi Merchantman On Dash for Home, Taken Off Mexico

Germans Set Buckets Of Fuel Around Decks To Burn Ship But Surprise Move Foils Attempt to Scuttle Ship

By HERBERT J. JONES
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

A West Coast Canadian Port, Oct. 5 (CP).—Commander T. C. Beard, veteran commander of one of Canada's ships of war, told last night of the capture of the first German merchantman in the Pacific, a story of searchlights and gunfire in the dark of night off the coast of Mexico.

Cmdr. Beard brought his command, a former cruise ship but now a grim, grey-coated ship of war, into port yesterday, exactly three weeks to the day since she left on her initial war assignment. With her came her prize, the 9,179-ton German cargo ship Weser, flying the white ensign of the Royal Canadian Navy over the Nazi swastika.

47,794 Tons Shipping Lost Week Ending October 4th

(By the Canadian Press)

Despite wartime restrictions on publication of maritime sinkings, the loss of eight merchant vessels with a total tonnage of 47,794 tons became known in the week ending Oct. 4. They were as follows:

Nationality	No. of ships	Tonnage

The Admiralty's summary for the week ending Sept. 22 showed 159,288 tons of shipping was lost in the period, about three times the average weekly loss since the war started. These losses were made up of 19 British ships, five neutrals, and three Allied vessels.

2,000 PASSENGERS ON BRITISH SHIP

Lt. Cmdr. Earl Beatty, Son of Late Earl Beatty, Arrives in Canada

An East Coast Canadian Port, Oct. 5 (CP)—A British steamship docked here today after an uneventful seven-day voyage from England with more than 2000 passengers, among them Royal Navy officers and men.

One of them was Lt. Cmdr. Earl Beatty, son of the late Earl Beatty, admiral of the fleet and hero of Jutland.

One of the civilian passengers was Charles Pyper, Toronto newspaperman who had been in England for some time. He is recovering from a serious illness.

A scattering of children was aboard but none was coming to Canada under government sponsorship. They were accompanied by their parents or guardians and most were bound to United States destinations.

There also were a number of Canadian army officers and soldiers, some returning to act as instructors to the 3rd. Division, Canadian Active Service Force.

CITY AND DISTRICT NEWS

STRAWBERRIES GROW IN EARLY OCTOBER

Put away that long underwear and overcoat all you people who thought winter was just around the corner, for summer is just on its way.

To corroborate this it is suggested that you go to Picton where in the garden of Mr. Everett Porter it is possible to pick enough strawberries for the evening meal.

This seasonal rarity has on two occasions graced the dinner table of Mr. Porter and the end is not in sight. Last Saturday the first strawberries of the "season" proved a rare delicacy and on Wednesday morning the plants had more luscious fruit to offer. Strawberries in October do not bespeak highly of impending cooler weather.

SYMPHONY RADIO HOUR CHANGED

Local listeners of the Toronto Symphony Band will be interested to learn that the organization's radio "spot" has been changed from 9:30 Monday night over CBL, to 8:30 Friday evenings over Station CKCL.

ACCEPT TOMATOES SOUND AND RIPE

The scarcity of the tomato crop this season is prompting canning factories to accept tomatoes, which ordinarily would be refused at the packing plants. Since the heavy frost which visited this district some ten days ago and ruined thousands of bushels of tomatoes, factories have been accepting almost everything, that was untouched by the frost. Even small, sound tomatoes are being accepted and the price as for the larger variety—40c per bushel.

The officials of the local Canada Packers plant on Albion Street, stated this morning that Friday night's frost would again affect the tomatoes but it was not known to what extent this might be. Since the frost of more than a week ago, they have been accepting all tomatoes, which were sound and ripe, they stated.

Police Blotter

City police returned a bicycle, which had been stolen and abandoned early in the week, to its rightful owner the other day, but the seat of the bike was missing when the machine was recovered. Detective Fred Isard temporarily supplied Carl Green, the owner of the bike, with a seat in hopes the original would be found.

Last night a teen-aged boy approached young Green and offered to sell him a bicycle seat. The alert Green boy glanced at the bike seat and snatched it out of the other lad's possession. "Buy it nothing, that's my bicycle seat that was stolen," young Green exclaimed as he returned home with the seat. Today when the lad informed the police of the recovery, he was unable to inform Chief Kidd the identity of the lad who had attempted to sell him his own bicycle seat.

W. Fitzgibbon, Lewis Street, complained to police authorities the fact that mischievous boys in that section of the city had broken several windows in his home and were generally causing annoyance and disturbance.

No arrests have been necessary in Belleville during the past 48 hours and only four transients sought shelter at the police station last night.

SAYS BRITISH VICTORY FORETOLD IN SCRIPTURES

Evangelist Beatrice L. Sims, Reg. N., Quotes Biblical Prophets

"Can Germany win the war and rule the world, according to the prophetic Scriptures? The answer is clear in one word of two letters NO," so declared Evangelist Beatrice L. Sims, Reg. N., last night at the Evangel Temple, when speaking upon the subject, "The Present Crisis in the Light of the Prophetic Scriptures."

After quoting many Scriptures verbatim, pointing out the difference between the Rapture and Revelation of Christ, the two phases of Christ's second coming, and the general and terminal signs of the Lord's Return, the evangelist spoke in exposition of the place of the British Empire in the prophetic Word, which caused many a hearty "amen" and "thank God" from loyal Britishers.

"There are three prophetic reasons why Germany cannot win this war. First, in all the prophetic Scriptures there is absolutely nothing that makes provision for any Germanic world-empire. Second, Germany's treatment of God's earthly covenant people the Jews, is such that Germany can reap nothing but the curse of God. Third, Germany is definitely identified in Ezekiel 38:6 as Gomer, and is there explicitly seen as a second-rate power, not a mighty world empire," said Miss Sims.

"Since the British Empire is the greatest Empire that this world has ever seen, it is not at all strange that we should be able to identify Britain in Bible prophecy, especially since the greatness of this Empire has taken place since Queen Victoria came to the throne. Today it has a population of more than 485 millions. Britain is definitely identified in the Scriptures as Tarshish. The facts stated about this nation have never been true of any other nation, and can only find fulfilment in the British Empire, since there are no less than seven absolute similarities. First, both Tarshish and the British Empire are maritime powers. 2 Chron. 9:21. Second, both Tarshish and the British Empire are merchant peoples. Ezekiel 38:13. Third, Tarshish and the British Empire both were producers and exporters of tin. Ezek. 38:13. The name Britannia means in Celtic—the land of metals, and in Bible times the tin of all the known world came from England. Fourth, Tarshish and the British Empire are both designated by the same symbol, the lion. Ezek. 38:13 speaks of the 'young lions,' which refers to the young self-governing dominions, and obviously includes the mother lion — England. Tarshish and England are both represented as covering a wide extent of territory, eastern and western Tarshish being designated, and the products produced in India being mentioned. 2 Chron. 9:21. Sixth, Tarshish and the British Empire are both the friends and helpers of Israel, the Jews, being destined by God to be the instrument used in bringing God's ancient people back to their own homeland. Isa. 60:9. The Balfour Declaration was the outstanding event in this connection. Seventh, Tarshish and the British Empire both seemed destined to continue right until the coming of the Lord Jesus to the earth when He will destroy the anti-Christ at the Revelation. Psalm 72, 8-10, and Ezekiel chapters 38 and 39. Thus we can rejoice in the assurance that there will be no dismemberment of this great Empire, and not only that it will last until the Lord Jesus comes, but take a leading part in the restoration of Israel, and so bring in the glorious personal, millennial reign of the Lord Jesus Christ."

Doe and Two Fawns Seen Near Wallbridge

That the wild life from the northern parts of the county is emigrating to more southern quarters is indicated by the reports of bears being seen, and killed, just a short distance north of the city, but the latest and possibly the most exciting report of wild life being in the district was told by Mr. Edgar Lane of Wallbridge this morning who states that one morning earlier in the week he was almost dumbfounded to see a beautiful doe and two lively young fawns ambling across his dooryard.

The doe was in the lead with the two fawns following when they were first seen by himself and his two children, stated Mr. Lane. They were only 30 ft. from his house and travelling west at the time. When the doe got a few yards ahead of her fawns she would stop and wait for them. Fences proved no obstacle to the beautiful animals, he stated, as they merely hopped over them.

Mr. Lane said that he had never hunted but when he saw the three deer ambling across his yard in such a leisurely manner, He was instantly struck with buck fever. "I couldn't have killed those deer under any circumstances," said Mr. Lane and his two children voiced the same opinion, saying, "Who would want to kill such beautiful creatures."

Major W. W. Pope, a former resident of Belleville, died at his residence in Streetsville, Ontario, on Friday, Oct. 4th, in his 91st year.

The late Major Pope was born in Compton, Quebec, of United Empire Loyalist stock. When a young man he was in the employ of the old Boston, Clinton and Fitchburg Railway. Later he moved to Belleville and engaged in the lumber business. In the year 1881 he joined the legal department of the Grand Trunk Railway, which was located in Belleville; the late John BBell, Q.C., being the Chief Counsel. When the legal offices were moved to Montreal about 1905, Major Pope transferred to that city and became assistant to the late W. H. Biggar, the Chief Counsel, who was also a former resident of Belleville. In the year 1909 Major Pope became solicitor and secretary of the Hydro Electric Power Commission and for twenty-seven years he filled the position in a highly capable manner. During much of the time he served with the Hydro he was a close associate of the late Sir Adam Beck.

During his residence in Belleville Major Pope held a high place in the regard of all citizens and served the city as an alderman during the years 1902 and 1903. He was also an enthusiastic member of the 15th Battalion in which he held a commission for many years. He was awarded the long service decoration, also the decoration as a veteran of the Fenian Raids. He was an ardent fisherman and hunter, a keen bowler and curler. Old friends in Belleville will regret to learn of his death.

Interment will be made in the Belleville Cemetery about 3.30 o'clock on Monday afternoon, Oct. 7th.

TRENTON

HEAD-ON CRASH INJURES WOMAN

Mrs. Thos Cain, Trenton, Returning From Visiting Husband in Hospital, Becomes Patient in Institution

Trenton, Oct. 5.—Mrs. Thomas Cain of Dufferin Street, Trenton, was injured in an automobile accident near Bayside early this morning and rushed to the office of Dr. J. W. Farley, where it was learned she suffered a fractured arm and a fractured rib.

The accident occurred on Highway No. 2, five miles east of Trenton early this morning. The injured lady was returning to Trenton after visiting her husband in Belleville General Hospital, when her car came into collision with an east-bound car driven by J. L. Stewart, R.R. 3, Belleville.

Traffic Officers J. Siple and D. Wilson investigated the accident. Charges are pending. Both cars were badly damaged in the accident.

Planes Delivered at Airport

Two trans-Canada Airways pilots went on a busman's holiday yesterday to fly two American planes to the R.C.A.F. Airport at Trenton.

The planes, twin-motored Boeing transports, were recently purchased by the Canadian Government from the Pennsylvania Central Airways. They had been used as passenger planes.

The Canadian pilots volunteered to bring the planes to Canada on their day off. Only their railway fares and meals were paid by the government. The pilots refused any remuneration for the trip declaring that it would be part of their war effort.

Leaving Pittsburgh at one o'clock the planes were flown to Buffalo, where the clearance papers were made out. From Buffalo the planes were flown to Trenton.

The Boeings will be used as bombing training ships by the R.C.A.F. These planes serve almost as well for training purposes as the regular bombers that cost almost five times as much.

Girl Guide Troops Collect Waste Material Throughout City

Today members of the Girl Guide Troops of the city are making their first collection of waste materials as outlined in this newspaper some time ago. Citizens are asked to co-operate to the fullest extent with the young ladies, as this phase of war work ranks with many other important ones. Householders are requested to have their bundles of waste ready for the Guides when they call. Every little bit helps, and the officials of the local troops are appreciative of the assistance being given by the general public.

Canada Calls Up Physically Fit Youth For Military Training

Stresses Need of Fostering Interest In Girl's Clubs

Mrs. G. Helson Tells W. I. of Importance of Training Girls for Grave Responsibilities Ahead

Youth took precedence at the Women's Institute convention on Friday morning when demonstrations of Girls' Work and an outline of activities in this department were presented under the convenership of Mrs. G. A. Helson, Warkworth, and directed by Miss Jean M. Scott, Toronto.

The program carried out in a very delightful and capable manner by the representatives of Girls' Clubs had an appealing variety, including a demonstration of a garden tea, a fashion show and a demonstration of correct packing methods for the traveller.

Mrs. Helson in her report pointed out the great importance of Girls' Work combining as it did education, community activities and agriculture. Each district had leaders attending training school. The project "A Club Girl Entertains" had proved most interesting and instructive teaching as it did the development of the girls as gracious hostesses and pleasing guests, and the acquiring of social poise and ease. Other projects were the making of sleeping garments and canning. Representatives attended the girls' conferences at Kemptville and Guelph through the co-operation of various branches and this, the speaker felt, was a very worthwhile part of Institute work, making it possible for girls to have the advantages of this conference.

Responsibility Is Great

"The Institute brings the university to the country girl", she explained, "and in the many courses and projects undertaken the girls are given a valuable education that will be of lasting merit. A great responsibility rests with the Women's Institute today in training girls for the heavy responsibilities that will fall on them as citizens of tomorrow. There never was a time when such training was needed as today, the time of crisis".

From Seymour East group the members learned how Tea is Served in the Garden, a skit written by the girls themselves, whose dialogue introduced in pleasant fashion the explanation and scope of the girls' program. Those taking part were Doris Locke, Jean Murray and Elsie Ranney.

Fashion Show

The Huff's Island Girls' Club presented a fashion show, demonstrating the results of their course in the making of sleeping garments. Those taking part were: —Betra Fairman, Mrs. D. F. Hatfield, Frances Wallbridge, Audry Johnson, Helen Lough, Marion Wallbridge and Hazel Minaker. Six wore beautifully made housecoats, their own handiwork, in colours most becoming to the individual wearer. The price of the material was given by the chairman and showed how expensive such smart garments can be, when made at home. In design, fit and material the housecoats were excellent and won high praise from the audience.

The right way of packing bags was shown by Phillipston-Zion Girls' Club, Phyllis Beatty and Irene Ketcheson taking part. The girls had learned the art of packing for neatness and preserving the fresh appearance of their clothes and the audience learned the various steps necessary for expert packing.

Miss Jean M. Scott, coach in Girls' Work for the Department of Agriculture, Women's Institute branch, spoke briefly, thanking the members for their response as leaders and supporters of girls' work and expressed appreciation to the girls for their responsiveness in club work.

Excellent Meals

The morning's session was brought to a close by a luncheon served by members of St. John's Mission. For several years the Women's Institute has had the assistance of this group in catering for luncheons and banquets that have always been a delightful part of their convention program. The excellence of the menu and the thoughtful attention of those in charge has made these functions pleasant and friendly. The fact that this year the Mission workers decided to reduce the cost of the meals, in consideration of the many demands that were being made at this time, was a thoughtful gesture that the delegates thoroughly appreciated.

Comprehensive Reports Review Year of Achievement By District Women's Institutes

That branches of the Women's Institute of this convention area had zealously carried out the organization's motto "For home and country" in their programs throughout the year was clearly seen in the picture of Institute activities presented by the reports of the standing committees at the convention held Thursday and Friday in St. Thomas Parish House.

Presiding for the morning session on Friday, Mrs. R. Bush, Consecon, conducted the business of the meeting very efficiently. The program opened with a round table conference of the conveners of standing committees and the singing of patriotic songs which under the leadership of Mrs. Harrison was a popular part of the convention program.

Legislation

Miss Barker of Bloomfield related what the districts had accomplished in their study of Legislation and some of the papers and roll calls that had proved most popular. These were the making of wills, property rights, the War Charities Act, Naturalization Act. It was suggested that themes of future study might well be responsible government, traffic laws, and legislation on taxation, how they are collected and distributed so that one may have an intelligent grasp of the purposes for which taxes are devoted.

Mrs. J. C. Sills, West Huntingdon, presented the report on Historical Research and Current Events. This had proved a fascinating topic and the history of communities and families was being searched out in many localities. Exhibits, displays and demonstrations of articles of other days were held and grandmothers' programs given prominence.

Village Books

Most important was the interest taken in the compiling of Tweedsmuir Village Books, preserving the history of townships and towns, at the suggestion of the Lady Tweedsmuir, who graciously allowed the record books to be in her name. Many districts have begun this project, some in looseleaf form with each branch making its contribution of data on the settlement and development of their centre. An excellent program suggestion was that the branches hold an Indian day, a time set aside for honor to the Indian race and a study of it.

Mrs. W. A. Hoskins, Cobourg, graciously presided for the afternoon program. Two important reports were presented, that of Canadianization by Mrs. Wicks, Cobourg, which stressed the welcoming of refugee children and new Canadians, and Miss G. Laundy's report on Community Activities and Relief which showed the deep interest taken by Institute workers in their community life and in the betterment of those less privileged.

Interesting discussion followed these reports, and this discussion period of the program gave the proceedings vitality, participated in as they were, by keen and discerning members.

Work of Department

An enlightening talk on the work of the Women's Institute branch of the Department of Agriculture was led by Miss Mary A. Clarke, who said that the scope of the department's work and responsibilities was perhaps not very well known to the individual member. Under her superintendency, an office which draws together the various services of the Department, Miss Powell was in charge of administrative work, the news flashes, the loan of clippings on the request of branches 881 of which secured information last year. Miss Easie is in charge of the junior department and has nine county coaches who work on a temporary basis. There are other part time instructors.

Last year eighty two district training schools made possible the practical study of clothing, nutrition, home crafts and housing. Four thousand women in the province were directly contacted and 16,000 indirectly so. The speaker service was greatly in demand, 4,690 members being addressed. Five day short courses were conducted totalling 149, and requests for this year are 125.

The extensive work of the 660 Junior clubs in the province, with short courses, conferences and training is an important part of the department's work. A vast correspondence is carried out during the year, three stenographers accomplishing the typing required. Last year 90 circular forms of 27,760 letters and 17,000 individual letters were sent out.

Splendid Convention

Miss Clarke extended sincere congratulations on the wonderful convention, unique among those she had attended in the past two years for the spontaneity which characterized its every session. Members entered into the discussions, without undue formality, so that one felt that no one hesitated to ask a question or to bring a problem before the convention. This quality of spontaneity was a tribute to the personality of officers and leaders. Miss Clarke very graciously answered all questions which were contributed to the question box.

Mrs. C. Holmes, the newly elected Provincial Board Director, expressed her appreciation of being chosen for this office.

Many Exhibits

The many examples of homecraft which had adorned the front of the stage during the convention were described by those who had brought them to the meeting. An excellent braided rug, exactingly made, hooked rugs, cleverly designed and made of silk stockings were greatly admired. The work of Miss Lorraine Haight of tha Quinte Institute branch who won second prize at the C. N. E. with her sample of Italian hemstitching was warmly commended, while the sox and sweater made by a branch member and receiving high rating at the C. N. E. were very well done.

Commanding special attention were the articles brought by Mrs. Bedell, and beautifully made by her sister, Miss M. Young, Hillier. These included a lovely painted shawl and two exquisite dolls, a miniature George and Martha Washington, designed and executed by Miss Young with a wonderful likeness to the original paintings. These dolls were clothed in the beautiful costumes of the period complete to the last detail, all the work of Miss Young. These dolls are part of her extensive and famous collection. Mrs. Bedell also showed a Paisley shawl which she prized and some very dainty and valued examples of the old handleless cups.

At the conclusion of the session, the presiding officer and the newly elected area chairman expressed appreciation and good wishes to the audience.

Direct Descendant Of Chief Tecumseh In Canadian Army

By EDWIN S. JOHNSON

Canadian Press Staff Writer

Somewhere in England, Oct. 5—(CP)—Direct descendant of the famous Indian chieftain Tecumseh, Joseph Stonefish, a full-blooded Shawnee from the Moraviantown Reservation near Thamesville, Ont., has come overseas for the second time to do his bit for the country his forefather served so well.

Stonefish, who came over with the signal corps of the 2nd Canadian Division, claims to be the only living person who knows where the Indian chief lies buried, a secret which Canadian historical associations have unsuccessfully sought to solve for generations.

Tecumseh, according to records, fell in battle while fighting by the side of the British forces against the Americans in the war of 1812. No trace of his body nor his grave was ever found.

Stonefish, however, claims Tecumseh was murdered by a group of his followers who turned traitor. He says Tecumseh's grave was shown to him when he was a boy by a grandmother who made him promise he would never disclose the location.

"I feel genuinely sorry that I am not in a position to tell the authorities where the grave is, for I should like to see a memorial erected over the plot," he said. "But we Indians regard a pledge so given as sacred and I'm afraid the secret will have to pass with me into the grave."

A sniper in the first Great War, Stonefish lost no time in enlisting when Canada declared war against Germany last September. He was determined to emulate his father who was the first man from the reservation to join the Canadian forces in the first Great War.

Mrs. J. Black, Warkworth, Named Convention Chairman at Women's Institutes Election of Officers

At the annual meeting of the Women's Institute for this convention area the election of officers resulted in the unanimous selection of Mrs. J. Black of Warkworth as chairman. Mrs. Jas. Bailey, Eldorado, the retiring chairman was elected to honorary office, and appreciation was expressed of her splendid work as leader, the culmination of which was this convention which many felt was the most interesting and friendly of the series of Belleville conventions. While this gathering has always been held with a spirit of friendliness and mutual regard, this year the members seemed drawn closer, as the bonds of home and country became more precious in the light of developments in a discordant world.

Mrs. Bailey in a brief and sincere address thanked the officers and members for their enthusiastic cooperation with her, and the newly elected president in voicing her appreciation of her new office, asked for the same cooperation which would ensure a successful year.

MINT WORKING DAY AND NIGHT

The demand for coins, copper and silver pieces, is expanding through the Dominion. Officials attribute the new peak of today as due in part to the new taxes such as a cent or two on magazines and through the expansion of business by the acceleration of trade due to the war.

Over five million coins are being turned out as against the usual annual production of about thirty million copper and silver pieces or between 500,000 and 600,000 a week.

Many remember well the shortage of coppers last Christmas season, when they were greatly in demand. Modern business demands a constant rehandling of these pieces of copper for the purpose of trade. Dozens of dollars daily are required by many firms to handle holiday trade.

CHRISTMAS TREES

Millions of Canadian Christmas trees will play their part in helping Canada with foreign exchange. Though Christmas is over two and a half months away, inquiries have come to firms in Montreal from prospective buyers in a number of states. Canadians expect that the premium paid on American dollars will expand the trade beyond the proportions of the business of other years.

In a little while trainloads of the trees which give Christmas the setting to which the world has become accustomed will be on their way from the Canadian forests to the United States in preparation for the annual fete.

Last year the United States imported 4,643,961 Christmas trees valued at $536,692, all the shipments being credited to Canada. Last year's increase, plainly due to the favorable exchange, was half a million trees.

Balsam fir is most popular species in the east for the holiday season. This is preferred because of its pyramidal shape and because it is more easily handled in shipping.

Arrangements for the purchase of trees will be completed within the next two weeks. Cutting gets under way next month and the carloads start rolling southward towards the latter part of November.

This trade will help Canada's war effort through the bringing of U.S. dollars which will help in Canadian and British purchases in the United States.

The evergreen will never lose its appeal for it is always in season in the fancy of the people who admire it in the woods and on lawns. At Christmas of course with the white setting of snow and in the warmth of the family hearths and in midst of presents and decorations this tree is the centre of festivity.

JEWISH OFFICER
SAVES GERMAN

A Jewish lieutenant in the British army saved a man the other day. That man was a Messerschmitt pilot who had fallen into the sea with his plane. Jew and Nazi were picked up in a boat after the Jew had swum three hundred yards and saved the German.

Perhaps somewhere in his anatomy the "pure aryan," to use the words which mean nothing in fact but which were a mere catch phrase for the Nazis in their early days, may have felt resentment at being rescued by a man who was a member of the race whom his Fuehrer has so persecuted but there is no sign that the young German was not much pleased to be rescued.

The chief Nazis would have doubtless rather have had the man drowned than rescued in this way.

One thing is clear, the Jew cannot but have known the pilot was a German but he saw too that there was a human being in danger and he did the natural thing and went to his rescue.

NEW SITUATIONS
CREATED BY WAR

War creates new situations. This year there are enrolled at Upper Canada College 93 British war guests as students, many of them from the nobility and a few of them Continentals, including Czech refugees. Of the British boys some are from schools like Harrow, Eaton and Marlborough.

Here is a situation only this war could create. The future will show the results of this bringing of young Britishers and others to the New World for Canadian boys will learn valuable lessons from the war guest students and the Britishers and Continentals will pick up many a lesson in Canada.

In starting the war the Nazis have brought to pass results which will strengthen the ties of democratic peoples. Hitler and his Nazis are making certain their own defeat because of their complete revelation of the coarseness and violence and brutality of their actions, which have been manifested particularly in their relations with the young and old and the weak.

BRITAIN'S GREAT TASK

The highest task ever given a nation is Britain's. She fights to save herself and democratic civilization. When she wins the world will be safe and will rejoin the march of progress.

So great is the honor that is Britain's and every Britisher's that in winning the war Britain makes it possible for all the nations to be free from dictatorship.

So Britain is the great leader of the democratic spirit of today. She saves herself by downing the Hun and Fascist and saves the world.

MUSSOLINI
DISAPPOINTED

It must be disconcerting to the loquacious, boastful and pompous Mussolini that he has not the opportunity to boast as he did in thunder from in front of the palace he used to occupy in Rome, haranging the Fascist soldiery. Italy has been at war for months and has had not a creditable performance to her credit yet. Instead of boasting, if the Duce did speak, he should have to utter excuses for certain incidents.

Just now the British have landed reinforcements in Malta right under the noses of the Fascists. The Italians have pounded the British fortress almost constantly since Italy entered the war and yet Malta is solid against the attacks of the enemy.

Official Italy is silent of course. What news there is comes from the Admiralty at London and it reveals a healthy confidence as it relates the story of Italy's fugitive naval forces which were sighted by British aircraft one hundred miles from the British forces. The enemy was already steaming at high speed to its base and an engagement was not possible.

So Joe Went Along

From the Printed Word

When the Blank Battery, R.C.A., of the Third Canadian Division recently left its home town in Ontario to proceed to an unnamed destination in Eastern Canada, Joe went along. Standing orders for troop movements state clearly that troops must not take their pets with them when they are moved, but the members of the Higher Command who wrote that order did not know Joe. Joe's place is with the Battery, and if military regulations are against it, so much the worse for military regulations.

When the Battery was recruited, an official mascot was presented by a local resident. The mascot was an amiable St. Bernard, named Wallace of unimpeachable breeding and amiable disposition. Wallace was decorative on parade, and a perfect gentleman in every way, but he was too heavy and lethargic to go on route marches. Nobody knows where Joe came from. He just appeared one day, adopted the Battery and intimated to Wallace that his job was filled.

There may have been an army dog in Joe's ancestry. Most known breeds of dogs are represented in his general appearance which would shock a dog fancier. In any event, he took to his self-appointed position as naturally as if he had been born on an army blanket. When the soldiers fell in for morning parade, Joe was there, standing stiffly to attention in front of the line. When the Battery moved through the streets in column of route, Joe preceded it, clearing small boys and other civilians from the path. He was worth a squad of mounted policemen.

The motivating force of Joe's conduct appears to be that soldiers are the salt of the earth and civilians are beneath contempt. This led to one regrettable incident, shortly before the Battery moved. Present on the final inspection was a militia colonel, who is expected to be appointed to the command of the regiment to which the Battery belongs. As his appointment had not yet been gazetted, he came on parade in civilian dress. No one had thought of explaining the situation to Joe, and Joe considered it his duty to move the colonel off the parade grounds. The solemnity of the occasion was marred until Joe was placed under arrest.

That crime is the only black mark on Joe's regimental conduct sheet, and evidently the adjutant has forgiven it. When he came to write the troop movement order, he checked its paragraphs with the standing orders on troop movements. When he came to the order about leaving pets behind, he decided that it could not apply to Joe, so Joe entrained with his comrades.

Britain Helped Make Japan Great

By DAVID WATT

When Japan, in 1868, decided to discard her old feudal laws and system and begin the building of an imperial navy on Western lines, it was to Britain that she applied for help, and ungrudgingly was it given her.

The British Admiralty sent a number of highly-placed officers and ship designers to Japan to advise the new naval power, and big British shipbuilding firms were combed for a number of skilled craftsmen to give practical backing to the technical tutors. Thanks to this British assistance, Japan's oldest dockyard at Yokosuka, 25 miles from Tokyo, was modernized and in a few years was building warships for the new fleet.

Other dockyards were later opened in various parts of the Japanese empire, all as a result of British technical advice. Admiral Tracy and Admiral Hopkins, two of the first advisory admirals to go to Japan by permission of the Admiralty, were amazed, and at times disconcerted by the rapidity with which the Japanese grasped and executed the naval lessons. The British workmen soon found that the Japanese, once they had mastered any process, always employed native labour afterwards meanwhile keeping the foreign experts standing by for any unforeseen emergencies! Full pay and allowances were paid to those "stand-bys" some of whom, from ennui, married Japanese girls and settled down in the country!

In return for British technical co-operation, Japan, in the 70's and 80's placed many naval orders in British yards, to the grave concern of France, who made successful attempts to get a share of the Japanese naval orders. But French-built ships failed to please the Japanese authorities, who quickly reverted to British builders after a French-constructed cruiser of 3,650 tons had mysteriously foundered when on its way to be delivered.

Japan's intensive study of British methods did not only apply to ship construction. Discipline, strategy, fuelling and even the diet of sailors in the Royal Navy received close and unremitting attention from the Japanese naval chiefs. When it was found that native food did not give the nourishment and stamina necessary to a vigorous sea life, the Japanese sailors were given European food cooked in native fashion. A number of youths were sent to England to be trained as naval cadets, and these lads were granted special facilities and privileges by the British Admiralty on land and sea.

High wages were offered by Japanese naval builders to British draughtsmen and engineers, who were willing to come to Japan, and she also made it clear to all and sundry that inventors and their ideas were always welcome at Tokyo.

That fear of Russia was one reason why Britain was not averse to seeing Japan becoming an important power in the East cannot be gainsaid, and it explains the rather extraordinary attitude of the world's greatest naval power to Japan's new fleet in those not so far-off days. That the day would come when Japan would demand naval parity with Britain would have been received with laughter in Vicorian England.

"The blighters are like children when they board a new warship," wrote an English lieutenant, who was acting as an adviser to Tokio about fifty years ago. By 1889 British advice was not so eagerly sought as it had been a decade or so before. Japanese dockyards became 'hush hush' places and English visitors were not encouraged to inspect them. Advisers, engaged on long-term contracts, had their engagements cancelled with generous compensation payments.

Japan's great naval plans had begun in earnest. The Fusso-Japanese war of 1904-5 was to demonstrate to the world that Japan had made sound use of the advice given by easy-going and rather patronizing British naval experts thirty years previously. Nowadays Japan builds all her own warships, and her dockyards for years past have been scenes of feverish activity and experimenting. Japan's naval and air secrets are the most closely guarded in the world and even the most distinguished foreign visitors are told very little and allowed to see even less!

That Japan remembers British help in the rise of her navy there is no reason to doubt; but British failure to renew the Anglo-Japanese alliance, after the War, has not been relished or forgotten in Tokyo. In the new naval armament race, which began as a result of the failure of the London Naval Conference, Japan is not likely to ask for any foreign advice or help. She has now nothing to learn in naval construction or tactics, and her present position as a sea power is based on the best British traditions and knowledge.

In the archives in the government offices in Tokyo are kept all the records regarding the British officers and advisers who "invaded" Japan sixty or so years ago. It cost the Japanese a substantial sum of money—but the investment more than paid a dividend in the war of 1904-5 against Russia. Queen Victoria and Mr. Gladstone were among those who thought that Japan should get every possible assistance in the building of a navy—although the former expressed doubts whether the "sweet Japanese" would ever make good sailors.

It is curious that, though all the world knows of Germany's most-feared man, Herr Himmler, so little is heard of his opposite number in Rome, the equally feared Signor Arturo Bocchini. Whereas Himmler believes in exposing the work of himself and his Gestapo to the full limelight of Dr. Goebbels' propaganda, Bocchini considers that the first business of his own secret police is to work secretly. Signor Bocchini is a fat little man, whose smiling face is the mask for a cold and cruel nature. An outward semblance of stolidity conceals a quicksilver slipperiness and agility.

Bocchini is a ruthlessly vigorous organizer and has forged the Italian Gestapo or O. V. R. A. (Organisazione Vigilanza Repressione Antifascismo) into a powerful weapon of the Fascist regime. Its striking power is fully equal to that of its fellow institution in Germany.

The head of the O. V. R. A. is an early riser. Every morning his familiar double chin bobs up above his desk in the Palazzo Venezia. One of his first routine duties is to report in detail to the Duce on all the secret information, both important and trivial, collected by his agents in the course of the previous twenty-four hours. Mussolini loves these accounts of intimate details in the private and public lives of the men about him. They provide him with a comprehensive, though often distorted picture. For Bocchini there are no secrets, either in Italy or abroad. He employs spies by the thousand — in every class of society, in every profession, every organization. Espionage and eavesdropping were from the beginning essential features of the Fascist regime, and Bocchini has brought the system to a fine art. In recent years he has often visited Germany and has cribbed a good deal from Gestapo organization. On the other hand, his friend Himmler has readily admitted that Bocchini's spy system has served as the model for several improvements in the German Secret Service.

While placing unbounded trust in the Chief of Police, who is responsible for the personal safety of the Duce and of his regime, Mussolini also regards him as one of his chief advisers. After Bocchini has made him morning report, his master asks his political advice. It is often said that he has greater influence with Mussolini than most ministers and generals and that his advice was responsible for the Duce's intervention in Abyssinia and for the tacit acceptance of Hitler's policy of conquest in Czechoslovakia.

Woe to any Italian who is suspected of not being 100% Fascist or of being associated with anti-Fascist activities! Any such man has Bocchini as his personal and pitiless enemy. Bocchini has been at his job for fourteen years. The reorganization of the Italian police was entrusted to him in 1926, following a series of unsuccessful attempts upon Mussolini's life. This task he has performed with truly totalitarian thoroughness. He will tell journalists with a sly twinkle in his eyes: "My secret police are the best in Europe, but please don't tell anyone!" And it is a fact that every Italian citizen is watched at every moment of his life. If three people sit together in a cafe, one of them is sure to be an agent of O. V. R. A. To give any public expression to anti-Fascist feeling is therefore madness. Even whispered criticism is extremely dangerous, for there is a good chance that the sympathetic listener is in Bocchini's pay. A large part of the Italian people was definitely opposed to Italy's entry into the war on the side of Hitler. After the unhappy experiences of the Abyssinian campaign, very many Italians, despite all the beating of the big drum, became eager pacifists and many more would have preferred to fight with the Allies, if Mussolini insisted upon their fighting at all. In the weeks preceding Italy's declaration of war upon Britain and France, O. V. R. A. was kept even busier than usual. Italian prisons were filled to capacity with pacifist and pro-Allied elements.

Many officials of the Fascist Party have in the course of years had bitter cause to regret certain utterances which caused them to appear in some way "untrustworthy persons". Bocchini, like Himmler, has "purged" his party. If he has not followed the German example of a St. Bartholomew's Eve, he is responsible for the disappearance of many Fascist luminaries from public life, who reappear in prison files, in the registers of lunatic asylums or among the lists of those in banishment on the Lipari Isles.

4 Members of Cochrane Town Council Unseated

Cochrane, Ont., Oct. 5—(CP)—Four members of Cochrane town council were unseated by order of Judge R. A. Danis today because no warrant had been issued for the holding of an election Aug. 26.

The Judge said he was satisfied the four had been placed in office by the will of the people and they had not acted with malice or spite in the matter. Accordingly, he assessed the costs of the proceedings against the municipality. The four, Miss Emma Dempsey, first woman councillor in Cochrane, Laughlin McKinnon, W. G. Martin and Carl Thorning, are expected to stand for election again.

The Aug. 26 election was held because three members of council resigned after electors defeated a by-law to abolish the Public Utilities Commission sponsored by the council.

Watch the Mediterranean

This is the note of warning that is being sounded in England. Before the excitement subsides over Japan's adherence to the Axis, before the meaning of Spain's wait-and-see attitude is appraised, before Russia's reaction is disclosed, the British are admonished not to lose sight of war moves in the Near East. It is evident that they look upon the Treaty of Berlin as a wide-fronted diplomatic offensive to divert them from more immediate dangers. As far as the United States in concerned, the real fear in England is that the Germans may succeed in their purpose of confusing the issue and focusing American attention on our interests in the Pacific. As October opens and the likelihood of the invasion of the islands diminshes, British eyes in the lookout posts turn not to the Far East—where they are obviously expected to turn—but to Egypt and the Mediterranean.

And indeed all the signs point to the Mediterranean as the active battleground of the Winter war. The extension of the Axis is in itself a sign that the struggle will outlast the Winter and that more than German military might is required to defeat Britain. Hence it is logical that the attack should be shifted from England to the gateways of the empire and that the second phase of the Battle of Britain should be fought on the Italian front, with reinforcements from the second and hitherto extremely cautious partner in the enterprise. Whether the German armies and air force will assist in the African campaign will depend, no doubt, on the amount of British strength that can be mobilised to defend the Suez. Nazi pilots must keep on hammering at England and combating the increasing force and range of the British offensive on the Reich and the Channel ports. To keep this up while pounding at the British fleet in the Mediterranean, which can be dislodged only by bombs, means the use of air power to an extent without precedent even in the siege of London. So far air power has not crippled Malta, let alone England; what it can do in a straight test against a great navy is yet to be proved.

This and other unanswered questions may be decided in the Mediterranean. The battle in that sea, if it comes, will be Hitler's admission that he needs help to beat Britain; waged on a crowded tricontinental highway, it cannot end without involving other powers.

While it is important to bar undesirable aliens, the economic loss sustained in the free interchange between the two countries is far more obvious than the gain achieved. The passport requirement should be rescinded, and every effort should be made to correlate and complement the activities of the two nations.—N. Y. Times.

THAT BODY OF YOURS

James W. Barton, M.D.

When we read or hear about blood pressure, most of us have in mind high blood pressure which means to us the possibility of a stroke of apoplexy or a heart attack—coronary occlusion. We scarcely ever think about low blood pressure yet as far as everyday health and enjoyment of living is concerned, one with high blood pressure appears to be the healthiest and the happiest.

When the blood pressure is below normal, the individual never feels buoyant or really strong and well. He usually feels tired, lacks energy and desire for work or play, has a poor color and is often blue or depressed.

While low blood pressure runs in some families just as do other characteristics, in the great majority of cases there is some cause for persistent low blood pressure which may be found by careful search by the family physician.

One cause is simply that the individual was born with heart and bloodvessels below average. The heart and bloodvessels have not the power and elasticity to give sufficient "push" to the blood.

Still another cause is a deficiency in the gland system of the body, perhaps of one, but more likely of two or three of the glands—thyroid, pituitary, adrenal or others.

When infection occurs in the body—teeth, tonsils, sinuses, gall bladder, intestine—the blood pressure increases at first in its effort to overcome the effects of the infection but when the infection has persisted for a long time, the blood pressure, as with all the body processes, begins to tire and the pressure decreases.

Where the individual was born with a deficient strength of heart, bloodvessels, and muscular strength, regular systematic exercise followed by a warm tub bath and a few seconds of a cool, not cold, shower tones up heart and bloodvessels, increases the blood pressure to some extent, and gives a feeling of buoyancy and health.

In all cases a search should be made for any low infection by physician and dentist, the removal of which should increase the power of heart and bloodvessels and so raise the blood pressure.

"Evans of the Broke"

With London facing what may be the worst winter in all her 2,000 years of history, Britain authorities have taken steps to alleviate suffering and hardship for the millions of men and women who cannot leave the city. The first step was to name Admiral Sir Edward Evans, "Evans of the Broke," dictator of air raid shelters. He faces a tremendous job, the organization and maintenance of suitable, properly lighted, heated and supplied shelters. If anyone can accomplish this in the time available, Admiral Evans can. His whole record from his earliest days is one of self-reliance, independent thought and prompt action. An excellent and wise choice behind which one senses the hand of Churchill with whom the Admiral has some things in common.

"Evans of the Broke" is 59, but in the 49 years which have elapsed since he was expelled from school for fighting for pennies in a London meat market, he has made himself almost a legendary figure in British eyes. He is the most decorated man in the Royal Navy and he came up step by step beginning with that hard school for sailormen, the Mercantile Marine training ship Worcester. At 16 he entered the navy. A smallish, chunky well-set man, standing firm on sturdy legs, he has made his naval career a brilliant story of action and adventure in which his reckless daring played a dominant role.

Britons knew him as the hero of that Dover Patrol exploit in which he commanded the destroyer Broke. Accompanied by another destroyer, the Swift, Evans attacked six German destroyers. They sank two, rammed one broadside, and badly damaged two others. They reverted to the old style warfare—boarding—and fought with cutlasses.

When he was 21 the young officer served in the Morning Star with the Discovery expedition commanded by Capt. R. F. Scott and including Lieut. Shackleton. At 26 he was appointed second in command of the British Antarctic Expedition. After the death of Capt. Scott in 1913 he returned in command. The First World War saw him in several commands. He gained his captaincy after the Broke action. From 1923 on to about 1935 he collected his vast array of foreign decorations including the United States Navy Cross. In 1921 he was awarded Lloyd's Gold Medal for saving life at sea in the Hong Moh disaster in which he personally rescued a number of Chinese from their sinking ship. He has been commander-in-chief of the Australian and South African stations and of the Home Fleet.

This is the doughty fighter chosen to step into the breach, to provide the population of the world's largest city with adequate air raid shelters through the coming winter. He must overcome red tape, custom, and probably step on some people's toes. Londoners who met the admiral when he was in this city 25 years ago, who recall his quiet self-assurance, his physical energy, his poise, the twinkle in his eye, the immaculate polish on his neat uniform boots, know he can do it. "Evans of the Broke" is the natural choice as "dictator" of air raid shelters. He will go about his work "navy style" and get results, which is "what the doctor ordered."—London Free Press.

TRAINEES URGED NOT TO FORGET A TOOTH BRUSH

Last Minute Instructions Issued Before Men Go to Camp on Wednesday

CLOTHING SUPPLIED

Ottawa, Oct. 5.— (CP)—"Don't forget your tooth brush" is one of the last-minute instructions the Defence Department would like to get across to the 29,750 young men now preparing to report to military training centres next Wednesday.

Unlike the lads who enter the army to stay the "young deefnders", as the men now being mustered into the Non-Permanent Active Militia have been called, are expected to bring their own toilet articles.

They will spend 30 days in the training centres and the government does not feel justified in providing them for that length of time with new toilet articles which could not be passed on to other recruits later.

For the most part the men going into training on Wednesday are of the 1918-19 class, born between July 16, 1918 and July 15, 1919, inclusive. A few of 22 and 23 years have been called to fill out quotas in various areas where there have not been a sufficint number of 21-year-old men, single or widowers without children, available.

Other Essentials Needed

Besides a tooth brush the boys are expected to bring a pair of braces, a hair brush, a comb, a shaving kit, soap, a towel and a boot brush.

Everything else required during their 30 days will be provided at the expense of the people of Canada. These things will include a complete outfit of clothing—uniform, great coat, cap, boots, socks and underwear.

While the boys will have to take more to camp than recruits entering the Canadian active Service Force they need not carry as much as the volunteers who went to militia training camps during the summer. The latter had to take their own knives and forks.

In all, more than 5,000 officers and men will be employed on the camp staffs. The key personnel, officers, non-commissioned officers and cooks have been busy for weeks prparing themselves for the work.

"TOUGH BABY"

You wouldn't offend this British miss by alluding to her as a "tough baby." In fact she would be proud of the title; for she is one of 50 picked for their hardiness to go to Britain's African colony in Kenya. The girls were selected from 300 applicants to drive ambulances in the African war zone. This one is showing how tough she can be with a stubborn tire.

Picton and District

Picton, Oct. 5 (Special). — Miss Mary Graydon has accepted a position with the Canadian Bank of Commerce in Toronto.

Miss Rena Ostrander has returned to Montreal after a very pleasant visit at the home of her aunt, Mrs. Geo. Haddon and family on Bridge street.

Mrs. Monte Shannon, Paul street, opened her home on Monday evening for the first Fall meeting of the Evening Branch of the W.A. of St. Mary Magdalen's Church. Mrs. Saunders presided and opened the meeting with prayer and a hymn. Following the hearing of reports, a splendid account of the deanery meeting was given by the president. Work on a quilt occupied the members during the evening at the close of the meeting. Mrs. Shannon served refreshments assisted by Mrs. Saunders, Miss Vera Miller and Miss Marion Steet.

Mrs. James Inrig is ill at her home on Centre street with a trained nurse in attendance.

Mr. and Mrs. Harold Miller and daughter Leone of Kingston are guests of Mrs. Irvine Miller and Miss Vera Miller, Downs avenue.

A very interesting program featured the opening meeting of the H. and S. Club in the Kindergarten on Wednesday evening. The president, Mrs. F. Webster, occupied the chair and welcomed many new members. Mrs. Howard Hogle contributed a vocal solo which was greatly enjoyed. The boys' choir of the Anglican Church sang "There'll Always Be An England." Speaking on the subject "Parent Education", Miss M. H. Davidson of the Mental Health Clinic, Kingston, stressed that parents needed the benefit of modern psychology, so that they might lay a firm foundation for making their children happy, well adjusted, efficient citizens. She dealt with many problems that cause friction in the home, and urged the mothers to join the parent education group that will study this year under the leadership of Mrs. Harold Knapman.

Dr. and Mrs. G. E. Goodwin and Mrs. Bert Barber attended Demorestville Fair on Wednesday.

Mrs. George Hepburn is confined to her home suffering from septic sore throat.

Mrs. L. B. Calnan left on Thursday to spend a few days in Toronto.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Hyatt are moving into Mrs. Bertha Hyatt's house at the Sandbanks for the winter. Mrs. Hyatt will spend the winter with her sister in Bloomfield.

Strength of Canadian Army Will Comprise 500,000 Men By Sometime Next Summer

(By Frank Flaherty, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Oct. 5—(CP)—A Canadian army of 500,000 men on permanent and non-permanent service is in sight, the latest enlistment figures available at the Department of National Defence indicate.

At the present rate of growth, the military forces will reach the 500,000 mark some time next summer, through operation of the National Resources Mobilization Act. Calls sent out under the act will bring 29,750 men into non-permanent active militia training centres next Wednesday, and a total of about 240,000 in the next 12 months.

The Canadian Active Service Force at home and overseas now numbers about 165,000 men on full-time service. The non-permanent active militia after the summer recruiting drive numbers close to 112,000, of whom 65,000 attended summer training camps.

Under law and policy as they stand today, the militia is liable for compulsory service anywhere in Canada in case of emergency. It also constitutes a reserve of partially trained men which can be drawn upon, by voluntary enlistment, to reinforce C.A.S.F. units.

Many Respond to Call

Canadians responded in unexpectedly large numbers to the appeal sent out by the government early this summer for enlistment in the militia. When the recruiting program was announced in June the strength of the N.P.A.M. was less than 10,000 men. It had been much reduced by enlistments into the Active Service Force.

Early in the summer all militia units not already mobilized into the C.A.S.F. were authorized to recruit up to war strength. Formation of second battalions was authorized where units had been called into the C.A.S.F.

The war strength of the militia was placed at about 90,000 men and plans were made for extensive accommodation in summer training camps.

The call for recruits brought the strength up to 47,373 on July 29 and 68,078 on Aug. 6. It became apparent the militia would have more men than could be handled in the training camps, so most units were given a quota of something less than their actual strength for camp purposes.

The deadline for voluntary enlistment in the militia was set at Aug. 15. Thereafter enlistment was to be by calls to age groups under the Mobilization Act. Most units across the country, however, were besieged by would-be volunteers. Some young men wanted to enlist voluntarily rather than await a call in the near future but hundreds of others not likely to be called for a long time, seeing their last chance of getting into the militia disappearing, hurried to join.

As a result the rescruiting campaign's objective was exceeded. Instead of the full war strength of 90,000 men the N.P.A.M. reached nearly 112,000.

5,000 TROOPS BACK IN CAMP

Three-Day Mass Movement Shows Efficiency of Canada's Mechanized Machine

Camp Borden, Ont., Oct. 4—(CP)—Five thousand Canadian soldiers were back in camp here Friday after a three-day mass movement tour which carried them through sections of Western Ontario and to the industrial centres of Hamilton and Toronto.

Exciting to the hundreds of thousands of civilians who watched the progress of the mechanized columns, the manoeuvres were no more than a lesson in travel for the soldiers and their officers. Speed on wheels in the order of modern warfare and camp commandant, Col. S. A. Lee, and his staff were testing the efficiency of Canada's mechanized machine.

The results on the whole were satisfactory to the authorities. They were able to discover a number of weaknesses and they will be corrected in the coming weeks.

More than 450 army lorries and a number of light troop-carriers were used to convey the forces and additional mechanized equipment included the motorcycles of the second cavalry motorcycle regiment.

There were no serious mishaps as a result of the troop movement although one serious casualty occurred in Brantford where one soldier was struck by an automobile.

MISSION CHURCH TO BE DEDICATED

Parishioners of Church Fell Logs in Bush and Hold 'Bee' to Build Church

Fieldville, Que., Oct. 4 (CP).—A new Roman Catholic Mission Church will be opened in this Gatineau Hills village Sunday—a church built by Fieldville farmers from timber they felled themselves.

A year ago, Father Francis McGregor obtained permission from the late Achbishop J. G. Forbes of Ottawa to erect the building. The aim was to remove the necessity for Catholic families at Fieldville to drive 18 miles each Sunday to his parish church at Farrellton, Que.

Fieldville Catholics, mostly farmers of Irish descent, went into the bush lots on their property, cut down trees, and had the logs sawn into lumber. Then they held old-fashioned "bees" to put up the building.

On Sunday, Most Rev. Alexandre Vachon, present Archbishop of Ottawa, will bless and dedicate the church.

The structure is 100 feet long, 25 feet wide and 40 feet high. It seats 400 persons. At the front of the church is a 15-foot wooden cross, at the rear a small belfry. The bell, which will be blessed Sunday, has not yet been installed.

CONVICTED OF ASSAULT ON PTE. ROBERT ROSS

Orangeville, Otn., Oct. 4 (CP).—Melville McKibbon of Orangeville was convicted of assaulting Pte. Robert Ross of the 48th Highlanders and Elmer McKibbon was convicted of being accessory when they appeared in court here yesterday. They were remanded for sentence until Oct. 10.

Evidence was given that Ross was waiting in Orangeville for transportation to Camp Borden when the McKibbon brothers insulted him and then attacked him. Taken to jail after the assault, the McKibbons were searched and police allege a counterfeit national registration card was found in Elmer's shoe. He faces two charges under the national registration regulations.

'SWINGING LEAD' NOT CONSPICUOUS AT SUMMER CAMP

Surest Way to Avoid Extra Work is to be Born With Name Starting With Z

KEEP UP DRILL

By Gillis Purcell Canadian Press Staff Writer.

Toronto, Oct. 5 (CP)—Canada's Class of 1918-1919 will pick up a smattering of military essentials in the 30 days of camp life starting next week—but there won't be time to become adept at swinging the lead. It takes years of professional training to make an expert in that line.

The fine art of "soldiering"—the navy's word for work-shirking—is an inevitable by-product of almost any military training but reports from militia camps across the country indicate there was a minimum of buck-passing, kicking the gong and general unwillingness to do a fair share of the work at hand.

Except in the grease and grime of the cookhouse fatigue the summertime militia tent-camps saw next to no tendency to shirk. Hired kitchen staffs eliminate the cookhouse job in the heated hutments of this month's callups. So the innate inclination to rest instead of work will find some new outlet.

Other Requirements

The consensus of competent observers—privates all—is that the surest way to avoid extra work is to be born with a name starting with Z, for army selection is largely alphabetical. Next-best guarantee is not to be thin, bald or red-headed. It takes a Sergeant a fortnight to learn his men's names so "Slim," "Baldy," and "Red" do the non-routine jobs for the first two weeks.

The run-of-mine militiaman encounters a minimum of fatigue worry. If he keeps in step and can order arms without fracturing a toe he'll miss the awkward squad and won't top the list for the chore-call. If he's weak in his drill his safest spot is at the middle of his platoon's centre rank—and no one will ever remember his name.

Did Not Shirk Fatigue

Analysis of militia-camp training agree the civilian army snapped to its extra fatigue duties with a fatalistic will. They conferred quick-thinking honors on those who snapped acceptance on unexpected calls for messengers "into town" or for duty on the wood-pile, the most philosophically congenial of all fatigues.

The problem of learning the militia-camp syllabus without becoming an expert at culinary and sanitary tasks resolves itself into knowing when to jump at a job. If you keep jumping at the wrong job, you're liable to end up a Corporal.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Zanzibar"

A fantastic and little known provision of the Versailles Treaty is the basis for Universal's adventure drama, "Zanzibar," which comes to the Capitol theatre, with Lola Lane, James Craig and Eduardo Cianelli in the feature roles.

Lifted intact from the world famous document, the provision commanded that the sacred skull of an African Sultan which was removed from German East Africa be turned over to the British Government.

Logical Plot

Described as an ideal theme for thrilling action drama, the story presents Miss Lane as a noted woman explorer seeking to find the skull in Africa and restore the religious symbol to its rightful tribe and bring an end to savage uprisings

Although in real life the skull has never been found, the film shows it being located by Miss Lane with the help of Craig, who portrays a young American adventurer. Ciannelli has the role of a foreign spy, and others in the cast include Tom Fadden, Henry Victor, Samuel S. Hinds and Clarence Muse.

Action highlights in the picture include battles between whites and natives, adventures among wild animals in the jungle, a big game hunt and the escape of the whites as a volcano erupts and destroys a native village. The picture was directed by Harold Schuster.

On the same programme Noel Coward's "Private Loves" starring Norma Shearer and Robert Montgomery also showing the new Canada Carries on Series "Wings of Youth," showing Canadian airfields coast to coast and its personal.

AT THE McCARTHY

"Three Faces West"

One of the finest screen productions of the season, "Three Faces West," co-starring lovely Sigrid Gurie, John Wayne and Charles Coburn, will open next at the McCarthy theatre.

On the same program will be presented a funny Popeye comedy "Nurse Mates" also a technicolor musical "The Royal Rodeo" and latest McCarthy Fox News events.

"I Was a Captive of Nazi Germany"

90 minutes of the most outspoken and impressive blasts against Dictatorship ever filmed, is now being shown on the McCarthy theatre screen, in the sensational film hit of the year, "I Was a Captive of Nazi Germany." Do not miss it. The Three Stooges, America's funniest comedians in their newest comedy-howl "Calling All Curs" also a new chapter of "Terry and the Pirates" complete this program, which if you attend early, you will want to twice.

AT THE BELLE

"The Return of Frank James"

Filmed in spectacular technicolor, the exciting and stirring climax to the daring exploits of the world's most famous outlaws comes to the screen of the Belle Theatre in the 20th Century-Fox production, "The Return of Frank James."

The millions of moviegoers who thrilled to last year's "Jesse James" will find this new Darryl F. Zanuck production even more colorful and action-packed. These same millions will also find many familiar faces in the cast, for "Jesse James" players fill most of the important roles.

Henry Fonda, who created the part of Frank James, Jesse's grim older brother, is cast in the title role. Others in the production who were also featured in "Jesse James" include Henry Hull, John Carradine, J. Edward Bromberg, Donald Meek, Ernest Whitman, Charles Tannen and George Chandler.

The cast is completed by Gene Tierney and Jackie Cooper, who are featured, and such popular favorites as Eddie Collins and George Barbier.

The story of "The Return of Frank James," is the story of Frank's determination to avenge the cowardly murder of his brother Jesse, shot in the back by the traitorous Ford brothers. Railroad money paid the Fords, and a gubernatorial pardon set the Fords free after a jury had convicted them, so Frank realizes the only way he can revenge Jesse is to return to outlawry.

Always maintaining a high pitch of excitment, the picture then follows Frank all over the lawless west, with tremendously stirring scenes of robbery, murder, gunfights, man-hunts, train hold-ups, escape and pursuit.

Too, there are scenes of gentle romance. In Denver Frank meets and falls in love with Eleanor Stone, played by Gene Tierney. The girl perceives Frank's real character and attempts to persuade him to give himself up.

The picture's climax is tense and dramatic—as Frank at long last comes face to face with Bob Ford.

Three Junior Features

An excellent array of short treats has been assembled for exhibition on the same program including the latest of the Canada Carries On series, "Wings of Youth" revealing the Commonwealth Air Training schemes—35,000 skilled fliers a year, Canada's answer to warfare against women and children—airfields from coast to coast.

Walt Disney's latest color cartoon, "Mr. Duck Steps Out" and the popular Belle newsreel will also be exhibited.

Little Benny's Note Book

Sattiday afternoon I was taking a walk with pop, and we came to a whole crowd of people listening to one man talking in the middle, saying, Now I want you fokes to give a minute's thought to a subject that's been causing a lot of discussion and argument. I'm referring to the subject of conscription. You all know what that means. It means the right of your government to reach into your home and take your sons and put them into soldiers uniforms without so much as a by your leave or if you please and make them bare arms for their country and shoot and be snot at. It sounds terrible, fokes, I admit it sounds terrible, but in a time of crisis it's no more than right and just, he said.

By gollies there's more truth than fiction in that, pop said, and the man next to him said, I agree with every silliable, when a soldier's got to go he's got to go.

Being a fat man with a cigar, and the man in the middle kept on talking, saying, Fokes, when the common enemy is at the gates, our first duty is self preservation and the government is only helping us to do our duty.

He's saying it, all right, pop said, and the fat man said, He's correct every inch of the way, and the man in the middle said, Well now, fokes, there is a more dangerous enemy than Hitler at our gates, and the enemy I refer to is the insidious beast tobacco, and our government owes it to itself and to us to reach in and pluck it from our mist.

The man's a blithering idiot, pop said, and the fat man said, There's too many ignorant people going around loose shooting off their mouths, that's a whole trouble with modern conditions.

I'm going to make this crowd smaller by every means in my power, pop said.

Meaning himself and me, and we kept on going and so did the fat man.

Bomb Splinters From Battle of Britain

By DOUGLAS AMARON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Members of a number of London business houses have volunteered to stay on duty during the night to guard against fire. A janitor stumbled over a slumbering form in a corner one morning and roused the sleeper by tickling his feet—and got the shock of his life when he found he had wakened one of the firm's directors.

Firemen digging among the wreckage of a house in the London area heard a cry from the other side of the wall:

"Get this 'so-and-so' thing off my foot."

They found a parrot.

W. R. Morris, who lives in a south-west London suburb, has reason to believe the Nazis are singling him out for special attention. These things happened to him in a week:

A time bomb exploded outside his office, showering him with debris.

An incendiary bomb dropped in the doorway of the office the next day, damaging the woodwork.

A high-explosive bomb wrecked his home while he was in a shelter.

A.R.P. wardens say most men, roused by sirens that wail in the night, come to the shelters dressed but the women, more often than not, just throw a coat or dressing gown over their night clothes. As a result there is a greater demand for women's clothes among evacuees than for men's. The women's volunteer services advise the women to keep a suitcase of clothes beside their beds and when the sirens sound to take it with them.

WEDDINGS

BELANGER—DI COLA

St. John's church, Perth, was the setting for an early Autumn wedding at 9 a.m., Saturday, September 28, when Miss Jean Di Cola, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Di Cola of Perth, became the bride of Lieutenant Fidele Belanger, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Belanger of Quebec City.

Rev. Dean Meagher performed the ceremony during which solos were effectively rendered by John R. McPharlan, brother-in-law of the bride; also a very beautiful duet was rendered by Sister Mary Carmel Theresa and Mr. McPharlan. Autumn flowers were used to decorate the church for the occasion.

The bride was given in marriage by her father and was attended by her college friend, Miss Madeline Noah, Corner Brook, Nfld., as maid of honor; Miss Mary Kehoe and Miss Delphine Di Cola, sister of the bride, as brideamaids; little Theresa McPharlan, niece of the bride, Stanleyville, was flower girl. Fernand La Casse, University of Toronto, was best man and the ushers were Martin Doyle of Perth and R. John Conway of Toronto.

The bride wore a Parisian model of fine net over soft satin, fashioned in a full length skirt, designed with long sleeves and a V-shaped neck. Her finger length veil was held in place by a halo of net appliqued with tiny white flowers and caught into a cap-like effect, artistically decorated with orange blossoms. She carried white Calla lilies, maiden hair fern and baby's breath.

The maid of honor wore a gown of peach chiffon with accordion pleats. Her hat was a heart shaped halo made of fine velvet, delicately covered with a tulle veil. The bridesmaids chose floor length gowns of blue and coral chiffon crepe. They wore matching turbans with shoulder length veils. The flower girl wore a long gown of blue taffeta covered with pink net, and a polka shaped hat to match, and carried a nosegay of roses. The three attendants carried nosegays of Talisman roses, maiden hair fern and baby breath.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the Vanity Fair tea room where the table was beautifully decorated with American Beauty roses. There were about thirty-five guests present. As they entered the dining hall they were received by Mrs. James Di Cola, mother of the bride, gowned in a black brocade crepe dress with matching hat and accessories. Miss Nina Di Cola, Belleville, sister of the bride, assisted her mother in receiving and was gowned in a Bishop Purple dress with black accessories. Many toasts were given to the bridal couple during the dinner and were responded to very graciously.

The bride attended Loretto College, Toronto, and the groom is a graduate of Laval College, Quebec, and Osgoode Hall, Toronto.

Mr. and Mrs. Belanger left on Sunday afternoon for Quebec City via Montreal amid showers of confetti and good wishes from all their friends. The bride's bouquet was caught by her sister Delphine.

The bride travelled in a dark suit trimmed with grey fur and matching accessories.

They will take up residence in Quebec City for the present.

The bride was the recipient of many useful gifts and substantial cheques.

For Sunday, October 6

SUNDAY'S horoscope is propitious for affairs of church and state and for educational, cultural and legal aspirations. Otherwise there seem to be deep under-currents, with pitfalls, snares, schemes and all manner of subtleties and treacheries to cope with by vigilance, shrewdness and correspondent sauvity Be wise with funds and wary with signatures.

Those whose birthday it is may enjoy some legal, professional, cultural or spiritual benefits during the year. But generally there are signs of deep-laid plots, schemes, treacheries, intrigues and duplicities calling for similar subtlety and craft to cope with But in this be careful not to overdo or to be dragged in deeper into confusion and betrayal. Be alert to all machinations, safeguard funds and affix signatures with much scrutiny.

A child born on this day may have many keen talents, deep insight and probably curious "hunches" or intuitive guidance. But it should not fall into false security and qestionable entanglements by such faculties.

For Monday, October 7

Monday's astrological forecast is for an exceptionally lively and happy day in all concerning domestic, social, artistic and affectional relations. The latter particularly promises unusual interest, since frequently this aspect bespeaks courtship and marriage of most felicitious aspect. However, this high state of excitement and anticipation should not be negatived by petty setbacks and annoyances nor married by impetuosity or other rash action. It is a day for youth to be joyous.

Those whose birthday it is may anticipate a most delightful year in the private relations—artistic, social, domestic and particlarly in the emotional life. There is prospect of courtship or marriage of most felicitious and gratifying phase, although even this might be jeopardized by rash, hasty and tumultuous conduct. Refrain from sullen and impetuous acts should certain delays, obstacles or excess outlays and funds arise. These are trivial beside the joys indicated.

A child born on this day may be exceedingly clever and versatile, with much intellectual and artistic ability. It should make a brilliant success in any of the professions, as its creative gifts are supplemented by fine executive and organizing faculties.

Getting On With New Neighbors

By Garry Cleveland Myers, Ph.D.

When the family move, new problems face the growing children over three or four, especially those of school age. For the lad between six and ten or twelve, adjustment to the other children of the neighborhood may prove a serious ordeal. His courage will be tried. If he is able to stand in his own defense with his fists most of his problems will have ended. On the other hand, if he ranks high in many play skills, excells in craftsmanship and creative fun, he may be able to win a comfortable place without a test by physical combat.

Handling Bullies

His parents will make it easier for him if they will welcome the children of the neighborhood to the premises and guide them in satisfying activities there, making clear that a few rules must be observed. These wise parents will win the respect of the children and their parents of the neighborhood. Especially will they win the good graces of the bullies of this neighborhood. To this end the parents will be careful not to rebuke these roughnecks on the neighborhood playground. Rather these parents will find ways to hire one or two of the gang leaders to run some errands and to praise them honestly in the presence of their own parents.

There will be the new bullies at school and on the way to it. Fortunate your child if he learns not to fear them. Your daughter will have similar experiences, for there are girl bullies as well as boy bullies; and girls must learn to get along with the boys as well as with other girls.

Entering a new school, even in the same city, will require the learning of many new ways and new methods of school work. When your child moves from country or village to city or vice versa the adjustments to be made will be big.

Be Tactful

Be careful not to compare the new neighborhood and school unfavorably with the old one. Try to induce your child also to be cautious in this respect. Rather he and you should look for the superior items in the new setting and let others know you have observed them. We like people, you see, who make us feel that where we live, and what we have and do, are worth while. Other people like us for a similar reason. We and our children will get on best in a new school and community as we and our children find ways of making our new neighbors, teachers and friends like us.

You might find some good suggestions in my booklet, Learning to be Likable, which I trust is in your public library. If you would like to have a list of books on getting along with other people, cultivating good personality and good mental health, write me at 235 East 45th Street, N. Y. Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

The bride's dilemmas concerning her first attempts at housekeeping have furnished many a jokesmith with material.

In other days, when daughters remained under the parental roof oftener than they do today, their housekeeping mistakes were fewer. They saw how mother did it, and oftener than now they did it themselves. There was an exchange of recipes among neighbors for substantials and delicacies. And pretty nearly everyone made a serious business of housekeeping.

But today, when daughter Dorinda closes her desk at the office, gets married over the weekend and starts housekeeping in a tiny flat, she is more perturbed about the length of time it takes to cook a roast than she ever was about adding up a column of figures or turning out the boss' letters faultlessly from her transcribed notes.

This letter, for instance:

"Dear Miss Fairfax:

"We were an old-fashioned family, eight strong — father, mother and six children. I got a job as soon as I graduated from business college and never thought much about the excellent meals that appeared on the family table and how they got there.

"My mother was a perfect housekeeper, never made any fuss or flurry. Meals, house-cleaning, laundry work came and went like a wound clock. I supposed it would be that way in our little flat when I married Jim. But it isn't.

"I have three nice new shiny cookbooks, but my refrigerator has too many leftovers. I cook too much. And my two-room kitchen and bath apartment is much more difficult to keep in order than my late boss' correspondence and the bookkeeping I did on the side.

"I'd like the name of a good reliable cook-book for a family of two. When I ask mother about these things, I become the subject of family jokes, and I'm getting tired of being the butt of their witticisms.

Bride."

There's an excellent cookbook "Cooking for Two", by Janet Hill, which you might consult at the public library and see if it meets your requirements.

Having kept books, it should not be difficult for you to divide mathematically any cooking recipe so that it will be proportionally enough for two. All newspapers and magazines today have good recipes. Try out some of the simpler ones in your leisure hours.

GOOD MANNERS

MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

Entrance Hall Indicates Character of Home

The ideal entrance hall—one we love to go into and don't like to leave—should tacitly indicate, "We are home-loving people here, and we welcome you." It should be well-groomed and in its furnishings and in its pleasant manners, it should have a gracious personality.

The rooms beyond the entrance hall are furnished for the family needs. But an entrance hall, while it should be adequately equipped for the needs of the family, should more especially be considered for the convenience of the guests. This does not mean that it should be cluttered with furnishings. The effect should be one of spaciousness rather than a space crowded with furnishings that have no reason for being there.

If there is an entrance hall closet, good. But whether or not there is, we need a table of some kind for a guest's hat or purse or gloves, perhaps for a card tray. If possible, the table should have simple lines. Instead of a table, there might be an interesting chest with convenient drawers. This table or chest may hold a good-looking lamp which sheds its light of welcome. And there may be a telephone on it, for convenient use for the family and for guests.

Over the table should be a mirror. For a small amount, less perhaps than you pay for a framed mirror, you can have a generous-sized piece of mirror inset above the table or attached to the wall. This will achieve the effect of greater space and additional lustre.

If the entrance hall is dark, as entrance halls often are, use a livening color of paint to make it more cheerful, or paper it with an attractive wallpaper.

Appropriate Reply

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

My employer is out of town a great deal. He is in the habit of praising my work when he returns. I am never quite sure what I should say in response. For instance, the other day, he said, "I want you to know, Miss Smith, that I certainly appreciate the way you worked while I was away."

What do you think would be an appropriate reply for me to make to this appreciation? M. S.

It is a delight to have you write me that your employer appreciates your good work. Employers are so often caught in the rush of work that they forget to comment on the cooperation of their employees.

Here are some suggestions that will show your appreciation: "Thank you very much, Mr. Worth. It is very kind of you to tell me," or "Thank you. I appreciate very much your telling me," or "Thank you. I am so happy and proud that my work pleased you. I tried very hard to do what I thought you would wish to have done."

Is Gift Necessary?

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Is it necessary to give a gift when one is invited to the church ceremony only?

W.W.T.

If you know there is to be a reception, and you are invited to the church ceremony only, this would mean that you are not a very close friend of the bride or of the couple; therefore it is not necessary for you to send a gift. Usually, if we are invited to the wedding reception, we do send a gift. If we are invited only to the ceremony and there is to be a reception, we need not send a gift.

As a matter of fact, no rule or regulation can be established about the propriety of when to send a wedding gift. As in the case of gifts for any other occasion, we naturally send a present if we wish to, and don't if we don't wish to. This is the only logical answer.

Winning a Child's Confidence

By Garry Cleveland Myers, Ph.D.

When your child began to go to school, you realized that he would be away from you a great deal. You still desired to control him and to guide his conduct. Naturally you commanded him to do or not to do many things while at school and on the way. Just as naturally you would check on him by questioning him, to find out how well he had obeyed. For example, you told him not to go into the "sweet" store near the school and not to buy candy for lunch but to choose milk and vegetables. Later you tried to find out if he had obeyed.

Yet, as a rule, you had no way of knowing how accurately he answered your questions. Recalling your own childhood experience, you can be pretty sure he tended to grow practical and to answer in safe ways—to lie in short. With increased experience at meeting with rebuke and punishment when he reported accurately and escaping such penalties when he was more "practical," he easily may have grown very skilful at lying—you being the chief agent in teaching him to do so.

Third Degree

You meet a similar problem when your son or daughter begins going out at night. Eager that their conduct while away shall measure up to your standards, you are prone to command them before they leave concerning their behavior while they will be away; then on their return, to put them on the witness stand. Before long you may suspect they are lying at times and you may try to force them to acknowledge having done so, tempting them further in deceit, therefore. Moreover, you may find them telling little or nothing of their experience away from home except what you wrench from them.

If, my fellow parent, you will think carefully through these matters, you will conclude with me that it hardly can be wise to command a child in your absence. Then you will find no reason to hold inquisitions which further cultivate deceit.

A better way is to say to the school child, for example, "I hope you will not go into that store," or, "I wish you would select milk and vegetables for lunch," and let it go at that.

Thinning Confidence

Also as your boy or girl leaves home for the evening, it will be better merely to suggest occasionally that you hope for a perfect behavior score. If you wait up for him it will be to welcome him and enjoy the account of a good time, not to hold an inquisition.

Even when your child volunteers information about experiences away from home you will be careful not to condemn or rebuke. Winning youth's confidence and willingness to measure up to your standards in your absence is a fine art worth cultivating. We best control our children when absent by cultivating the kind of attitude and habits while they are with us which we wish them to have while away from us.

DR. DAFOE'S COLUMN on the Quintuplets and the Care of Your Children

Bowel Control

As stated in the discussion of bowel control here yesterday, the basis of starting training at one month of age is to take advantage of the instinctive rhythm of the bowel. You take child a few minutes before the usual schedule for the movement, remove the diaper, and hold him over an ordinary chamber.

If the child is very young, of course he cannot sit up there by himself, so the mother must hold the chamber on her knee, and support the infant's head and back with her chest. With her left hand she should gently massage the abdomen, moving the hand slowly up the right side to the ribs, across and down the left side. The large bowel is in this area, and this massaging encourages the movement.

I know one mother who has had remarkable success teaching her babies bowel control. She has another little trick which works wonders. She always accompanies this massaging with some simple sound which the baby will eventually associate in his mind with what he is trying to do. We found, for instance, that the Quins responded very quickly to a grunting sound like "ugh, ugh". It isn't long before the child will learn to make this sound every time he feels a bowel movement coming on. He gives you warning.

But don't expect a baby to get the idea after a couple of days, particularly if there has been a month or two during which he exercised no control at all and acquired a lot of bad habits.

A mother may have to hold the baby on the chamber for five minutes. Now, I know that many mothers have a house to run, and other children to attend to, and will feel that they have no time to give so much attention to this one function. Just remember, that in the long run, teaching bowel control is going to save you time. And what is more, you are teaching your child a good habit, and it can be the first step in a long series of good habits. It is one of the early steps on the positive side of your child's training.

In teaching the small baby regularity of bowel movement, the mother shouldn't hold the child on the chamber too long. If he doesn't respond after a few minutes, it is advisable to insert a glycerine suppository into the rectum. If you have no suppositories, a small piece of soap, an inch and a half long and the size of a lead pencil, will do just as well. Remember, however not to do this too often, or it will become a habit.

When your child responds to your efforts, and begins to show that he has learned his lesson, show him how pleased you are. Children love appreciation, and will strive for it for all they are worth.

All ready to add charm to an important outfit is a new black antelope bag, a beautifully shirred under-arm pouch, the drapery drawn to the centre to meet a mirror set in a gilt baroque frame.

IT WILL GET COLD and you'll be glad to climb into a warm housecoat. A beauty is of heaven blue fine flannel, zipped down the bodice front and at the side of the skirt. Worn with a broad silver and gilt nail-studded belt.

GO WALKING in a smart coat. Grand for general daytime wear is a slim coat of beige wool with full-length front panel of leopard. Beige antelope hat with leopard edging.

Walk to Keep Young

By HELEN FOLLETT

Keep active, woman, keep alert, on your toes! The light step of youth is something to which every woman past forty should cling with dear life. Soon as a sister starts to plod along heavily she is in slow moving traffic. Her gay days may not be over, but she won't be marching in the beauty parade.

A brisk walk every day is recommended. Do we see lifted eye brows? Many of them. With the old family car standing at the door, why hoof it? To keep the body in form, my dears, to give vitality to muscles, to make the blood streams hustle and rustle, to help the digestive organs to do their work.

When walking point toes straight ahead and walk with a springing step. Lift the chest, keep the head balanced, the backbone poised with a neat inward curve at the waistline, the abdomen flat. Don't loiter. Sauntering is not exercise, it is just a waste of time.

Women who have few activities, who find life without zest, will have a brighter viewpoint if they'll get out each day, clip off three miles, maybe five. Walking is refreshing to the mind and spirit. If this idea does not appeal to you, we'll give you a scare. If you never walk, always motor, there's a chance of acquiring the limousine figure, which is not streamlined.

Neck wrinkled? Try a vibratory treatment. You don't need a vibrator; you do it with your own fair fingers.

Place the thumbs of both hands on your collar bones, fingers up under the chin and make them quiver from side to side. Before starting this treatment palm in a heavy massage cream. Follow along with up and down strokes with the finger tips and a brisk patting and slapping.

While the cream remains on frisk an ice cube over the surface of the skin. Remove the cream with a moist cloth, fluff on borated talcum. A good treatment for discolored skin.

CHECKERBOARD LOVE

A First-Run McClure Serial

By Joseph McCord

CHAPTER 1

Audrey Swan had assumed an undignified pose for a young woman of two and twenty summers. Even if there were no one to see and she was partially screened by the trailing branches of a huge willow. She lay flat on her stomach with her sandaled feet aloft, blue slacks tumbling to her knees and exposing a pair of slim bare legs. Her determined little chin was almost touching the limpid pool under a bank of Briar Creek and her right arm was immersed in it very nearly to the shoulder.

"A swell break for the fish!" jibed a drawling voice from across the stream. "Thought I'd taught you better."

Audrey scrambled into a sitting position. "Oh!" was her startled ejaculation. Then a delighted, "Hi-ya, Jeff!" With that cordial greeting, she smiled. Her nose quivered. It had a ridiculous fashion of doing that when registering pleasure, in addition to being small and slightly turned up.

Meanwhile, her grinning critic has sauntered down to the water's edge. A tall young man he was, with a brown face and hair that shone like brass as the sunlight bathed it. His hands were thrust in the pockets of a garishly checked green jacket. A shirt of the same color lay open at the throat. White ducks somewhat rumpled and a pair of leather sandals made up the rest of his informal attire. "Gave you a ring at the house," he volunteered, "but your mother thought you'd gone for a walk. Right away I figured you'd be mooning at the old trysting place. I must be psychic that way."

"That's what you think," Audrey retorted. "I came out here to read where it's cool . . . just stopped to chivvy a couple of minnows. I didn't even know you were back. Aren't you coming across?"

"Definitely. If I have to swim. Our tree still in service?"

"I wouldn't know. I suppose so." There was a sudden pensive expression in the girl's hazel eyes as she watched Jeffrey Castle turn and stride along the bank. A moment later she glimpsed his checked jacket through the foliage as he picked his way across a fallen tree trunk that long had done service for a bridge. Almost at once he came up and dropped down cross-legged in front of her, dark eyes alight with pleasure.

"Gee, it's good to see you. Cygie. You're sweeter than ever. Maybe I should clasp your hand . . . been a long time, you know."

"Yes. It has. But I think it would look pretty stupid to sit in a pasture shaking hands."

"One up on me as usual." Jeffrey lurched swiftly to his knees and before Audrey realized his design, drew her to him and kissed her. "You did hint," he accused amiably as he felt her stiffen resentfully in his embrace.

"I did not!"

"Don't let's argue, darling. It's too warm and we've too much to talk about," he soothed. "I must have kissed you before. The sensation is faintly familiar."

"At kid parties. When we didn't know any better."

"Well, I'm educated now. And travel does broaden one."

"So it seems. How's Europe?"

"Didn't you get my cards?"

"Rather. They weren't exactly informative." Audrey watched her companion speculatively as he stubbed his cigarette and tossed the butt into the water. When he gave no indication of further conversation, she ventured: "Everybody's expecting that you'll go into your father's office. It will be nice for both of you."

"Yeah?" There was a cynical look in Jeff's brown eyes. "Between pals, Cygie, I'm on a spot. You know the old gentleman gives most of his professional time to the circuit. Of course there's always some practice drifting into the office — routine stuff from old clients and whatnot. But Miss Annie can do the job a heap better. In fact, I doubt if I know enough law to win her confidence."

Audrey was forced to smile at that conceit and the picture it brought to mind, of elderly Anna Dodds who had been in Judge George Castles office almost as long as anybody could remember. Miss Annie, with the little gray bun on the nape of her thin neck, her face all the more severe by reason of the heavy-rimmed spectacles on a ribbon tether that rode crookedly astride her patrician nose. But Jeff was not far from right when he compared his newly acquired legal lore with Miss Annie's store; everybody said that she could have passed the State Bar long ago had she cared to.

"As a matter of fact," Jeff continued moodily, "I don't get much steamed up over the law. I suppose it's a good enough foundation."

"For what?"

Before he could answer a feminine voice came floating across the creek. "Oh, Mr. Jeff, please!" The call came from a young woman in a maid's cap and white ruffled apron.

"What is it, Christine?"

"The operator has been trying to get you, sir. It is a long-distance call."

"O. K. Be there in a minute. Botheration," he grumbled as he got to his feet.

Audrey was hugging her knees, staring at the trim maid strolling back leisurely toward the Castle house.

"What was it you said about the old trysting place?" she inquired dreamily.

"Nothing," Jeff growled. "I say, how about a little drive after dinner?"

"I don't believe I can . . . this evening."

"Fine," he grinned. "I'll come for you at eight." With that, he started in the direction of the bridge.

Audrey continued to sit motionless, thinking. It was good to see Jeff again. Almost two years since he had been back home, his last year in college followed by another doing Europe in the grand manner. That's what it was to be the only child of wealthy parents, instead of the one child of moderate circumstances. Jeff seemed to have changed very little, but Audrey had felt a vague disappointment. His plans for her indicated that he expected the two of them to drift into the old intimacy of long-ago vacations. Apparently he didn't realize that things were different now.

The Swans' rambling old house stood on a sixty-acre tract that once had been a portion of the Castle land, separated now by the winding reaches of Briar Creek. Judge Castle was a wealthy man in his own right and he had married money. Clipped hedgerows enclosed the formal gardens with their fountains and occasional pieces of statuary.

Young Jeffrey Castle was nine—Audrey's senior by less than a year—when he first chanced to see the "new girl" from the next house. He was poling a homemade raft on the creek and an admiring audience was not to be ignored, even though it was a skinny girl appraising him with critical eyes. With the freemasonry of children they quickly exchanged names and sufficient history to get down to the more serious business of playing. Audrey proved to be a pleasant discovery. She was active and muscular, could throw a ball or hurl a stone with far greater accuracy than Jeffery and could ride his restive pony at top speed without the benefit of saddle or stirrup.

During those first years Jeffrey did not attend school but had a tutor, a serious young man working for a university degree. He early reported to his employers that the child from next door was an eminently safe companion for their son, and chaperoned the pair as little as possible.

In summer the two children roamed the fields and woods at will or, on rainy days, amused themselves in Jeff's combined playroom and shop. Audrey's passion for books was another bond and the two friends spent many an hour in the Judge's library—when he was absent—lying prone on the big bearskin rug before a crackling fire — heads together over some illustrated volume, or reading apart as their fancies dictated. It was in one of these bookish sessions that Jeff chanced to discover that a young swan was a cygnat. From that day, Audrey was "Cygie". Today, it had been strangely pleasant to hear Jeff use the old name so naturally.

Jeff's first remark, after he had settled Audrey comfortably in his low-seated roadster and started the motor, was a complacent: "Knew you wouldn't let me down. Where to, by way of celebrating the stranger's return?" So like him to take things for granted.

"How about the Ridge?" Audrey was prepared for that one. It meant a quick turning off, no parading through town. "It's still light enough to enjoy the view, I think."

Jeffrey said no more until he pointed the long hood of his car into the straight stretch leading to the Ridge, the highest point in the vicinity, commanding a far-flung view in every direction. Cutting down his speed to—for him—a moderate rate, he asked abruptly: "Listen, girl friend, did I ever make love to you in any of my absent-minded moments?"

"It got by me if you did," was the cautious reply. "Why?"

"Merely mulling over what you said this afternoon. Sounded as if I was a rejected suitor or some such ....that you were trying to let me down easily. We've been pals for so long that I couldn't quite make myself believe you were trying to tell me that we were washed up. That wasn't your idea by any chance, was it?"

Audrey drew a long breath. If she only could say it the right way. "It's like this Jeff, you're not here on vacation this time. You'll have to carry on as one of the Castles. It's a putrid thing to say, but I'm not sticking out my neck. And it's not altogether on my account....if you know what I mean."

"I know what you think you mean," Jeff considered. "It's the bunk."

"That's sweet of you. But you know better. Everybody's been used to seeing us pal around together as kids. But now they'll start rubbing their hands together. I've been around here more than you have. I know."

"Yeah? Now that you bring it up, I must have read a heart-twister like that. Maybe it was in a movie. Something about a wistful little girl who never sniffles, lives on the wrong side of the tracks, and she comes from.."

"Poor but honest parents," Audrey helped.

"Poor but honest parents," Jeff repeated dutifully. "Of course she isn't good enough for the boy's folks who are tottering around proudly under a load of jack, most of which they never earned. Slush is right! Candidly, Cygia, you make me sick."

"Sorry. But you get the idea. Only the girl doesn't apologize for her folks. Her dad's quite the nicest Britisher that ever showed off to the mainland. Just the same, he's horsy."

"So what?" Jeff said.

"Maybe it's the smell. You know as well as I do how it makes a lot of eyebrows go up Oh, I'm aware it would be perfectly all right if Dad owned a big racing stable and grabbed off the Derby and the Belmont Stakes so often that it bored him. But he's only a trainer....although he is a darned good one. And I'm sort of an exercise boy myself."

"You still make me sick, darling. You never were much good at dissembling. What's the man's name?"

"You wouldn't know him." Audrey's nose quivered the least bit. Jeff was staring at the shadowy road. Delivering the ultimatum had not been so difficult after all. That kiss on the creek bank had been more disconcerting than Audrey cared to admit, but apparently it hadn't meant anything.

"I got that phone call," he observed, quite as if he had expected Audrey to ask him about it.

"Did you?"

"Yes. A girl friend in the city. Maybe that will fit in with your new complex."

"I think it's splendid."

"Her name's Olive Cooper....nice femme. Met her in Switzerland. Travelling with her mother who's also a pleasant person. Odd, you know, but my itinerary sort of fitted in with theirs, so we saw quite a bit of each other. Naturally there were a good many little things I could do for them and they seemed to appreciate it no end."

"Of course they did." Audrey smiled to herself in the gloom. "You didn't have to build up such an elaborate defense. Of course you all came back on the same boat and of course they invited you to call."

"As a matter of fact, yes." Jeff grudged. "But I don't care for the way you keep saying 'of course'. Wasn't it all right?"

"Why, of course. Excuse it."

"You're a big help, Cygie, but I insist on finishing my story. I found we not only have a lot of mutual friends, but Dad has done considerable business with Olive's father. Well, I rounded up some folks on the way home for a little house party over this weekend. I thought it would be rather nice, after talking to mother, if...."

"If you gave Olive a call. I think so, too."

"Yeah? Well, I merely put the call through. Mother did the inviting. But Olive will be here Friday. So I'm counting on you."

"For what?"

"Dinner that evening," Jeff informed imperturbably. I want you to help me show Olive a good time. There will be a couple of other girls in the bunch, but one's married and the other might as well be, and they'll have their destinies along. So that leaves...."

"You," Audrey furnished before he could finish.

"That's right. Also a school pal.. Vic Quinn. You'll find him as comfortable as an old shoe. And you'll like Olive. She's keen on horses and is bringing her riding things."

Audrey sat motionless, staring silently at the glowing path picked out by the roadster's headlights. At length she said hesitatingly: "I guess you can't help being sweet, Jeff, but you do make me feel like a little rotter. The only excuse I can drag out is the one about being a woman. I know it's outmoded."

"Excuse? What the heck are you talking about now?"

"Your mother."

CHAPTER II.

Bringing Mrs. Castle's name into this discussion with Jeff had been even more difficult than Audrey Swan anticipated. It shouldn't have been necessary to remind Jeffrey that she hadn't been in his home for several years. And she could have told him that, on the rare occasions when she had encountered his mother in Parville, the lady from the big house on the hill had found it convenient not to recognize her young neighbor. At least Audrey thought so. But it wouldn't be very sporting to tell him about it. Instead, she waited a little tensely for the outburst she expected her remark to produce.

To her surprise, what she received was a mild: "I don't believe my trip abroad did you much good, Cygie. I've invited you to parties at my house before. This is my party and I'm asking you to be my guest. If you don't want to come or think you wouldn't have a good time. . . ."

"Oh, Jeff! Please . . ." Audrey caught his sleeve in a quick little gesture of contrition. "You know I didn't mean that! I'd love to come, of course. But don't you see?"

"Naturally not."

"But things are different now. They can't help being. It's beastly of me, I know, but you just did tell me that your mother . . ."

"Invited Olive," Jeff broke in sharply. "Sure she did. That's different. Mother never has met her and she's known you for years."

During the remainder of the drive Jeffrey was the perfect host. His keen sense of humor and whimsical fashion of recounting incidents proved so entertaining that his guest was genuinely regretful when she was returned to the dark and silent Swan home. The past hour had been so definitely like old times that Audrey had very nearly forgotten her resolve to establish a new and reserved footing for this companion who tucked her arm in his as they mounted the porch steps. It was a familiar part of their coming home ritual. The same as Jeff's releasing her at the door with a careless, "So long," or "Be seeing you".

Tonight, he dropped her arm but waited long enough for a quiet reminder. "Your chair will be at the table Friday night. In case it rains, I'll send the car. If you let me down; I'll know . . ."

"I won't, Jeff."

And that was that. Rather an abject surrender and with no assurance that the dinner party wouldn't be pretty much of an ordeal, in spite of Jeff's lofty attitude. That discomfiture seemed to pursue Audrey throughout the hours of a restless night and its shadow went with her to the breakfast table. Her father's "Morning, Audrey", was offered without an upward glance.

Anthony Swan was as English as Westminster, to use a frequent expression of his daughter. A slight man with a fresh complexion and keen blue eyes. His curling hair was touched with gray and receded a trifle at the temples, dropping on his cheeks in closely cropped sideburns. There was something in his general trimness that suggested horses, even without the confirmation of the gold horseshoe on his tie pin. Had one looked under the table, it would have been with an expectation of seeing riding boots. Nor would one have been disappointed.

The Swan acreage constituted a miniature stock farm with its well-painted stables and sheds, trim white fences everywhere, a half-mile exercise track. Anthony had come to the States as a racing trainer of some reputation, but had left the tracks a dozen years before to establish a business of his own. He bred a limited number of fine saddle animals, bought and sold others, stabled and trained horses for patrons as well as being a riding master whose services were much in demand. Martha, his wife, was a New Englander. A mild-mannered but efficient little person and much the better manager of the two.

"Your mother says Mr. Jeffrey is home," Anthony offered, lifting his paper so that Audrey might have the coffee pot. "How is the lad?"

"Looks very fit."

There was the slightest hint of irritation in the hazel eyes watching the clear brown stream filling the cup. If only dad could get away from that habit of saying "Mr. Jeffrey". This morning, it sounded . . . well, just a trifle menial.

"He must have been across close to a year," Anthony went on, still eyeing his paper. "Parville will seem small to him, I wouldn't doubt."

Audrey inserted a slice of bread in the toaster and closed it with an unnecessary clash.

Do you want some work this morning?" Anthony asked.

"Doing what?"

"Why. . . ." Anthony swallowed the last of his coffee and folded the newspaper. "One of the judge's stablemen came over last night with the brown mare we sold Mr. Jeffrey the last summer he was home. You remember Eileen?"

"What's the matter with her?"

"Not a thing in the world save she hasn't been ridden in a long time. Never by a woman, I take it."

"I get you. She's going to be ridden by a woman and you're supposed to guarantee that she'll take it without too much fuss." Audrey smiled wryly. "You don't care if your darling child breaks her neck finding out, do you? Eileen wasn't keen for her fences, if I remember."

"I've no fear for you on that mare or any other."

"Sure, dear, I was only fooling. Be glad to. I'll change and come down as soon as I've finished my toast and your supper."

As Anthony went out by way of the side porch, Martha Swan appeared from the kitchen. Immaculate in a fresh gingham house dress, she came to the table and sat down across from Audrey.

"Good morning, dear," was her greeting. "I believe I'll have another cup of coffee if there's any left. Is there?"

Audrey was glancing at the headlines of the paper. She reached for the pot and passed it to her mother without looking up. Mrs. Swan's clear brown eyes studied the girlish face closely before she observed: "I didn't hear you come in last night. Did you have a good ride?"

"Fine. It wasn't late . . . about ten-thirty, I imagine."

"I guess it seemed pretty much like old times to have Jeffrey drop in the way he used to. He'll be company for you this summer. You don't get out as much as a girl of your age should."

"Listen, mom . . . ." Audrey thoughtfully crumbled a bit of toast. "I don't expect to see so much of Jeff from now on. We'll always be good friends, but he's home to stay now, so far as I know. He won't be running in the way he used to in vacations."

"Maybe. But that isn't the reason you had in mind when you first spoke. I suppose I know what you mean."

"Of course you do, mom. Jeff would be the best looking thing in Parville even if he didn't have a nickel. He'll be a swell catch for somebody, but I certainly am not angling and I don't intend to have any of these Miss Prissies around here talking out of the corners of their mouths when I pass them."

"That sounds silly to me. But I do hope you'll be considerate and not do anything to hurt Jeffrey's feelings. He doesn't seem much more than a boy yet. And he has been mighty nice to you."

Audrey was in her room getting into her shirt and jodhpurs when she heard the telephone in the lower hall ring and, after an interval, her mother answering. The words, "Hold the line a minute, I'll call Audrey," brought the latter running down the stairs in her stocking feet.

"Who is it?" she asked guardedly, noticing that her mother's hand was pressed against the transmitter.

"I don't know. A woman . . . asked for Miss Swan."

Audrey nodded and put the receiver to her ear. She identified herself briefly, only to hear a "Thank you. Just one moment, please."

Then the voice of another woman —gracious, well-modulated. "This is Mrs. Castle speaking."

CHAPTER III.

Audrey barely suppressed a gasp of amazement when she realized that Jeffrey's mother was at the other end of the wire, but recovered her composure sufficiently to respond in what she hoped was a tone of pleased surprise: "Oh, yes! How are you, Mrs. Castle?"

"Quite well, thank you. I do hope you will pardon this very early call, but my secretary is starting for the city to attend to some matters for me and she wants to leave me with a clean slate. I am so utterly hopeless over details." Mrs. Castle laughed lightly at her predicament and Audrey responded with a polite murmur that might have signified anything.

"Perhaps you noticed in the papers that Jeffrey has returned from abroad," his mother continued. "It is rather short notice, but I am arranging a little house party this week-end to celebrate his homecoming. I am aware that this is dreadfully informal, but I want you to dine with us Friday evening, my dear. I was afraid you might have some other engagement if I delayed my invitation, and Jeffrey would be disappointed. May I count upon you then . . . at eight?"

Audrey never knew how she resisted the temptation to say that Jeff had already extended the invitation and that she had accepted. But something saved her, enabled her to respond with a proper: "I shall be delighted to come. Thank you so much."

"Thank you, my dear. Good-by!" The final syllable was highly-pitched, almost as if it were a question.

"Good-by." Audrey dropped the telephone in its cradle. "Well, the dirty double-crosser," she observed gently, unaware that her mother was just behind her.

"Audrey Swan! That was Mrs. Judge Castle, wasn't it? What do you mean?"

"Nothing, mom, I was speaking about . . . Jeff's horse."

"She invited you to something, didn't she?"

"Dinner on Friday."

"Well, for goodness' sake!"

"That puts it very concisely," her daughter approved grimly as she mounted the stairs for her boots. She was frowning deeply as she tugged at an ankle strap. It wasn't like Jeff to do such a thing. He must have asked his mother to extend that invitation this morning without telling her that he had already done so. No doubt he hoped it would soothe Audrey's feelings, after her little outburst the night before. But she could wish he had been more above board . . . in the matter of the horse, too. That Cooper woman either wasn't so much of a rider, or Jeff was afraid she might get hurt, mounted on a strange horse. His horse. But why didn't he say so? He might know that Audrey would be only to glad to favor him by introducing the mare to a woman.

Maybe Jeff's trip abroad hadn't done him so much good, either.

Audrey was convinced of it after an hour on Eileen's back. The mare went through her paces in a listlessly obliging fashion. She paid no attention whatever to traffic when her rider took her some distance along a busy pike.

"Quite the kitten," Audrey reported to her father when she slipped down from the saddle at the stable door. Anthony nodded agreement, chewing on a straw.

"I was watching you. I'll have somebody come and fetch her home. Don't bother with her again."

"Maybe she was keeping something from me. I hope she was." This last Audrey said to herself.

"Never fear."

Assured of Eileen's tractability, her rider had devoted considerable thought to the dinner party. The more deeply she considered the matter of dress, the more important it appeared and she went directly from the stables to find her mother. Here was something that must be talked over.

"I've been thinking about it since you went out," was Martha's pleasant reaction. "Do you know who will be there?"

"One wife, one fiancee and what it takes." Audrey counted off four fingers. "The new girl friend. Her name is Olive and, for some reason, it pleases me. And Jeff. Then there is an odd man whose name escapes me. Jeff said something about his being an old shoe which means, of course, that he's going to have me wished on him for the evening."

"They're all from the city, then."

"That was my impression."

"All right." Martha's lips were compressed a trifle. "You've plenty of time between now and Friday. You run up to the city and get yourself a dress. I have fifty dollars here in the house. I'll give it to you. You can manage the rest, I should think."

"Can I! Mom, you're the sweetest thing that ever happened to me!"

"Nonsense. You'd better go this afternoon."

The second forenoon after that found Audrey home again and in her room with a jumble of boxes, tissue paper, sheer stockings and slippers littering her usually immaculate bed. She had on the new dinner gown and was revolving slowly under the gaze of her mother's critical brown eyes. "I like it, Audrey," was the deliberate verdict.

The slender little figure before the long mirror presented an attractive picture in its billowy dotted swiss gown, white with red dots, the little jacket bound with grosgrain, a combination that was in effective contrast with the dark curls and the golden tone of Audrey's face and slim arms.

"You'll look as nice as any girl there," her mother conceded. "I wouldn't want you to wear anything extreme. That's what I call a lady-like dress."

* * *

Warm rain fell throughout Friday. After he had eaten his own dinner, Anthony offered to play chauffeur for his daughter.

"We'll wait until nearly eight," she decided. "Jeff said he would send for me if it was a bad night. We'll see if he comes across."

He did—twenty minutes before the appointed hour. "Dean is in town on an errand," Jeff explained over the telephone. "He has orders to pick you up and should be rolling in within the next five minutes, Cygie."

"That's fine. I . . . he's driving up now. I can see his lights."

"Good. We'll be seeing you."

In the dressing room at the Castle's, Audrey gave herself a critical inspection, applied powder and lipstick, pushed her curls into a final semblance of order. "God defend the right," she murmured, and moved sedately in the direction of the winding staircase. At the foot of the descent she paused and glanced at the scattered occupants of the brightly lighted drawing-room. Jeff saw her at once and strode forward with a delighted smile. He looked very handsome, Audrey thought, in his white dinner coat and black trousers, his yellow head smooth and shining.

"Bless your heart, darlin'!" he exclaimed. "You're a treat to these old eyes!" He caught at the arm of a young man standing near. "Vic, old son, meet the Pride of Parville! Miss Swan, Mr. Quinn, if I may. Your dinner partner, Vic, you lucky dog." He drew Audrey's arm through his and began the introductory rites in breezy style.

"Miss Swan, this sober, double-harness outfit is the Warrens. More specifically, Becky and Lee. Sounds like a college, doesn't it? Then this startled gazelle goes by the name of Rhoda Willis. This fidgeting male is her boy friend, as you might guess. He's Stephen Kean. If he doesn't seem as enthused over you as he should, it's because he's afraid . . . of Rhoda."

Audrey dutifully centered her attention upon each guest as presented, trying to associate the face and name for future reference and feeling certain that her face must be wearing a wooden smile. Most of all, she wanted to steal a glance at the far end of the long room where she was conscious several others were standing in a group. There was one she wished particularly to see. Jeff was saving Olive for the last, then . . . probably for effect. Now he had her arm again, was leading her forward. "Oh, Olive . . . please?"

A slender figure in a clinging black gown emerged from the almost total eclipse effected by the bulky form of Judge Castle. Audrey's first thought was, "Just like the pictures of the Duchess of Windsor!" Then she was conscious of white teeth flashing a friendly smile, of a slim hand outstretched in greeting. Of Jeff, beaming.

"Miss Swan . . . Mrs. Cooper."

CHAPTER IV.

For the space of a second, the shock of that introduction blurred the entire drawing-room scene for Audrey Swan.

MRS. Cooper!

It couldn't be. And yet. . . . Jeff certainly had called her that. But Mrs. Cooper, or whoever she was was saying things to Miss Swan. Saying that she had been so anxious to meet her, that Jeffrey had spoken so frequently about her. Gradually the haze cleared and Audrey found herself trying valiantly to warrant the enthusiastic account Jeff must have rendered.

But it was a relief to find Vic Quinn barging up alongside. Audrey felt better. Still more so at the touch of a hand on her arm and the booming voice of the Judge.

"Upon my word, if it isn't my little girl! Audrey, you've quite grown up . . . and into a very winsome young lady. Eh, Louise?"

"Yes, indeed!" Mrs. Castle's hand, plump and beringed, appeared at a formal elevation. "So pleased to have you here, my dear."

The hostess' next remark was addressed to Mr. Quinn, the butler having appeared in the door with an announcement that dinner was served. "Victor, dear, you are taking Miss Swan in. I shall depend upon you to see that she is nicely taken care of."

"To the death," that young man promised gravely, offering his arm. By the time she was seated, Audrey reached the conclusion that she quite approved of Victor Quinn.

He wasn't handsome, like Jeff. The brief opportunities she had to observe his features left her with an impression that their ruggedness would stamp him as a homely man. But he was very much alive and very interesting. There was a tongue in cheek quality to his remarks and the suspicion of a twinkle in the deep-set gray eyes.

"It seems to me Jeffrey said you were a school friend," she suggested politely to break a somewhat awkward silence. All of the others were chatting gayly with their dinner partners or exchanging sallies across the table. Audrey found herself at the lower end of the board with Mrs. Castle as her other near neighbor. It was a matter of cultivating Mr. Quinn or being pretty much isolated.

"More than a friend," Victor admitted. He lowered his voice to a confidential tone. "You see, Jeff doesn't care for the law. I had to, and it was due to me that he didn't flunk out. God help him if he ever tries the State exam!"

Audrey laid her bouillon spoon aside and lifted her napkin to her lips, controlling an impulse to choke. Mr. Quinn's next remark was no help. He must have been watching her, but he looked the other way as he observed gently: "That's the cutest little trick your nose did just then."

"Don't you like it?" was the de-

"Don't yuo like it?" was the demure retort. "I can't help it."

"Of course I do. Only it makes me feel that I should offer you a bit of carrot. I was prepared to like you, Audrey Swan. But not so completely. I had a pet rabbit once and I loved it."

"I believe I like you, too, Mr. Quinn. In spite of your memories."

"Then call me Vic. We're old friends now."

Audrey was consumed by an overwhelming desire as the dinner progressed. Vic seemed to know all these people very well. He dropped bits of information about the Warrens—that Lee was a successful realtor, that Becky would get one into a bridge game on the slightest provocation . . . played for blood, too. Rhoda Willis' people were rich. Young Kean wasn't and the Willises didn't favor the match. They had done their best to break it off, but weren't getting anywhere. It was all disclosed with such cheerful naivete that by no stretch of the imagination could one consider it gossip. If only he would drop some interesting bit about Mrs. Cooper—just assure his dinner partner that it was MRS. Cooper, and not Miss!

After dinner the general conversation seemed to languish and the party revealed an inclination to separate into groups. Mrs. Warren manoeuvred the elder Castles into a bridge game with the Judge for her partner, against Mrs. Castle and Lee. "The children will have a better time if we old married folks keep to ourselves," was Becky's laughing suggestion. About the same time Rhoda and Stephen strolled out on the verandah to see if it had stopped raining.

"Look, Audrey," Vic remarked suddenly. "That next room appears to be the Judge's library. Let's slip in and have a look and a smoke. Mind?"

"I'd love to."

"Say! You know this is what I call swell!" Vic stood by the big table with its softly glowing lamp, scanning the shelves that lined all the available wall space, reaching from floor to ceiling.

Audrey stood with her back to the table, leaning her weight on her two palms. A long time since she had been in this room, and the familiar surroundings brought a little pang. Like homesickness.

She was recalled to the present by Vic. He was regarding her through half-closed eyes, his head on one side. "What did you want to ask me, Audrey?"

She looked up with a start, utterly discomfited by his shrewdness. "What made you think I wanted to ask you anything?" was her parrying retort.

"Deduction, my child. Didn't I tell you I was a lawyer? We all go in for that. If we're right, clients think we're clever. Without meaning to brag, I'd say I'm clever. So what was it?"

"I've heard something about legal ethics . . ."

"Don't worry. This is confidential."

"Well, rather than slow you up. . . . When you were telling me about these people tonight I thought you were careful not to include . . ."

"The guest of honor? Maybe I was overly informative about the rest. You're right. Would I have been putting my finger on a tender spot?"

"That's ridiculous! Jeff told me ever so much about her, only he didn't happen to mention that she was married. Or had been. It did jolt me just a little when he introduced us. I wondered if I misunderstood."

"No. You didn't misunderstand. She was married about two years ago. Still is. But the mill is grinding."

"Oh! You mean she's getting a divorce."

"It's in the bag, I happen to know. I'm a sort of satellite of Brand, Brumenthal and Brand. Maybe you've . . . now what? There goes your nose again."

"It sounded like Shyster, Flywheel and Shyster."

"Yeah?" I've heard that one, too. Marx Brothers, wasn't it. Our people don't trifle with such cases as a rule, but Olive's papa is the great and only Harvey Harrison. Hence Mr. Cooper will be eased out of the scene without any fanfare of trumpets. And profitably, too. He may be something of a heel in spite of his social set-up, but ethics must keep me from verifying it for you."

"Then I'm sorry for her."

"Um . . . m." Vic was staring through the drawing-room door, out into the entrance hall where two couples were dancing. The music of a radio was faintly audible. Rhoda and Stephen. Olive and Jeff. "An object of pity, for sure," Vic concluded dryly.

"After all, you can't know."

"I didn't mean to be cynical," Vic said, "but people in her circle have quaint notions of marriage. It's like buying a fur wrap. If the style changes or you figure it isn't becoming, you work it off on the second-hand man and pick out something different. You wouldn't know about that."

"We're getting quite too serious," Audrey decided. "Could we dance?"

"The very thing I was going to suggest," Vic declared. "It's my one social grace . . . if you can associate me with anything graceful. And I may as well tell you now that if there is any talk of horseback riding during this brawl, I'm out. I hate to lower myself from the dizzy heights I've achieved in your regard, but I'm plain scared of the brutes. Of course I've heard all about your prowess."

"And I was on the point of asking you to go for an early morning ride with me!"

"Lady, I know nothing of early mornings . . . on a week-end. Nor do I intend to."

Despite his modest claims Victor Quinn proved to be an accomplished dancer and Audrey felt a momentary regret when Jeff cut in after one circuit of the big hall. "Not sorry you came?" he asked almost at once.

"What do you think?"

"That if you're bored, you're hiding it very well. You must have cast a spell over Vic. He always suspects lone females of being on the prowl."

"Perhaps I am. I like him a lot."

"Queer chap in many ways. No money to speak of, but an entree that no amount of dough can get you. He's been a self-appointed monitor to me and I don't mind telling you I owe him a lot. He probably has admitted it to you. One day, he'll make his mark . . . a high one. Say, Cygie?"

"Yes?"

"I know you haven't had any chance yet to get acquainted, but . . ."

"She's lovely, Jeff."

Tigers Explode Two Homers In Seventh Frame to Score Four Runs and Bridges Did the Rest

Cincinatti Reds Made Come-back in Last Two Frames but Couldn't Reach Pace-makers

SCORE IS 7-4

Del Baker Will Start 'Dizzy' Trout While McKechnie Will Counter With Thompson Today

(By Gayle Talbot)

(Associated Press Sports Writer)

Detroit, Oct. 5.—(AP)— The slugging Detroit Tigers, though leading the Cincinnati Reds two victories to one in this topsy-turvy World Series after yesterday's 7-4 triumph here behind Tommy Bridges, were running short of pitchers as the two League champions clashed in the fourth game of the big play-off at Briggs' Stadium today.

Manager Del Baker of the Tigers indicated he would dig deep down into the bag and nominate Paul (Dizzy) Trout, one of the past season's biggest pitching disappointments, to try to run the count to 3-1 over the Reds and make it possible to wind up the argument in the fifth game here tomorrow.

Trout is a Gamble

Trout was a gamble, but one that Baker practically was forced to take. He either had to send dizzy to the hill or bring big Buck Newsom back into the conflict after only two days of rest. The Reds, with Gene Thompson, their brilliant sophomore, ready to make his bid, appeared to have an excellent chance of squaring the series.

Thompson was given an awful going-over by the Yankees in the third game of last year's World Series, when Charlie Keller banged two home runs off him and Joe DiMaggio and Bill Dickey each slapped one round-tripper before Manager Bill McKechnie could get him out of there. But players who batted against Thompson in the latter part of the season just past say he is a vastly improved flinger and likely as not to stand the Tigers on their collective heads.

Reversals of Form

It is doubtful any World Series ever produced reversals of form more marked and puzzling than has the present one in three turbulent days. The Tigers punched the Reds right out of the Park in the opener, and it looked like a cake-walk for them. Thursday Bucky Walters handcuffed the American Leaguers with three scattered hits, and one of those was fluky. And then, yesterday, the Tigers exploded again, breaking up the game with a four-run assault on Jim Turner in the seventh inning.

The Reds' infield, the slickest in the National League, has looked ragged and uncertain of itself.

It was a question of which of the two old Tennessee boys—Turner or Tommy Bridges—would get clouted out first. Neither quite figured to go the route, and the only reason Bridges stuck to the finish was that the Tigers got to Turner and piled up a 7-2 lead before Bridges began to show serious wear. McKechnie took a flyer on Turner, similar to the one Baker appeared ready to take on the eccentric Trout today, and it proved a bad guess.

LOUISVILLE BACK IN THE RUNNING

Colonels Defeat Newark Bears 5-4 by Staging Ninth Inning Rally

Louisville, Ky., Oct. 5 (AP).—The Little World's Series picture was changed today.

Louisville's Colonels are back in the running after pulling off one of their not uncommon ninth inning uprisings to win last night's battle 5-4 before more than 7,000 spectators.

Newark's Bears, however, led two games to one.

The American Association and International League clubs were en route today to Newark to resume action tomorrow. The series, on a four-of-seven basis, will be completed there.

Steve Peek and Newark had a 4-1 lead going into the last half of the ninth, when things began to happen.

The Colonels, taking advantage of an error, rapped three successive singles, scoring two runs and sending Peek to the showers. Norman Branch was rushed in and he retired a few minutes later in favor of John Johnson. Another misplay filled the sacks and Chet Morgan voted Louisville's most valuable player this year, cracked a single to drive in the two deciding runs without an out being registered.

Former Rugby Player Invalided Home

Toronto, Oct. 5.—(CP)—One of 50 members of the Canadian Active Service Force who arrived in Toronto Friday from England was a former Western Canada Rugby player invalided home after he lost an eye when a German plane dropped three bombs on a Canadian Camp.

He is Pte. Frank (Hoot) York, who formerly played Senior Football as a lineman with Moose Jaw Maroons and Regina Rough-Riders and Junior Rugby with Regina Pat. He competed in several Dominion championships. In recent years he was in the automobile business at Windsor, Sudbury and Kingston, Ont.

B. C. BURRARDS TAKE CORNWALL IN SECOND GAME

Lacrosse Team from Coast Will Meet St. Catharines for Dominion Final

SCORE IS 22-6

Team in Fairly Good Shape After Second Rough Contest in Montreal

(By Robert Clarke, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Montreal, Oct. 5—(CP) — Once again it has been proved—this time by Vancouver Burrard Blue Bombers—that a good big team is better than a good little team.

The Burrards, rated as one of the best clubs to come out of British Columbia in some years, offered the proof last night by trouncing Cornwall Braves 22-6 to sweep their best-of-three semi-final Mann Cup senior lacrosse series in straight games.

The Braves went into the series reputed to be as good a challenger as advanced by the Quebec Lacrosse Association in the last decade. But they lost the first game Thursday night 17-8 and their fleet but small players never stood a chance last night against the huskier British Columbians.

The Blue Bombers gained the right, with their two-straight sweep, to meet St. Catharines' Athletics in the final for the Mann Cup. After last night's game every man on the club, from Coach Les Dickinson down, expressed confidence that the Burrards will win the Canadian title.

The Vancouver coach declared that the Burrards saw the Athletics last season when the Ontario team lost to New Westminster Adanacs in the Mann Cup final. He added that "Unless they are a much changed team, I'm confident we can beat them."

In Fairly Good Shape

The Burrards came out of the series with Cornwall in fairly good shape, although Pat Theal was cut across the face near the end of last night's game and had to have five stitches taken to close the gash.

Trainer Allan Cameron said, however, that he had to use only 30 yards of adhesive tape per game against the Braves compared to the 60 yards he was using while the Burrards were coming down the last lap of their western Canada campaign.

Top goal scorer for Burrards against Cornwall was Bill Morphitt, who tallied five goals in the first game and then added another four in the second contest. Morphitt's great work brought praise from a number of the old-timers who witnessed the game. Among those who were impressed by Morphitt's play was Newsy Lalonde, a former hockey and lacrosse great.

The only Cornwall player able to make any impression on the almost air-tight defence thrown up around Goalie Walt Lee was Henry Payette who tallied two goals in the first contest and then fired another two in the four shots he had in the second game.

Lee, however, had a soft time in the second game as his teammates broke up most of the Cornwall plays near centre-floor and 30 to 40 feet out from the goal. In the third quarter of last night's game he had only one shot to handle and that came while his team was short handed due to a penalty.

Bay of Quinte Country Club Honors Champions

Culminating a most successful season of their golf links, the officers and members of the Bay of Quinte Country Club honoured the club champions and trophy winners of the year at a closing dance and distribution of prizes in their clubhouse last night. The clubhouse was gayly decorated for the occasion and a large number was in attendance to make the closing dance one long to be remembered in the annals of the Country Club.

The club champion for 1940 is Ron Welsh, a newcomer to the club of recent years. He defeated Joseph Kirkwood in the club finals. "Buster" Alyea, genial Trenton golfer, won the club handicap, defeating O. H. Scott in the finals. S. R. Burrows won the Tip Top Tailors' trophy, while the Jewellers' cup for mixed two-ball foursomes, was won by Miss Joyce Porritt and David Payne. In the junior competition Ralph Graham was declared champion with Charlie Lyall runner-up. In the second flight juniors brothers contested in the finals as Jim Jenkins defeated his brother Bob Jenkins in the finals.

The ladies' club champions were as follows:

Graham Trophy, handicap, Miss Marjorie Cook, runner-up, Miss Mary Roberts.

Argos Will Probably Give Roughriders A Race to the Wire for Eastern Title

By GEORGE GRACE

Central Press Canadian Writer

Toronto, Oct. 5—Gridiron tradition suffered no jolt when Lew Hayman was consulted regarding the chances of his Argonauts in the hunt for the Big Four rugby championship this fall.

"Butch" Allison

This tradition, of course, calls for all coaches to voice lugubrious predictions regarding the chances of their own teams and moan over the thoughts of what the opposition has in the way of talent. Lew ran over the players he had, the players he didn't have, the players he wasn't sure about, and then swung the conversation to the fifth at Long Branch and the chances of Cincinnati pitching vs. Detroit batting. So what have Argos got? It's pretty safe to leave a coach out of a discussion like this anyway. They're usually slightly biased.

Bernie Thornton

Last year the local Big Four squad slipped from the Dominion championship heights it had scaled for two years previously, and went down before the power of Ottawa's Rough Riders. As champions the Riders are logically regarded as the team to beat this year, and although a much closer race is in prospect this fall than for the last two when it was merely a case of Argos or Rough Riders, the Double Blue can't be picked for worse than second, with both Hamilton and Montreal in the process of reorganization — although to all appearances the reorganization will prove very effective.

West Back Again

Last year Argos were without their most consistent threat in the open field—Art West, the twisting speedster, who injured his knee in a pre-season exhibition and was lost for the season. In Argos' only pre-season tilt this fall, against their intra-city rivals, Balmy Beach, West gave no indication of an injured knee and was the best open-field runner in the game.

Art West

To get the most optimistic view of the Argos' chances one should glance down the line-up. "Paper" teams don't always win championships, but if most of Argos' players turn in performances in keeping with their records in other leagues, they should give the Ottawa champs a run for it. Chuck McLean (Queen's), Hank Living (Sarnia), George Sprague (Queen's and Ottawa), Doug Annan (Queen's), Butch Allison (U. of T.), Roy Kent (Western U.), Bobby Coulter (U. of T.). Those are some of the names that pop up from the line-up—all of them stars in their former surroundings.

George Sprague

From the snapback out, the line represents at least an adequate appearance. As well as the sharp-shooting Living, the team has Tuffy Smith, a local product, and a "let's-go-get-'em" type of player, for the centre slot. At inside and middle they have McLean, Sprague, and Annan, already mentioned, and players like Len Staughton, Tiger Warman, Reid Wedley, Oliphant and others back with the team. As usual, the outside wing posts are in better than average hands, starting with Bernie Thornton, two Al college grad acquisitions, and the younger players, who have thus far shown promise; but haven't been through the competitive mill yet.

Have Powerful First Line

Anyway you look at it, a powerful first line is at Hayman's command, with the second-stringers still a doubtful quantity.

In the backfield there are two pluses and two minuses. Good running, good passing, weak kicking, weak plunging. In addition to Art West, the return of Bobby Coulter, former university star here, to the game after a four-year layoff, adds punch to the running attack and safety to the safety post. And there's the high-stepping Red Storey to be reckoned with—when he gets into the game.

As has been the case for the past few years the team has a whole backfield full of passers — Bill Stukus (the temporary rebel), Annis Stukus, Storey, West, Coulter. To strengthen the weak bucking back spot, Hayman may revert to the use of some of his more accomplished linemen like Annan, Sprague and McLean as ball carriers.

Bobby Coulter

The kicking chores are in the hands of the veteran Earl Selkirk, a consistently good, but not outstanding hoofer, and local high school products Art Follwell and Glen Munro. The latter is expected to develop into a fine kicker, but his youth and those charging senior linemen will prove handicaps for a while.

Despite their mediocre showing against the O.R.F.U. Beach team, it's not too hard to imagine Hayman's team giving Ross Trimble's tank troops a race to the wire.

Welterweight King Dethroned, Fritzie Zivic Defeats Armstrong

Hammerin' Henry Blinded in Both Eyes Before Ninth Round is Over

A RUGGED FIGHT

(By Sid Feder Associated Press Sports Writer).

New York, Oct. 5 (AP)—For two years, every time Henry Armstrong has gone to the post in defence of one or the other of the championships he has held, the "wise guys" have been saying "this is the time he'll burn out."

Each time, they've been taking betting chances against him on the hunch that the ring's perpetual motion machine couldn't keep it up—that sooner or later he would run down from the fearful pace he set.

Well, they're cashing their bets on Fritzie Zivic today at the juicy odds of 4 to 1, but their hunch was dead wrong. Li'l perpetual motion was all wound up and still running in high gear last night, but he was blind, both eyes punched closed, and he couldn't see where he was going or whom he was fighting.

And, since you can't hit what you can't see, he lost his world's welterweight championship to the youngest and toughest of Pittsburgh's "five flying Zivics," in a wild 15-round thriller that had 12,081 Madison Square Garden customers screaming and hopping up and down all the way.

Went Along on Heart

For the last half of their fierce 15-rounder, the great little negro just went along on his heart. Fritzie, putting on a superb boxing show and doing his damage with a good straight left and a snappy short right uppercut, belted Henry's left eye tight shut in the first few rounds, all but did the same to the right eye before the ninth came up, and gashed Armstrong's mouth

There's no intention here of taking anything away from the clean-cut merits of the title win by the rugged 26-year old Pittsburger who learned his fighting as chief bouncer in his father's saloon. He took nine of the 15 rounds on The Associated Press score card, but it wasn't too much of a trick to put on his stretch drive to victory against the sightless Armstrong who stayed on his feet under the bruising until the final bell.

Fritzie, at 145 1-2, held a 3 1-2 see twice.

GEORGE DEMANDS TOP BILLING

Macedonian Rubberman to Meet Mike Domerko in Main Bout

With three well-matched bouts professional wrestling returns to the Hume Arena on Monday night when Mike Domerko, conqueror of George Pavish, meets Tom George, the Macedonian rubberman in the main bout of the evening. As a preliminary attraction George won over every opponent he has faced in a local ring in his three appearances in Belleville and he openly demanded a top-rank billing for next week's show.

"I'm tired of carrying second rate grapplers in Belleville. My reputation demands a main bout spot and I'm demanding it. I've wrestled all over the American continent and care not who you bring in as my opponent, but it's top billing or no show in the future for me," demanded George after last week's bout. He was immediately signed to meet Domerko.

The semi-final bout of the night brings together two popular light-heavyweights when Jimmie Allen, former Canadian amateur welterweight champion and conqueror of Pedro Valdez, meets a newcomer to local wrestling circles, Otto Olson, the agile Swedish wrestler. Both Allen and Olson are noted for the fast, agile mat work.

The curtain-raiser will bring Jimmie Michaell, the local Greek grappler, into his first professional bout versus Pedro Valdez, the popular Mexican wrestler. Michaell gained much prominence by staying twelve minutes with Jimmie Allen in a special bout last week.

With one week of the duck season having already been spent feathered ame hunters are to enjoy one of the longest seasons of duck and partridge hunting in many years. With a strict ban being placed on pheasant shooting this season, hunters get a break on partridge hunting, however. By order-in-council partridge hunting will be permitted until Oct. 14 and another period from Nov. 4 to Nov. 16, making 26 days all told.

"Pursuant to provisions of the Game and Fisheries Act it shall be lawful to hunt the following species of partridge, viz. ruffled grouse, Canada grouse, sharp-tailed grouse and prairie hen throughout Ontario (excepting on Crown Game Preserves, regulated game preserves areas and counties of Essex and Kent) from Oct. 1 to Oct. 14, both days inclusive, and from November 4 to November 16, both days inclusive, provided that no person shall take or kill such birds in excess of five per day in all or twenty-five in all during these two periods, or have in possession at any time such birds in excess of numbers herein prescribed."

With the opening of the hunting season for ducks and partridge in the district and for deer from Nov. 4 to Nov. 19, the seasons for fishing will soon be closing. Statistics on the fishing dates, compiled by Inspector McCabe, are as follows:

The season for bass is closed from Oct. 16 to June 30, 1941, both days inclusive.

Maskinonge fishing closes on Oct. 16 to June 30, 1941, both days inclusive.

Brown trout and Aurora trout closed Sept. 1 to Apr. 30, 1941, both days inclusive, and speckled trout closed Sept. 15 to Apr. 30, 1941.

Rainbow trout closed Sept. 16 to May 31, 1941, both days inclusive.

Yellow pickerel, pike, perch and dori closed Jan. 1 to May 15, 1941, both days inclusive.

Pike closes Apr. 1, 1941, to May 15, 1941, both days inclusive.

Whitefish and lake trout (called salmon here) closed from Oct. 15 to Nov. 15, both days inclusive.

Do you remember when Lou Nova of San Francisco got off the canvas in the third round to go on and batter Gunnar Barlund, Finnish heavyweight, into submission winning on a technical knockout in the seventh round of their scheduled 15-round bout at New York a year ago tonight.

Umpire George Magerkurth is known as a student of the English language. He likes to use WORDS. This has aroused the spirit of emulation among his fellow umpires.

Bill Stewart was talking about the assault on Mage in Brooklyn.

"Had I got my hands on that convict, I would have ameliorated him," said Stewart.

Magerkurth for a moment resented Stewart's invasion of his linguistic field Mage, however, gave up in admiration.

"Me, too," said Magerkurth, who was rolled in the Flatbush dirt by the assailant.

It has been suggested that a war charity exhibition softball game be arranged between the F.R.A.C. "Flyers," intermediate O.A.S.A. champions and the Argyll Light Infantry team, champions of the Petawawa N.P.A.M. camp league. If played in Trenton on Thanksgiving Day, such a game might realize a goodly sum for some war charity fund, as Trenton is the home diamond of the champion Flyers.

One can hardly blame Tom George, the hefty Macedonian grappler for his attitude last Monday night when he demanded a top-billing in local wrestling circles. "I've helped fill in on the prelims, and won every semi-final bout in which I've appeared in Belleville. I think it's d—— near time I got a main bout shot. I've wrestled in 32 of the 48 states, Canada, Mexico, Greece and other places and it's either top billing or no dice in the future." George shouted as he pounded the dressing room table after seeing Domerko beat Pavish last week. Tom was immediately signed to meet Domerko and promptly informed it was a case of win, or he was all through with the wrestling game in the Hume arena. Another bout that should be welcomed is the semi-final for Monday night when Jimmie Allen, the Canadian champ, who put Pedro Valdez bye, bye, meets Otto Olson, the Swedish lad.

A new singles champion was crowned at the Belleville Lawn Bowling Club last night when Norm E. Edwards (Doc) defeated George Watkin in the club finals. Norm was laying down his No. 1 shot in front all night and got an early jump on George, something he held tenaciously to throughout the entire match. The new champion is the proud possessor of the Walker Hardware trophy for a year.

It was a gala occasion at the Bay of Quinte Country Club last night when the various club golf champions were awarded their various trophies. A new champion was crowned when Ron Welsh took the year's top honors, while Miss Mary Roberts won the ladies club championship. 'Buster' Alyea had fun all summer golfing around and then won the club handicap for men, Miss Marjorie Cook winning the ladies' handicap honors.

SPORT SPICE: Most everything happened yesterday in Detroit when the Tigers won the third game of the world series . . . For six innings Tommy Bridges staged as thrilling a pitchers' duel as could be wished for, but suddenly in the seventh the Tiger big gun began to boom out with hits and before the smoke cleared away Turner was gone and four runs crossed the home base for the Tigers . . . Up until the eighth Bridges yielded up only four hits, then he eased off and coasted in on his team mates' hitting powers . . . York and Higgins pounded out round-trippers in the seventh and the show was over . . . To date we find the Reds have collected 27 hits to the Tigers 26, while the Reds excel in errors also, having four to Detroit's three . . . Old Man Time caught up to Henry Armstrong, as did Frankie Zivic last night and we have a new welterweight boxing champion today in Zivic.

Fire Prevention Week to be Observed By Local Department

Local citizens are again reminded that beginning tomorrow, Oct. 6, and continuing for the next seven days, Fire Prevention Week will be observed. Already the local firemen under Fire Chief Lynch, have started a program of premises inspection which includes attics and basements in the residential sections of the city and will also include a thorough check-up of all industrial plants in Belleville.

In an effort to bring the observance of Fire Prevention Week more into the minds of the children an essay contest has been staged in each of the five city schools. The local Kiwanis Club has cooperated with the Belleville Fire Department in this effort and have put up prize money totalling $25 to be divided among the five public schools. The essays are now being judged and winning essays in both senior and junior grades in each of the city schools will be awarded cash prizes. The children attending the Prince of Wales School were also permitted to enter the contest but as the school is outside the city, prize money is being furnished from the fire department funds.

ALL DRESSED for an important afternoon and informal after-dark activities in a simple frock of black woolen and a matching jacket with waist-length revers and pockets of tightly massed jet beads. Frock has jet belt.

Hog Marketings this Year Show Increase

The hog marketings have shown a very substantial increase this year over the number marketed in 1939. Butter Stronger In Past Week

Toronto, Oct. 5—More pronounced strength developed on the Toronto butter market during the week following publication of the nine cities' stock report. Factors contributing to the 1-cent advance in prices were some improvement in the statistical position of market, continued heavy domestic consumption and persistent hopes of export business. Canadian butter consumption in August was the heaviest on record with the exception of September of last year when outbreak of war prompted keen consumer demand. Latest available figures indicate that this trend was at least maintained during last month.

Holders offered butter sparingly because of prevailing light arrivals of fresh receipts and local demand, which was not brisk at any time, absorbed supplies with little difficulty. Ontario No. 1 creamery solids sold yesterday at 25 cents per pound an increase of 1 cent on the week.

The egg market followed the trend of the previous week. Prices on top grades were easy under lagging demand as the lower grades held a steady tone under good demand. Some accumulation occurred in pullet egg receipts. Government inspected shipments to Northern Ontario were again light, as also were shipments to the Maritimes. Two cars went forward for export overseas in the week and other cars are being assembled for shipment next week.

ERNEST NEULLER

Thick Underbrush.

Informed of the break, as reported late yesterday in a story from Port Arthur, internment officials said then they felt sure the men would be recaptured in short order and expressed a belief they must be somewhere in the area of the camp.

The country thereabouts is rocky with thick stands of trees and underbrush.

Neuller and Rauschenbach, by their break from the camp, brought the number of escapes from internment camps in Canada to 14. Only one man, Manuel Fischer, 29, has not been overtaken by Canadian authorities after making his escape. Fischer reached International Falls, Minn., where he is held by American authorities.

Neuller and Rauschenbach were thought to have made their escape while outside the camp with a working party.

They were among more than 6,000 enemy aliens and prisoners of war brought to Canada during the summer from the United Kingdom for safe keeping and placed in camps separate from those established for enemy aliens rounded up in Canada.

A Big Man.

Neuller, it was said, was a big man, over six feet in height and powerfully built. The presumption here was that he resisted capture and was shot on that account.

Rauschenbach was described as a 16-year-old sailor.

Recently, commenting on reports from Fredericton that there were youths of 15 in internment camps in Canada, authorities said there were none of that age and only a few of 16 years.

LIMITED VISIBILITY AT DOVER

Dover, England.—A southwesterly gale which has been sweeping Dover Strait dropped during the night and the wind veered around the west. The sea was calmer but mist limited visibility and the sky was overcast by high clouds.

THREE-HOUR

into the sea, the Press Association reported, while three others were turned into hurtling, burning wreckage over the town of Ashford.

One flight of bombers, accompanied by about 40 fighter planes, came in from the southeast, only to be split up by fast-diving R.A.F. patrols. One machine burst in the air and the two German crewmen were killed.

Three bombers were reported to have crashed in flames within five minutes over Ashford, Kent, about midday.

Gunfire Heard.

Gunfire was heard in central London this afternoon, as raiders broke through the coastal screen of fighter planes and anti-aircraft guns to reach the capital.

A half-dozen German planes droned toward central London in the clear blue sky, splotched here and there by clouds, and were met by a fierce barrage which turned the leaders back just as two British fighters roared into view.

Dizzy aerobatics followed and one of the Germans fell. The other vanished into protective clouds.

At Ashford the only casualty reported was a woman who bumped into a lamp post and injured her face. She said she was watching the air fight so closely she didn't see the post.

The people of the Kent town remained on the streets to watch the battle and cheered as the three bombers were brought down in swift succession.

Mayor of Town Nearly Hit.

In East London, three bombs fell, shortly before Herbert Morrison, the Home Secretary, and Admiral Sir Edward Evans, shelter director, toured battered areas there.

One bomb dropped 100 yards from the mayor of the borough who was setting out to welcome the two officials. Another blasted a hole in a cemetery, throwing fragments of tombstones over nearby housetops.

Until a R.A.F. fighter patrol cleared the skies, Mr. Morrison and Admiral Evans stayed in a shelter crowded with 1,000 Londoners.

NAZI

Cmdr. Beard, weary from long nights on the bridge, told of the capture of the Nazi vessel and her crew of 58 off Manzanillo, Mexico, on the night of Sept. 25, after powerful searchlights picked her out of the darkness and a star shell was fired across the German's foredeck.

That night, said Cmdr. Beard, marked the culmination of a week of watchful waiting five miles off the Mexican coast for the German ship to make a dash for home. Fifteen minutes after the German ship was ordered to heave to, twenty Canadian officers and ratings were aboard her. The Germans had set buckets of fuel around their ship to fire her in case capture threatened, but they had no time to set them off.

Taken Aboard Cruiser

Two boatloads of German sailors—38 men in all, including the Nazi skipper, Captain Belt, were brought aboard the Weser's captor. The Canadian prize crew stayed aboard the Merchantman with 20 German sailors to man her on the eight-day trip up the coast to this port.

There was no chase, no fighting, no confusion.

Cmdr. Beard said the German captain told him later that he had been informed that there was "not a British ship of war in the Pacific." This led the German skipper to believe it safe to venture forth from the Mexican port to make a dash for Germany.

QUEEN'S BROTHER

Britain Helped Countries

"When the war started, the British Government helped these countries lay in supplies for months ahead," Mr. Bowes-Lyon continued. "We knew we were taking a certain risk," he said, "but we did it hoping they would be able to remain free and provide for their people in times of stress. All we asked was a guarantee that food and raw materials would not be re-exported to help the enemy.

"When these countries fell prey to the Nazis one by one, we paid the price for having let pass through our blockade all that these small neutrals needed for domestic consumption. These stocks were seized and have helped the enemy."

As an example of Nazi looting, he said that shortly after the armistice with France, all potatoes disappeared from the Marseille market. Then he added: "I think you can all guess where they vanished to."

Ever since there had been a steady traffic of goods from unoccupied to occupied France the frontier in the opposite direction was closed.

Barrage of Propaganda

He said his listeners across the Atlantic "have long been subjected to a barrage of Nazi propaganda."

"On the subject of blockade, Germany would appeal to your hearts with stories of famine and starvation and the responsibility will be placed on our 'inhuman and merciless' blockade."

But Mr. Bowes-Lyons said that "even after this orgy of looting we are certain that if Germany could and would deal out the available foodstuffs fairly there would be no famine.

"If she chooses, instead, that guns for herself must come first, before butter for her victims, that any available butter must be fed to the Germans, we cannot either be held responsible or asked to help her out."

He said that the occupied territories "to which it is suggested food should be sent" are being used for bases for German air attacks on this country.

Then he continued:

"Can anyone really expect that we should raise the blockade to enable the German fliers night after night to scatter bombs on London and other parts of Britain and then return to partake of breakfast just across the channel?

Speaking of the Kitchener case, Mr. Conant said because of "the important and unprecedented nature of the cases, all the facts and circumstances were considered by law officers of my department, resulting in the amendment of the original charges and the laying of two additional charges.

"This was done so that the court would be in a position to deal fully with the matter in the court's proper discretion. It is for the local authorities to determine what action, if any, is to be taken in other centres."

The charges which the law officers drew in the Kitchener cases were: First, that the accused had made statements to their children "to wit, 'Do not sing God Save the King; do not salute the flag' or statements of a like effect which statements were intended or likely to cause disaffection to His Majesty" and that they "unlawfully did advocate or defend the facts, principles or policies of an illegal organization, to wit, Jehovah's Witnesses, after such organization had been declared illegal by order-in-council dated July 4."

Rome Communique

Rome, Oct. 5 (AP)—The Italian high command claimed today that fast moving Italian columns turned back British tank and armored car units southeast of Sidi Barrini in a sudden resumption of war activity on the Egyptian front.

(There was no immediate British comment on this claim.)

The announcement was the first indication of fighting by land forces in the vicinity of Sidi Barrani since the Italians occupied that outpost approximately 60 miles inside Egypt almost two weeks ago.

(The outpost has been shelled by the Royal Navy and bombed by the R.A.F.)

The high command acknowledged that British bombers had again bombed Bardia, Bengasi and Tobruk in Libya.

Training of Canada's Airmen Series of "Canada Carries on" Graphically Depicted in Latest

A graphic story of the intensive training undergone by the young pilots, observers, and gunners, as well as the ground crews of the Royal Canadian Air Force is pictured in the latest release of the "Canada Carries On" series, "Wings of Youth" which will be shown at the Capitol Theatre on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week.

It faithfully records the evolution of a pilot from the raw rookie period until he roars over battle-scarred skies at the controls of a fighter or bomber. Observers, gunners, photographers, are shown going through the various stages of training. Canada's mighty airports, are shown in all their picturesque nature from the skies and from the ground.

Young Canadian fledgelings are pictured high above a sea of clouds, at the controls of a plane for the first time. They "machine-gun" and "bomb objectives effectively. They are seen at the moment of their pride receiving the coveted "wings" from such men as Air-Marshal "Billy" Bishop.

The Link trainer, bomb-sight, camera obscurer, and other mechanical methods of training are pictured "in action". In all the film gives a thorough insight into the training that is monthly turning outpilots, observers and gunners to augment the increasing force of airmen that are blasting the Huns from the flame-swept skies of Britain.

It is an inspiring film, one that should cause every red-blooded Canadian to swell with pride. The youth of Canada, from farm, factory and machine-shop is seen in their new war-time environment, happy enthusiastic, and anxious to get the training over with, and see real action. It faithfully records the efforts of Canada and the Empire, to train our airmen, and the success with which these efforts are being met.

Nazi Night Attacks On Smaller Scale Says Communique

Sir Charles Portal, Head of R. A. F. Bomber Command, Becomes Air Marshal

London, Oct. 5 (CP). — London went into its fifth week of German air attack today, cheered by a second successive night of storm-limited raiding and steeled against any intensification of the war resulting from the Brenner Pass axis conference.

The embattled capital was heartened particularly by indications the gathering winter over Britain of storms and clouds would hamper the raiders more than it would the city's defenders.

As on Friday morning, the German fliers who struck through the murky skies left the city several hours before dawn. They came earlier than usual last evening, but an all-clear signal shortly after midnight separated the night's two attacks.

For the first time in many nights the Royal Air Force apparently eased up on its counter blows at Germany and German-held bases. The Press Association said it was learned that "our bombers have not carried out any operations during the night" because of "extremely unfavorable weather conditions over enemy territory."

An official statement described the Nazi night attacks as on a "restricted scale", and said that although some persons were killed "casualties in all areas were few".

In the first of the night attacks gunfire was heard in the northwestern and southeastern suburbs and around the centre of the city. In the second there were no explosions in the mid-town area.

No Great Damage Reported.

Parts of southeastern England, the Midlands and Wales also were raided but no great damage was reported.

The communique said homes and other buildings were damaged in the vicinity of London and a number of buildings were damaged in a town in southeastern England. Incendiary bombs caused some fires.

Altogether the Nazis were said to have dropped bombs on 66 districts throughout central and greater London and the strategic southeast triangle.

Although the low-hanging wintry clouds had given the German pilots "hide and seek" protection for prolonged day attacks yesterday, the same conditions blotted out the terrain and hid their targets during the night.

Britain's defenders were unable to use searchlights because the beams would not penetrate the clouds, and relied instead on auditory detectors to direct anti-aircraft fire.

The barrage was as heavy at times as on some moonlit nights and bits of shrapnel peppered down like hail on streets and rooftops.

The Press Association quoted rooftop observers as saying the clouds did not impair the effectiveness of anti-aircraft fire.

The Air Ministry reported three raiders shot down during the day and night, with one British plane missing on patrol duty.

New Leader for R.A.F.

The R.A.F. will operate under a new leader, 47-year-old Sir Charles Portal, head of the R.A.F. bomber command, who becomes Air Chief Marshal.

His former chief, Sir Cyril Newhall, who built the modern R.A.F., was named last night as governor general of New Zealand.

The London press generally regarded yesterday's conference of Hitler and Mussolini at the Brenner Pass as inspired by failure of the Nazi air attack to shatter British civilian morale.

The Daily Mail said "we must assume" that the Axis chiefs met to plan "the next blow," and predicted it would come in the Mediterranean.

Vernon Bartlett, M.P., writing in the News Chronicle, foresaw a possibility of slackening raids on the grounds that "results do not justify the very considerable expenditure of pilots, machines and petrol." He added that intensification of the fighting could be expected, however, in some theatre away from Britain.

Daily Express Reaction

—Lord Beaverbrook's Daily Express showed its reaction in these headlines:—

"Brenner has its usual aftermath—a night full; of threats Thames to Suez blitz, Axis boasts."

The News Chronicle said British air resistance had forced a change in the Axis battle plan, speculated whether the next blow would fall on Greece or Africa, and continued:

"We do not know. But we do know that when the blow comes it will be hard. So will that with which we shall return the compliment.

"One day we shall not have to wait for our enemies to deliver a blow and then to counter it. Slowly —more slowly perhaps than we like —initiative is passing to us. When we have it, the dictators will celebrate even more gloomy meetings than this last."

JAPS RETALIATE

Shanghai. — The Japanese navy announced today that a group of fighter planes landed on a Chinese airfield at Taipingssu, near Chengtu, yesterday and burned hangars and machine-gunner Chinese planes to avenge the death of Rear-Admiral Kikuji Okuda, who was killed in action over the airport yesterday.

Canada to Emerge From War With 2 Or More Greatest Ports in World

Managing Editor of Chicago News Makes Observation as Result of Recent Trip

WHEAT CROP PROBLEM

New York, Oct. 5 —(CP)— The war is real to the residents of Canada's Maritime Provinces, writes L. R. Blanchard, managing editor of the Rochester, N.Y., Times-Union. They know that "their front door faces the enemy."

In the third article of a series resulting from a tour of Eastern Canada last week, Mr. Blanchard, one of some 25 American newspapermen who received a close-up view of Canada's war effort during a 2,500-mile tour, deals extensively with the Royal Canadian Navy, with particular attention to the booming port of Halifax.

"The Maritimes have intimate knowledge that their front door faces the enemy," he wrote. "Anti-aircraft guns poke their sniffing noses from sandbagged nests and the soldiers who man them are not fooling. . . . Halifax is surprised that some suicidal Nazi has not roared over them in a sacrificial raid. They are ready for him."

The writer, who, like his colleagues on the tour, has interpreted to Americans in articles and pictures current developments in Canada, had praise for the Royal Canadian Navy which "is small but has taken an important part in the war." He gave a graphic description of Halifax in wartime where the R.C.N. "carries on the traditions of Britain's sea forces."

Well publicized in the American press this week as a result of the tour, Canada's increasing power in the air is the chief topic of Wayne Thomas' third article in the Chicago Daily Tribune. He gave facts and figures on the number of airports built and building, the number of airmen in training and on the growing industry behind the Commonwealth Air Training Scheme.

Tremendous Traffic

As one outgrowth of the war Canada is certain to emerge with two, perhaps three of the greatest ports in the world, Hal O'Flaherty, managing editor of The Chicago Daily News, writes in his third article on the Dominion's war effort.

". . . Canada is today, by virtue of war trade, one of the greatest maritime powers of the world", he stated. "In one of her eastern ports a traffic has evolved such as this continent has not seen since 1918".

The writer described how in this harbor "flotillas of the greatest commercial ships ever to play the seas load their hulls to the limit" and head for Britain convoyed by warships.

Leonard Ware of The Boston Herald, commenting on the present spirit in Canada, wrote in his fourth and concluding article: "Determined as he (The Canadian) is to defend and maintain his Anglo-Saxon heritage of freedom of thought, of religion and of personal aspiration, he knows he must make heavy economic sacrifices".

Mr. Ware concluded:—

"Canada has many difficult economic problems, notably the financing of her present large purchases from the United States and the sale of her large wheat crop. It used to be sold to all of Europe. Now, only Britain can buy. But on her fundamental program of increasing producion for war and reducing production for civilian consumption, she seems to be moving steadily and successfully ahead".

Victory Being Built in Canada

The Christian Science Monitor, in the second of its series, described in detail the air training program and declared: "if air power can win the war for the British Empire, victory is being built in Canada by the British Commonwealth Air Training plan".

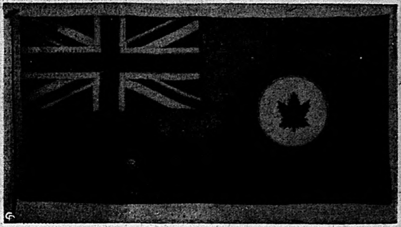
William Davis Taylor, in an article in The Boston Globe, reviewed the development of the Canadian Army. He remarked that when the Dominion's Training camps are completed, more than 500,000 men will be in arms. "They should be a most formidable group", he concluded.

David F. Lane, in The Watertown, N.Y., Times, wrote a detailed history of Royal Military College at Kingston, Ont., outlined its system of training and related some of its traditions.

APPOINTED TO COMMAND NEWEST ACQUISITION OF THE ROYAL CANADIAN NAVY

With the acquisition of six destroyers for the Royal Canadian Navy from the United States, Canada's navy has been powerfully increased. The officers who will command these destroyers are shown here from LEFT to RIGHT, Lieut.-Commander H. F. Pullen, of Oakville, Ont., who will command the St. Francis; Lieut.-Commander S. W. Davis, of Trail, B.C., who will command the Columbia; Lieut.-Commander E. L. Armstrong, of Toronto, who will command the Niagara; Lieut.-Commander D. C. Wallace, of Halifax, who will command the St. Clair, and Lieutenant M. A. Medland, of Toronto, who will command the S. Croix. Commander H. Kingsley, of Vancouver, not pictured, will command the Annapolis. All the destroyers have been renamed after rivers common to the United States and Canada.

OFFICIAL ENSIGN OF THE R.C.A.F.



An R.C.A.F. ensign has been designed to provide a distinctive flag for the Royal Canadian Air Force. The new ensign was designed at R.C.A.F. headquarters and will be flown in Canada and overseas any place where the R.C.A.F. is stationed. The main part of the flag is sky blue, with the Union Jack in the upper left hand corner. The outside circle is dark blue with a white bull's-eye and a red maple leaf in the centre.

"INVADING FORCES" SUCCESSFULLY REPULSED BY CAMP BORDEN FORCES

Designed to test the efficiency of Canada's streamlined army, 5,000 troops and 450 motor vehicles streamed out of Camp Borden in three columns when word was flashed that "invading forces" were attempting to force landings on the shores of Lake Ontario and Lake Erie. The manoeuvres were carried out on a carefully planned schedule and commanding officers expressed themselves as highly pleased as the manoeuvres were carried out without a hitch. To approximate actual war conditions as nearly as possible, the mechanized forces were directed along poor country roads whenever possible. Lieut.-Col. H. B. Duthie, UPPER LEFT, O.C., the Irish Regiment, LOWER RIGHT, is shown as he critically watched his men swing along. Motorcycle dispatch riders and scouts, UPPER CENTRE, accompanied each of the advancing forces. At Erin, the Irish were greeted by Walter Henry Crosby, 91, UPPER RIGHT, who is of U.E.L. stock, and whose mother came from Dublin. Divisional headquarters kept in constant communication by telephone, radio and dispatch riders with the three forces. Checking at a cross-road are, LOWER LEFT, Col. S. A. Lee, Major-General R. O. Alexander, Col. McGee and Col. J. K. Lawson.

U.S. EMBASSY OBSERVERS ON LOOKOUT

While the staff of the United States embassy works on in the building below their feet, these members of the embassy staff are assigned to the roof of the structure scanning the skies for German planes on air raids bent. Should the planes come dangerously close to the embassy the warning is given and safety is sought. The system of scouting was suggested to U.S. Envoy Kennedy by Prime Minister Winston Churchill.

BABE BORN 'MIDST BURSTING BOMBS

Mr. and Mrs. Peter Roderick of southeast London are shown with their daughter Doreen, admiring their new arrival, Peter John Anderson Roderick, in the air raid shelter in which the child first saw the light of day. Anti-aircraft shells were bursting in the sky overhead and German bombs were bursting around the shelter when the child was born. In tribute to their comparative safety, the names "John Anderson" were given the infant. Sir John Anderson invented this type of shelter.

"SUICIDE SQUAD" LAUGHS AT DANGER DURING HAZARDOUS WORK

These six members of Britain's Royal Engineers "suicide squad," which works under the direction of Lieutenant Robert Davies, University of Toronto graduate and now an officer of the appear quite cheerful as they go about the dangerous work of lifting a heavy German bomb from the crater it caused when it plunged into a west London street after a recent air raid. An officer, partially in the background, directs the work while the man who discovered the crater lends a shoulder in the hole.

GERMANY SENDS ARMED TROOPS INTO RUMANIA

12 German Raiders Shot Down in Third Daylight Raid on London

Despite Bad Weather, RAF Bomb Nazi Targets

Individual Combats Quite Frequent as Raiders Broken Up

Raids Start With Attacks by Single Planes or Small Groups and Broaden Into Series of Squadron Thrusts

London, Oct. 7 (CP)—Droves of German bombers hammered the war-scarred London front with renewed assaults today, and some of the 450 planes which were estimated to have been used succeeded in penetrating to the central city.

Twelve of the raiders were shot down, the Air Ministry announced, in ferocious air battles in which the Germans were balked from reaching the Capital in three of their five determined stabs.

Eight British planes went down. There were some fatalities and property was demolished by explosives dropped in parts of London outside the central area.

Dover, Eastbourne and "certain other towns" in Kent, in the southeast, also were damaged, the Air Ministry said.

The intensified attacks followed London's first quiet night in a month. Newspapers played up the "big news" that residents got a good sleep. Brilliant sunshine succeeded channel storms and clouds which grounded both British and German fliers last night.

Why The Weather?

By Major A. H. Thiessen
Science Service Meteorologist

What about the earth's heat? It would be fine to just pump the heat from the earth's interior and warm our house with it. Indeed, hot springs in some places rise to the very surface, which one might think would furnish a cheap and convenient source of heat. But experience in using hot springs or tapping the earth's interior for heat has taught us that it is not cheap. The trouble with getting heat below the surface is that the appliances are costly to install and to keep up; and it has been found that steam from surface hot springs is mixed with corrosive gases, the removal of which costs more than to generate steam from coal.

CANADIAN CENSUS TO BE THOROUGH

Chief of Board Describes it as the Most Detailed Ever to be Taken in Dominion

Ottawa, Oct. 7 —(CP)— There will be nothing approximate about the 1941 Canadian census which starts next June 2.

A. J. Pelletier, chief of the Census Board, Dominion Bureau of Statistics, gave this assurance today. He described it as "the most detailed census ever to be taken in Canada."

Some 16,000 enumerators, with the aid of 18,000 maps outlining the various districts to which they are assigned, will conduct it. These men will work on a "commission basis," receiving so much per person, house and so on.

"People probably wonder," Mr. Pelletier said, "if the enumerator secures an exact count when he calls or is it only approximate? Believe me, the count is pretty well up to its mark.

"If a person is alive one minute before midnight on the day the census is taken, he will be enumerated. But if he dies one minute before midnight, then he will not be enumerated. The same thing applies to a baby. If it is born after midnight, then it is not enumerated.

A survey of housing likely will be included in the 1941 census, if plans now prepared are followed.

If a person is away from home when the census is taken, parents or relatives will be permitted to fill in the forms, providing they can answer all the questions. However, operators of boarding houses will not be permitted to fill in any form for a boarder who is away. Instead, the enumerator will leave an "individual sheet" for the boarder. It is to be filled out and left in a sealed envelope for the enumerator to pick up next day.

SERVICES FOR FORMER CONSUL GENERAL

London, Oct. 7 (CP Cable) — Funeral services were held today for Baron Regis D'Arnauld De Vitrolles, former French Ambassador to The Netherlands and onetime French Consul General in Canada, who was killed in a blackout traffic accident last week.

Jean Desy, Canadian Minister to The Netherlands and Belgium, represented Canada at the funeral.

CANADA'S LAND FORCES MAY BE KNOWN AS 'ARMY'

Parliament Will be Asked to Change Name to 'The Canadian Army'

BRITISH USAGE

Full-Time Force Will be Probably Known as 'Active Army' and Part-Time Soldiery as 'Reserve Army'

Ottawa, Oct. 7—(CP)—The Defence Department will ask Parliament at the next session to change the name of the Canadian Land Forces to "The Canadian Army," Defence Minister Ralston said today.

He said that "militia" implied riflemen and with the change in armament it was felt that "army" was the more appropriate name.

To distinguish the full-time force from the part time soldiery Col. Ralston said the terms "Active Army" and "Reserve Army" would probably be used.

It was not yet definitely decided to drop the use of the term "Canadian Active Service Force," used since the war to describe the troops serving overseas or available for overseas service.

The Minister said that question was now being studied and there might be certain advantages in retaining the use of the term although for practical purposes the C.A.S.F. would be the active branch of the army.

Conformity with British Usage

Designation of Canadian military forces as the Canadian Army will bring the terminology in this respect into conformity with that used in Great Britain where they are known simply as "the army."

Col. Ralston said he did not think the word "royal" was needed in relation to the army as it is used in the names of the Royal Canadian Navy and the Royal Canadian Air Force.

"I hope they are all royal, anyway," he said, "that is that they are all King's men."

JUNIOR CHANGES EXPECTED IN CABINET

London, Oct. 7 (CP)—Several changes in junior ministerial appointments are likely to follow the changes in the cabinet effected last week, The Press Association reported today.

It said it understood Ellen Wilkinson will leave the Ministry of Pensions to assist Herbert Morrison in the Ministry of Home Security.

Miss Wilkinson will devote her attention to solbing the problem of air raid shelters, it was said.

Dover, Oct. 7 (CP)—Brilliant sunshine today followed a stormy night in the Straits of Dover. The sea was calm. A fresh southwesterly breeze was blowing and a mist veiled the French coast.

No Monuments Missing Amongst Spires, City Towers—MacDonald

London, Oct. 7 (CP)—Broadcasting to North America Sunday, Minister of Health Malcolm MacDonald described besieged London as the stage of "an odd stirring drama... performed in deadly earnest to the accompaniment of droning airplanes, crash gunfire and vicious bursting of bombs."

Despite the pounding, he said, one could stand on Hampstead Hill and "notice no monument missing amongst all the spires and towers of the city."

Mr. MacDonald referred to "the stretcher parties whose work may be amongst the most gruesome yet whose cars are sometimes driven to the scene of a catastrophe by mere slips of girls who have somehow acquired nerves of steel."

At other places, the Minister said, "incendiary and oil bombs come swishing down like a scattering bouquet of malicious firecrackers. In a brief space of time a half dozen buildings may be alight all around you—leaping, red flames eating swiftly at their vitals.

"Suddenly a procession of fire engines come careening along the flame-illumined street. Men jump from the running boards The night is filled with robust epithets addressed to hose and hydrants. And shortly afterward the wild flames are under control."

Told of Visit to Shelter

Mr. MacDonald told of a midnight visit to an underground shelter during a heavy raid.

"In one arch more brightly lit than others by the spotlamp hanging from its ceiling, the group of people appeared like a company of actors on a stage raised above the slumberers below.

"Some standing, some crouching, some lying full length, they formed a circle around the central figure of a powerful young girl.

"She stood almost motionless, her head bowed, a coil of her hair fallen forward over her face, her body slightly twisted so that an ample hip gave occasional support to one below, whilst with strong sweep of her arms she conjured from a giant accordion a whole series of soldiers' songs of the last Great war.

"Her concentration was so absolute that it seemed as though nothing in the distraught world mattered but the gay light music. And now and then as she played, some members of her rapt audience broke from rest to dance a little jig or a pair of lovers stepped out and waltzed round her in the circle of light."

Large-Scale Removal Scheme in London Area Is Announced Today

British Government Will Provide Transportation, Find Accommodation and Pay Lodging Allowances to Those Whose Homes Are Used

London, Oct. 7 (CP). — A new large-scale removal scheme for the whole London area was announced today by Health Minister Malcolm MacDonald. Under the plan, the government will provide transportation, find accommodations and pay lodging allowances to those whose homes are used. Payment will be at the rate of five shillings a week for each mother, the same for each child over 14 and three shillings a week for each child under 14.

The scheme was made effective immediately.

It provided that mothers and children under five years old who can make their own arrangements for accommodations may obtain travel vouchers and the lodging allowance and take their children with them.

Expectant mothers within a month of confinement also will be removed, if they wish, with full pre-natal care.

Noting that babies had been born in air raid shelters, Mr. MacDonald called it "quite necessary" that the mothers should have been in London. During the few months preceding Sept. 7, he said, expectant mothers left London at a weekly rate of from 60 to 70 and from Sept. 7 to Oct. 4, 1,500 departed.

Speaking especially of the aged and infirm, the minister said he wished whole families could be moved together, but that practical difficulties made it impossible.

Nazi Coastal Ports Pounded by R. A. F.

London, Oct. 7 (CP).—Royal Air Force bombers attacked Nazi coastal objectives and shipping over an area stretching from Harlingen in the Netherlands to Boulogne in France in a series of daylight raids which began soon after dawn Sunday and lasted until late afternoon, the Air Ministry News Service announced today.

Despite bad weather, R.A.F. bombers raided the "invasion ports" of Ostend, Calais and Boulogne, attacked the Diphols airport in western Germany and bombed shipping in the Nazi-held Netherlands harbors of Harlingen, Stavoren, Enkhuisen, Dordrecht and Den Helder.

One pilot of a Hudson of the coastal command was cited particularly for "great gallantry" in an attack on two armed merchant ships off the Netherlands coast. Although his plane was hit and set afire, the communique said, the flier "pressed home his attack" and his plane "eventually turned over and plunged headlong into the sea".

"Weather conditions were consistently bad, with low clouds and heavy rain storms restricting visibility," said an Air Ministry bulletin amplifying the communique.

"One early morning raider approaching Calais under cover of the clouds attacked a concentration of barges lying in one of the main basins. Two heavy calibre bombs aimed from a low level exploded among a group of 50 barges. Another hit a jetty and a fourth struck a large warehouse.

ITALIANS EXPEL CORRESPONDENT NEW YORK TIMES

Herbert Matthews Accused of Saying Italy Mixing in U.S. Presidential Election

SAY STORY UNPROVED

Rome, Oct. 7 (AP).—Herbert Matthews, Rome correspondent of the New York Times, has been asked to leave Italy, the Stefani News Agency reported today.

Stefani said the reason for the request was a dispatch by Mr. Matthews in which "it was falsely stated Italy was mixing in the United States presidential election and thus tended to disturb the relations between the two countries."

The dispatch for which Mr. Matthews was expelled was that read by President Roosevelt at his press conference. The correspondent said he was asked to leave not so much for what he wrote as for the political use made of it.

She is reported "making good progress" and is expected to be out again either today or tomorrow. The King yesterday attended church services alone.

Last April she suffered a stiff neck while accompanying the King on a tour of munitions works, but recovered quickly after treatment.

LAMBETH PALACE, HIT BY BOMBS, IS UNINHABITABLE

Archbishop of Canterbury Says Patience and Good Humor of People Defeat Nazis' Object

PEOPLE RESOLUTE

London, Oct. 7.— (CP)— Lambeth Palace, residential seat of the Archbishop of Canterbury, has been made uninhabitable by German bombs which fell some time ago, it was disclosed today.

The bombs forced the Archbishop and his staff to move to residence in Canterbury.

The entire central section of the Palace was struck on the River side by Nazi bombs.

The Archbishop disclosed the bombing at a Diocesan Conference. He voiced sympathy with persons who had lost their homes in air raids and said he spoke "in some measure as a fellow sufferer", since he had been bombed out at Lambeth.

Remarking that each night some 200 persons of the "poorest folk of Lambeth had taken shelter in an old crypt beneath the chapel of Lambeth Palace", the Primate said: "I only wish Hitler and Goering could see the astonishing patience, good humor and even cheerfulness of those people to realize the futility of their aims."

He said the main object of the German raids was "to spread the spirit of fear among the people", but the people "are defeating them every day by a counter spirit of unity, resolution and fortitude'.

Czech Workers Apparently Sabotaging German Bombs

Boston, Oct. 7 (AP)—London reports that Czecho-Slovak workers at the great Skoda Munitions Works apparently have been sabotaging German bombs, with the result that a surprising number of "duds" have fallen on London, were related Saturday by the wife of a British naval officer arriving here.

Mrs. Lillian Birkenhead of Chesire, wife of a destroyer commander, said London had heard "many reports lately about the extent of the apparent sabotage."

"The time bombs that were at first the most feared of, all are the ones that have chiefly convinced the experts that there's something wrong and that the Nazis have been tricked," she said.

London, Oct. 7 —(CP)— The Distinguished Service Medal for "gallantry and determination when ferrying troops from the beaches of Dunkerque" has been conferred upon Howard Knight, coxswain of the Ramsgate life boat, and Edward Palmer, coxswain of the Margate life boat.

U. S. Fully Awakened to Danger Of Nazi Aggression States L. Hunt

Toronto, Oct. 7.— The sober, determined voice of America says, "Hitler must go". This was the message given Canadians Sunday night by Lawrence Hunt, New York author and lawyer, speaking over a national network of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in the series, "Let's Face the Facts".

"You are now hitting your stride while we are still warming up," said Mr. Hunt, who spoke from Toronto at the invitation of the Director of Public Information at Ottawa.

"Some of you may have doubts about America doing her parts as a comrade-in-arms in this war", he said. "To ye of little faith . . . I can only say . . . the major facts show that America is on the march."

Congress, he said, had authorized the expenditure of more than $10,000,000,000 for armament, 16,000,000 men were registering for military training, and inside eighteen months the United States would have produced 33,000 planes, fighters and bombers for England and herself.

"Don't these facts seem more impressive than some of our puffing politicians and morally emasculated intellectuals?" he asked.

"Pulling Together"

The exchange of American destroyers for naval bases on Empire soil, he said was accompanied by "no false pride", no face-saying devices, no flag-waving phrases—just a practical example of friendly English-speaking neighbors working smoothly and effectively together. John Bull and Uncle Sam are pulling together as never before. And they are an unbeatable team".

The United States, he said, would never be able to pay its debt to the British people in this war, a debt incurred not only because the British were hurling back the Nazis day and night, while the United States prepared. "More than that. They (the British) have taught us that democracy can be tough".

He said: "I know and you know and even Herr Hitler knows that Americans will do their share—do it the American way—'down the line'—as Americans have always done when conscious of their duty and danger."

Americans last April had thought they could all settle down snugly behind the Maginot Line, and the British Fleet, and "wait until the Germany Army got tired of the war or the German people revolted against their hated masters, or Hitler fell downstairs and broke his neck . . . so we lived in a fairyland of wishful thinking."

The awakening was with a bang, he said, but after Dunkirk "In that night of defeat and disaster a tiny star of faith and hope was born. England could 'take it' as she always has done. My fellow citizens began once again to feel like Americans.

"Free men still knew how to fight for freedom. We were getting fed

Nazi Sources Hint Protection of Oil Field is Motive

Nazis State Britain Has Designs on Baku But City is Hundred Miles East of Rumania

Berlin, Oct. 7.—(AP)—Nazi sources said today that Germany has sent armed contingents into Rumania as a "precautionary" measure in accordance, it is claimed, with the "guarantee" given Rumania at the conclusion of the Vienna agreement August 30 which returned part of Transylvania to Hungary.

"We haven't forgotten British designs on Baku and other oil points", these sources said in hinting that military protection of oil fields is the prime motive in sending troops into Rumania.

(Baku, however, is in the Soviet Caucasus, on the Caspian sea and hundreds of miles to the East of Rumania.)

These sources took the position that present movements of troops correspond with an understanding reached some time ago and are not provoked by any special act of the moment.

They refused to state the size of German contingents, but said that a German General (whose position might make him commander of any force from a brigade to a field army) is in Rumania. Correspondents were not permitted to identify the officer.

No reason was given, but it was reported unofficially the hotel would be used to house a large staff of German officers who will supervise the construction of a base for warships and planes.

German official sources said some German and Italian experts were expected to come to Rumania to help train Rumanian troops.

May Build Large Base

Bucharest, Oct. 7.— (AP)—Reports were current in the Rumanian capital today that Germany is planning to assist in building a large naval and airplane base on the Black Sea near Mamaia, in constructing a wide highway east and west across Rumania and enlarging the submarine factory and base at Galati.

Government circles were silent on the reports.

It was announced officially, however, that the general staff had ordered the propaganda ministry to move out of the Rex Hotel at Mamaia, seaside resort north of Constanta, Rumania, chief Black Sea port. The propaganda ministry owns the hotel.

Turkish-British Economic Accord Almost Completed

Istanbul, Turkey, Oct. 7—(AP) —The newspaper La Republique said today that negotiations in Ankara for a new Turkish-British commercial accord have been almost completed and that Britain will take over a number of storehouses in Istanbul for storage.

(An exchange telegraph agency dispatch from Istanbul to London Sunday reported the accord has been completed).

It was reported unofficially that the British fleet will convoy British freighters to take care of the expected increase of trade.

C.W.L. REALIZES $390 ON TAG DAY

Officials of the Catholic Women's League expressed grateful appreciation today of the fine response of the general public to their tag day held on Saturday when the sum of $390 was realized for the war work of the organization.

"We wish to tender our thanks to all those who assisted in any way, and also to the people of Belleville and district for their nice response to our appeal for funds," an official said.

HARVEST FESTIVAL IS CELEBRATED

The annual harvest festival in connection with the parish of the Church of St. Thomas was observed yesterday and many parishioners were present at the services. The interior of the church was attractively decorated with flowers, fruits and grains and the special music was well rendered by the choir. The rector, the Rev. Rural Dean A. Beauchamp Payne, conducted all the services.

PRELIMINARY HEARING INTO ACCIDENT CA REOPENS AT MADOC

The preliminary hearing into charges of criminal negligence preferred by the Crown against Edward A. Kelleway, following an accident near Millbridge on Aug. 17th, when Mrs. Jessie Allore, Trenton, was instantly killed and four Belleville residents injured, was opened today in Madoc with Magistrate J. L. Lloyd presiding. County Crown Attorney Gordon Robertson conducted the hearing with E. Ormonde Butler appearing for the accused.

LABOR SHORTAGE IS TAKEN UP

With the exception of numerous laborers applying for work, all was quiet at the local employment bureau this morning. There were many applicants for work of this nature on file at the office, it was revealed, but very few inquiries for this kind of help, according to officials.

Apple pickers were in demand a week or so ago, stated Mr. Ross, but at that time there was a scarcity of laborers and these requests went unfilled. This morning there had been no inquiries for help of any kind, it was stated.

THEFTS OF APPLES BELIEVED SOLVED

What is believed by police to be the solution to a series of thefts of fruit from orchards in the vicinity of Wellington, Ont., two prominent residents of that village were arrested and charged with the thefts the other day. Both men were released on $5,000 bail and will appear this week for their hearing.

Disappearance of apples from the orchards of J. L. Ross, prominent Wellington fruit-grower, puzzled authorities for some time, and the arrest of the two men was the culmination of close investigation on the part of county police.

Police are of the opinion that the arrest of the men will solve the mystery of the disappearance of fruit from other orchards in the vicinity.

GRAPE GROWING IN DISTRICT INCREASES

Grape growing is increasing in popularity among Bay of Quinte farmers, according to Mr. Wiggins a Trenton orchardist attending Belleville market on Saturday who stated that within the past five years many acres of grapes had been planted in this district.

In some cases as many as five acres of grapes have been planted by individual orchardists, it was revealed, and many of these vines were now bearing fruit.

In the opinion of Mr. Wiggins, the local district is really adapted to growing this fruit, which ordinarily was associated solely with the Niagara Peninsula. Grapes grown near the Bay of Quinte will be on the market at least one week ahead of the Niagara product it was claimed, although this did not hold true during the present season as the weather in this district proved unfavourable for grape growing. This held true last season, however, and Mr. Wiggins predicts that the local district will in future, produce all grapes required for local consumption.

FINE CATCH OF BASS MADE BY LOCAL MEN

The bass in the Bay of Quinte may have been "ganging up" in a protest against certain insinuations that they have not been biting well of late, but they reckoned without the angling ability of Arthur Rawson, City Hall caretaker and his week-end fishing party. The boys came back with fourteen beauties that averaged three pounds each, and the story that the bass have not been biting so well all season as they did over the week-end.

N.C.O. INSTRUCTORS UNDERGO MEDICAL EXAMINATION SUNDAY

Non-commissioned officers of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment, the Argyll Light Infantry (Tank) and other N.P.A.M. units of the district, who have been selected to act as instructors for the 30-day period of training for draftees which starts on Wednesday, were in the city on Sunday undergoing a medical examination. Those who passed the required examination will leave today for the training camp where trainees of this district will undergo their first taste of military life.

NEW SCHOOL AT ERINSVILLE BLESSED

The new school at Erinsville was solemnly blessed on Sunday morning by Archbishop O'Brien, Kingston, in the presence of the congregation of that parish. Among the clergy present were Rt. Rev. J. F. Nicholson, V.G., and Very Rev. Dean Cullinane, Tweed. The school is a fine brick structure of three rooms and an auditorium.

Property Damage Results From Several Accidents

Several minor motor accidents were reported throughout the Belleville area over the week end resulting in considerable property damage, but no personal injuries.

Near Ivanhoe Sunday afternoon a motor car driven by Richard Forbes-Roberts, of the Trenton R.C.A.F. crashed into the corner of a fence after colliding with the rear of another car. Provincial Constable Patterson investigated and found that Forbes-Roberts was proceeding northerly following another automobile being driven by Charles W. Earle, of this city. In attempting to pass Earle's car, the airman's vehicle sideswiped the leading car and resulted in Forbes-Roberts' vehicle hurtling a ditch and crashing into a farmer's fence.

Two Cars Damaged Near O.S.D.

Two other automobiles were damaged in the vicinity of the O.S.D. on Highway No. 2 shortly before midnight Saturday night. Clarence Sager, 421 Bleecker Avenue, Belleville told Constable Patterson he was proceeding easterly on the highway when a motor car driven by M. S. Blanchard Montreal, drove out of the O.S.D. lane directly into the path of his car. Here again no serious injuries resulted, but both vehicles were badly damaged. The matter of damage was amicably settled and no charges resulted.

Car Sideswipes Bus

Damage to the amount of nearly $100.00 resulted to a motor car driven by Howard Lapalm, of this city, when the vehicle sideswiped a large Colonial bus west of Shannonville over the weekend. Motorcycle Patrolman Siple investigated and determined that apparently Lapalm had eased over slightly towards the centre-line of the road resulting in a sideswiping collision. Damage to the bus was minor.

Red Cross Donations Pass Half-Way Mark Of $8,000 Objective

Contributions to the local Red Cross campaign have been very good so far according to Mr. I. G. Hefkey, president of the Belleville branch, who stated on Monday morning that subscriptions donated up until Saturday had passed the half-way mark of the $8,000 objective planned for this district.

"We realize that people are possibly a bit shy of money at the present time but when Belleville residents realize the importance of the work done by the Red Cross and the amount of money, that it takes to carry on this work, we have not the slightest doubt but what they will give the necessary money to put us over our objective," stated Mr. Hefkey.

An up-to-date report of the campaign was not possible this morning, stated Mr. Hefkey, due to the fact that many of the canvassers had not given a report of their last week's collections, but when complete reports were in it was expected that collections would total considerably more than $4,000. The campaign will continue in the Belleville district until the objective of $8,000 had been reached, however, stated Mr. Hefkey, as he voiced the appreciation of the Red Cross for the support of local residents to date.

YOUNG BROTHERS DIE IN CAVE-IN

Kitchener Ont., Oct. 7—(CP)—Kenneth, 15 and Ryerson, 13, sons of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur A. Schade, suffocated to death some time during the night when a hut they were digging in a sand pit caved in and buried them alive.

The boys' bodies were found by their father early today after an all-night search by police failed to reveal their whereabouts.

They had been tunneling in the sand pit yesterday morning but were stopped by their father.

Yesterday afternoon the boys told their father they were going to the woods to gather walnuts.

Whether the boys went to the woods is not known. Dr. L. V. Lang, Coroner, said however, that they had died sometime Sunday. When they did not appear for supper last night, the mother informed police they were missing. There will be no inquest.

Band Concert Greatly Enjoyed

"There'll Always Be an England", the Empire's stirring battle-song proved a fitting climax to a highly enjoyable concert given by the Belleville Municipal Band under Lieut. Fred Jolson at the Capitol Theatre Sunday night. The band played an excellent program to a capacity house, and the coffers of the Ladies Auxiliary of the Belleville Branch of the Canadian Legion were enriched by the silver collection of $43.75. The money will be applied to the British Air Raid Victims Fund.

The blood-stirring melody of the song brought continued applause from the large audience, but it was not until Gunner James Burke, R.C.A., mounted the stage and in a fine baritone voice sang the words, did the audience really "go to town". They sang the chorus wholeheartedly and called the soldier-singer and the band back time after time.

Other highlights of the concert were two fine vocal solos by Miss Bernice Saunders, whose splendid voice was heard to advantage in "Tis Morning" and "Pardon me, Madame". Miss Saunders who is rapidly forging to the front as one of Belleville's favorite sopranos received a splendid ovation after her numbers. A humorous touch was injected into the program with readings by Mr. A. Walker of the R.C.A.F. whose renditions in the Lancashire dialect of the now famous "Albert and the Lion" and "Battle of Trafalgar" brought down the house.

The band was in splendid form, in spite of the cramped quarters of the stage. Their renditions of several marches, the overture "Norma", "Sounds from England", "My Hero", "The Bing Boys are Here" and other numbers received the well-merited acclaim of the audience.

Mr. P. C. MacLaurin, acted as chairman for the concert in his usual masterful style, while Leo Riggs provided the piano accompaniment for the vocal numbers. Members of the Ladies Auxiliary expressed appreciation of the generosity of the band, the theatre management and the artists for their fine contributions to a worthy cause.

TRENTON

Apartment House To Be Erected On Theatre Site

Trenton, Oct. 7—A landmark for nearly 30 years, the Capitol Theatre is being demolished to make room for a new apartment house. The Capitol Theatre was built in 1912 by Robert Weller and was known as the Weller House until 1932 when the name was changed to the Capitol Theatre. The building has not been in use for the past three years and the executors of the Weller estate have decided to tear down the building.

Blazing Mattress Endangers Children

Two children narrowly escaped serious burns on Saturday evening when they were playing with matches in their parents' home. The children, son and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Reid of Ferry St., were playing in an upstairs bedroom. In some manner the mattress caught fire and caused approximately $35 damage before the fire department could put out the blaze.

The children were able to escape from the room before the fire had made much progress and informed their mother of the fire. Fire Chief J. Baker sounded the alarm for the whole volunteer brigade to aid him in this fire.

TRANSPORTATION NOT DISLOCATED SAYS PRIESTLEY

No Evidence of Large-Scale Devastation of Vital Industries Says Speaker

WORKERS PRAISED

London, Oct. 7—(CP)—Although pressure of the war has hampered fast and efficient transportation in Britain, there has been no serious dislocation of transport facilities, J. B. Priestley, noted English novelist, said Sunday night in the British Broadcasting Corporation's "Britain Speaks" series.

Back on the nightly program after a tour of England, Priestley said that efforts of the enemy to damage transportation and other vital war services have failed.

"There has been no evidence of large-scale devastation of our large-scale industries," he said. "The sight of a damaged war factory or airdrome is a rarity."

While there was some difficulty in keeping railroad schedules, the delays were largely caused by the pressure of transporting men and materials and not by enemy action, he said.

Little Damage to Roads

"Air raids have done little damage to the railroads," he continued, "although they have the effect of keeping trains at a slow speed and causing delays."

Priestley paid tribute to the "splendid behavior" of British railway workers. "These men, who carry on their work at all times, even in the face of air raids, are real heroes," he declared.

He said that transportation by truck was somewhat complicated by the blackout and precautionary removal of road signs. Illustrating possible confusion caused by lack of lights and road signs, Priestley told of an incident on his trip, when "we thought we were in one town," but found the next morning we were in another, 50 miles away."

Thomasburg Youth Struck by Bullet

Struck by a bullet from the .22 calibre rifle in the hands of his brother Elmer, William A. Walker, Thomasburg youth, was taken to Belleville General Hospital early Sunday evening suffering from a severe flesh wound in his right side and breast.

The bullet entered the youth's back, and following the course of a rib in the right side stopped just below the surface of the skin in the right breast. It was extracted by Dr. George H. Stobie.

The youths were indulging in target practice near their home when the injured youth walked across the line of fire. His brother who had aimed the weapon at the target, pulled the trigger and William Walker fell to the ground with the pellet in his body.

He was rushed to Belleville Hospital and given treatment by Dr. Empson. Later the bullet was extracted by Dr. Stobie. Today Walker's condition was said by hospital authorities to be favorable.

Pennsylvania Men Charter Special Train For Fishing Trip

Expense didn't mean a thing to a group of Pennsylvania business executives, bankers and professional men when they decided to enjoy the fishing and vacation spots of Canada. They chartered a special railway engine coach and crew, and rode in style to the fishing grounds near Ottawa, and parts of the north country. They returned last night via Belleville, a happy enthusiastic group, well satisfied with their "good neighbors" the Canadians, and the treatment accorded them in this country.

POLICE COURT

Pte. Joseph Collins of the Midland Regiment stationed at Campbellford was convicted of assaulting and causing actual bodily harm to Harry Vechter, Front St., second-hand dealer, by Magistrate E. J. Butler, K.C., in today's police court.

Pte. Collins was alleged to have attacked and beaten Vechter after calling him "another Jew." The victim in the case stated in evidence today he was talking to Mr. Ben Sopher, a business associate, when he was hit in the face by Collins. Mr. Sopher and Pte. Thompson, who was also with Collins, substantiated Vechter's accusations. Crown Attorney S. Gordon Robertson presented the case and did not cross-examine the accused at length, His Worship imposing a fine of $5.00, plus $20.25 costs.

"This is a second offence for this man," revealed Chief Kidd after Garnett Stapley, Belleville, pleaded guilty to a charge of intoxication. In default of the payment of a $50.00 fine, Stapley was sentenced to one month in the county jail. Two other men and a Trenton woman appeared on charges of violations of the L.C.A., the woman pleading not guilty and her case was enlarged for one week.

In a subsequent session of the court held in camera, a local juvenile lad appeared on a charge of theft. As Dr. Doyle, the provincial mental physician from Kingston was in the city today, His Worship ordered the youth to appear before Dr. Doyle for examination.

Police Blotter

After a month of convalescing, following illness, Sergeant Arthur Harman returned to his accustomed post as night sergeant at the police station last night. Sergeant Harman, a veteran of some 30 years' service with the Belleville Police Department, reported for duty last night much improved in health.

Two bicycles were reported stolen in Belleville over the week-end, one of which was recovered. Gordon B. Roberts, 97 Station St., parked his bike near the C.N.R. station Saturday night and during his absence the bike was stolen. Robert Laughlin, Herchimer Ave., was more fortunate, however, as his bicycle was stolen but later abandoned and recovered by the police.

Residents on Water St. complained to police that money left in milk bottle for the payment of milk upon delivery was stolen during the night.

Houses Ransacked

Destructive juveniles are being blamed for the vandalism found inside of the old Holton residence on Charles St. The owner of the property, which has been closed for some months, recently discovered that mischievous boys were entering the premises and generally disrupting the house and destroying the fixtures.

Trenton police reported the theft of a 1928 blue-colored Pontiac sedan over the week-end.

Herbert Patterson, Trenton, parked his motor car at the rear of Kresges' store on Saturday night. During his absence sneak thieves stole three of the four hub caps from off the wheels of the vehicle.

Police were informed that a railway company seal had been broken off a box car load of peaches, which were being delivered to the Belleville Fruit Company siding. Entrance is not believed to have been effected, however.

Several inebriates, including one woman, were apprehended by the police and taken into custody over the week-end. Charges followed in each incident.

MUSSOLINI PAYS FLYING VISITS TO NORTH ITALY

Fascist Newspaper Predicts 'Something Big' as Result of Brenner Pass Talk

DUCE AT PADUA

Ansaldo in Count Ciano's Newspaper Says 'Diplomatic Step' May Follow Triple Pact

Rome, Oct. 7 (AP)—Premier Mussolini continued a flying inspection of Italian troops in northern Italy today as the Fascist press predicted that Friday's Brenner Pass meeting between Mussolini and Hitler is destined to result in "something big" in the way of military measures.

Landing first at Piacenza, Il Duce yesterday reviewed the Trieste motorized division which took part in the fighting against the French in little St. Bernard Pass last June. He piloted his own plane.

Next, he sped to Parma, where he reviewed the Littorio division of Blackshirts which participated in the Spanish civil war.

He was expected to review young volunteers encamped at Padua today.

There were reports Mussolini might make a speech at Padua, but official confirmation was lacking.

"Something Big" Says Fascist

Mario Appelius, commentator in Mussolini's paper, Il Popolo D'Italia, forecast "something big" would be the outcome of the Brenner Pass meeting. He said that "good sense" indicated Mussolini and Hitler discussed organization of the world without the British Empire and the means of getting rid of that Empire.

In a broadcast to Italian troops Giovanni Ansaldo, editor of Foreign Minister Count Ciano's newspaper Il Telegrafo, said decisions reached at the meeting "will be translated into facts . . . in a while."

Says Intervention Uncertain

Ansaldo also said "diplomatic steps" may be in preparation to block any possible United States intervention in the war.

Such intervention, he added "is more than ever uncertain, and that is due to the tri-partite pact signed in Berlin (by Germany, Italy and Japan)."

Appelius discussed the possibility of United States intervention but dismissed it with the statement that the United States is "not militarily ready." He said axis speed constituted a "great ally" to the people of the United States who do not want war.

On the fighting front in Egypt, the high command claimed Matruh was subjected to "violent and intense bombing with imposing results" on Saturday. The communique said one British plane "probably" was downed.

(Cairo said damage from the raid was light and that there were three casualties. Anti - aircraft fire brought down one Fascist plane and probably hit two others.)

The high command also claimed two British submarines had been sunk, one by an Italian submarine and one by mosquito boats.

(Their was no British confirmation of this claim.)

SAWS HIS WAY THRU STEEL BAR

Lawrence Reece Makes Escape From Burwash Industrial Farm

Sudbury, Ont., Oct. 7 (CP).—Regarded by police as a dangerous character, Lawrence Reece, 23, of Toronto escaped from the nearby Burwash Industrial Farm about noon yesterday after sawing his way to freedom through a heavy steel bar.

It was the third time he had made a bid for freedom. Previously he had been involved in a jail break at Toronto's suburban Mimico and another time he escaped from Burwash Reformatory for a brief period.

Prison officials said he apparently sawed through the bar while fellow prisoners screened his escape preparations by playing cards near him in the corridor. After breaking through a window, he let himself down to liberty by means of a rope made from prison blankets.

Officials said Reece was armed with a dagger fashioned from a table knife. They believed he obtained the saw for his work on the steel bar from the kit of workmen engaged on jobs about the farm.

He was sentenced at Welland last Mar. 13 to three years and nine months on charges of breaking and entering and theft as well as theft of an automobile.

Verdun Accepted In Que. Hockey Loop

Cornwall, Ont., Oct. 7 —(CP)— Officials of the Quebec senior hockey league at a meeting here Sunday voted to accept Verdun's application for membership in the league but turned down a similar request by Valleyfield.

Verdun's acceptance brought the number of teams now entered to seven.

George Slater, chairman at the meeting, announced tentative plans for a triple schedule in which each team would play 185 home games. He said a definite schedule could not be drafted as yet.

Referees will be appointed by the league president, Sylvio Mantha, former professional hockey player with Montreal Canadiens, suggested the league adopt the referee-linesman system in vogue in the National hockey league but delegates voted the suggestion down.

The seven teams are Montreal Royals, Montreal Canadiens, Concordia, Verdun, Quebec, Ottawa and Cornwall.

Fishermen to Pay Higher Prices for Linen Thread Nets

South Bay, Oct. 7 — Interesting momentoes of a very historic flight have been received by Willis Metcalfe of Point Traverse. Just recently Mr. Metcalfe received two first flight covers carried on the first South Pacific United States air mail flight between San Francisco and Noumea, New Caledonia. New Caledonia is a French island possession in the South Pacific Ocean off the east coast of Australia. The letters travelled about 12,000 miles and were carried by the California Clipper ship.

One of these covers carried on this memorable flight was a miniature Star Spangled Banner, which was also on the first Trans-Atlantic Air Mail flight between New York City and Marseille, France, May 20-22, 1939, and on the two flights has covered a 30,000 mile journey.

Higher Prices

Owing to war conditions, commercial fishermen who are contemplating purchasing new gill nets will pay higher prices for linen thread and it is a possibility that in the near future linen twine will not be available from dealers. Before the outbreak of the war, all linen thread that was used for local fishing gear came from Scotland, but due to restrictions placed on the shipment of any such twine, no more linen nets will arrive here. Dealers' prices on all twines have advanced within the past months, but cotton thread will be used to a larger extent as much of this is being put up by American firms. Linen thread used in the nets is of a very strong texture and will outlast cotton thread extra seasons, according to many fishermen.

News Briefs

Fishermen report that myriads of shad are still infesting their herring nets.

A. R. Kennedy Speaker at Observance Of Newspaper Week

Tweed — National Newspaper Week for Canadian Weeklies was duly recognized in Tweed on Thursday evening with a dinner at the Huyck House. Mr. A. R. Kennedy, editor of the Peterborough Examiner, was the guest speaker. Mr. S. R. Curry, editor of the Tweed News, officiated as chairman, while guests from out-of-town included Messrs. R. Woodley and John Trudeau of Belleville and Mr. Donald Kennedy, Peterboro, who were introduced to the merchants present by the chairman.

After the dinner which was enlivened by a group of popular songs with Mr. F. W. Clark as songleader and Mr. Art Leman at the piano, Mr. Curry said that it was felt by the editor of The Tweed News that a meeting of the advertisers and the editor of the local paper with an outside speaker would be to the mutual benefit of all concerned. The Tweed News in common with other weekly papers across Canada endeavoured to boost their communities by supporting any useful undertaking. These papers are a necessary part of every successful community.

Mr. Kennedy of the Peterborough Examiner, who has had a long and varied experience as a newspaper man in different sections of the province gave a very fine address. He complimented the business men on their splendid town, observing that it would be a good thing if there were more Tweeds in the country. Too many people, he said, huddle in large groups in the cities. In a whimsically reminiscent mood, Mr. Kennedy told of his early experience in the newspaper business when he received one dollar and fifty cents as his first week's pay, of the eggs and wood, the latter full of knots and water soaked oftentimes, that were brought in payment of advertising and sale bills.

In a more serious vein, the speaker said that a successful individual, or newspaper was that which was governed solely by the idea of whether the thing we were about to do was right or wrong. Nothing else mattered.

Speaking of the oft-heard criticism of merchants that modern highways and automobiles take business out of a town to other places, Mr. Kennedy reminded his audience that these roads run in both directions, and if merchants advertise their merchandise they can easily attract the business which passes them by.

A vote of thanks was tendered to Mr. Kennedy for his humorous and interesting address and to Mr. S. R. Curry who had arranged the dinner.

A number of local nimrods are taking full advantage of the perfect weather to enjoy the partridge hunting in this district. Open season in this area is for the first two weeks in October with a further two weeks in November. Partridge are numerous and the hunters have been successful in bagging a number of them.

Red Cross canvassers are meeting with the usual fine response that they have come to anticipate in Tweed and district. Already a considerable share of the town has been canvassed.

Messrs. F. W. Clark and Dr. W. A. Paul were on a duck-hunting expedition to the Rideau Lakes this week.

Mr. George Ketcheson of London, England, will return to England next week after spending the past two months with his family in Toronto and his brother, Mr. W. L. Ketcheson, Tweed.

Mr. and Mrs. W. K. McCaw and Mr. and Mrs. Geo. W. Thompson celebrated their 35th wedding anniversaries on September 27th. They received messages of congratulation from their friends and neighbours.

LABOR LEADER MEETS PREMIER

(By J. E. Holdsworth Canadian Press Correspondent

Sydney, Oct. 7 (CP Cable)—Prime Minister Menzies met today with John Curtin, Labor Leader, to discuss the possibility of establishing a National government following the recent elections which left the leading parties virtually deadlocked in parliament

The government is composed of the United Australian and Country Parties, with Labor in the opposition holding almost as many seats as the Coalition. Before the elections Labor refused to enter the government. Today's conference was called in the hope that the new situation, arising from the elections, might make possible a government of all parties, united to push the Commonwealth's war effort.

Australian political circles, meanwhile, welcomed news of the smooth development of Canada-United States defence plans and expressed the hope that this would help toward a similar Washington agreement in the Pacific which would embrace Australia, New Zealand, Malaya and Hong Kong.

Observers are watching closely developments arising from the new Rome-Berlin-Tokyo pact, and the press finds encouragement in week-end reports that the United States is standing firmly against Japan, and that there is no further likelihood of efforts to appease her.

200 Ships Every Week Arrive in England

Possibility National Gov't. Will be Formed in Australia

London, Oct. 7.—(CP)—Reuters News Agency said Sunday night that Great Britain has succeeded despite the war in supplying Argentina and Uruguay with their entire coal requirements.

Although no figures were given, Argentina's coal imports in the past have been more than 3,000,000 tons annually, practically all from Britain.

Reuters said as much of British shipping as possible has been diverted to the South American trade, millions of tons of vessels being engaged. Every ship carries coal outbound.

From South America, North America and Africa together, the agency said, 200 ships are arriving in Britain with valuable cargoes every week.

SHE BOUGHT TEN EVENING GOWNS A YEAR

MISS W. WAS A WARM-ROOM OFFENDER

SCIENTIFIC FACTS ABOUT "B.O."

MISS W. was one of the best-dressed women in town. People who didn't know her wondered why romance always passed her by . . . Her dressmaker knew the reason.

For all of us must perspire to live. Warm, stuffy rooms increase perspiration. Left on the body, sweat deposits go stale—decompose. Then YOU have "B.O."

Check "B.O." before it starts by using Lifebuoy regularly. Lifebuoy contains an exclusive deodorizing ingredient not found in any other leading toilet soap. Used in your daily bath Lifebuoy stops "B.O."; its rich purifying lather washes stale perspiration deposits away—protects you from offending others.

The adult skin has 2 to 3 million sweat glands which act as a cooling system, giving off from 1 to 3 pints of perspiration daily—even when we are sitting still. If perspiration stopped, we would die from hyperpyrexia (heat stroke).

Because much of the water in perspiration evaporates, we do not see or feel it—especially during this changeable weather. Heated rooms, lack of fresh air and heavy clothes quickly decompose this sweat deposit—turn it stale—cause offensive "B.O." (Body Odor).

"I'D BE GLAD TO LOSE HER BUSINESS JUST TO TELL HER WHAT I THINK OF HER PERSONAL HABITS."
"...BUT YOU COULD JUST MENTION LIFEBUOY, COULDN'T YOU?"
"I'VE GOT THE ONLY MAN IN THE WORLD FOR ME. TO HAVE AND TO HOLD FOREVER!"

FIRE PREVENTION WEEK

By Proclamation of His Excellency the Governor General of Canada, the week of October 6th to 12th has been set aside as Fire Prevention Week. This week provides an annual occasion to impress upon public consciousness the enormous cost of the fire waste, to the end that conditions may be improved and fire carelessness reduced.

The world has passed through a year of the second Great War and we have all read accounts of the devastation and havoc that has been wrought by means of incendiary and high explosive bombs and we are shocked by the details of such accounts. Yet in the twenty years since Fire Prevention Week was first established in Canada, this country has recorded more than 800,000 fires involving a property loss of over $726,000,000 and a loss in human lives of more than 7,700. Our complacency in this respect is only matched by the complacency with which we watched Hitler attain power.

Fire is no respecter of persons. Every man has a responsibility towards his neighbours and that responsibility should cause every right-thinking person to pause and consider what he owes the community in which he lives. We owe it to ourselves but in a greater degree to our fellow-citizens to permit no condition to exist upon our premises that will invite a visitation of fire.

Cities and towns, like individuals, reap what they sow. To permit the erection of fire-traps, to fail to provide an abundant and reliable water supply and means of using it or to fail to apply the everyday rules of fire prevention, is to constantly face a menace of heavy fires and sweeping conflagrations.

The Dominion Fire Prevention Association in co-operation with provincial fire marshals, local fire chiefs, insurance organizations and other organizations of national scope is constantly working in the furtherance of the aims of Fire Prevention. Are you doing your part?

AUTUMN'S RICH TAPESTRY OF COLORING

Autumn has come and changed the green of the foliage into the rich tapestry of yellow and brown with background of green leaves yet undyed and the hazy skies of October. "Autumn's fire burns slowly along the woods." "It is autumn laden with fruit and stained with the blood of the grape." "These are yellow, mellow ripened days, sheltered in a golden coating."

As Will Carleton says:

"O'er the dreamy listless haze,
White and dainty cloudlets floating;
Winking at the blushing trees,
And the sombre summer fallow;"

Or as Oliver Wendell Holmes says of the birdless trees:

"The summer's throbbing chant is done,
And mute the choral antiphon;
The birds have left the shivering pines
To flit among the trellised vines;
Or fan the air with scented plumes
Amid the love-sick orange blooms,
And thou art here alone, —alone,—
Sing, little bird! The rest have flown."

Autumn is the month of high festival even if it is the month of poetic musings on the departing leaves, flowers and birds. It is the time of the woodland, it is the season for the hunter, it is the time of lovely pictures of nature, the wains laden with the produce of the fields proudly drawn by horses into the granaries, barns and fruit cellars.

HITLER IN A MOOD

What was preoccupying the mind of the man who has risen on the foundation of Potsdam to make him sullen or irritable? He, of course, had no victory to think over and to chat over with his companion dictator.

Was Hitler annoyed by Italy's lack of real achievements in the Mediterranean? Was he under a cloud because his prestige had dropped with his lack of achievement against Britain? Is not the future much more ominous for him than when he violently outraged the peace of the world just thirteen months ago?

If Hitler is irritable today, what will he be in the days ahead which will relentlessly impress upon the dictators their insane folly!

A TEN-TO-ONE SHOT AGAINST THE GERMANS

H. G. Wells, one of the most dynamic figures in the intellectual life of Britain, who in a way suggests Mr. Churchill, the dynamic Prime Minister who heads the democratic struggle against the powers of aggression, thinks the Germans are getting to the end of their tether. He sees that the Nazis have failed where they hoped to end the war—in Flanders. He tells of evidences of German weakness in the numbers of enemy planes shot down and the numbers of boys known to be in the downed German planes.

Wells is typical of the British attitude. He regrets not having been in Britain recently during the most severe air bombardments for he had managed to sleep through most of the raids. He is another Briton, one of those whom Hitler terrorism cannot faze.

Wells, the writer of a monumental history of the world, can speak for Britain. Asked on arrival in America what he thought would be the result on America if Germany won, "I will not consider that possibility," he said. "If death overtakes the world what would be the use of thinking about anything?"

That is the spirit of the British people. That is the spirit that is behind Hitler's disappointment for it is the spirit which has made Britain invulnerable and made the Fuehrer but a mad dreamer who has been, or will soon be, disillusioned.

Answers to the Axis

It has not taken long for the American people to understand the primary purpose of the German-Italian-Japanese pact as it affects the United States. This purpose is to retard American help to Great Britain. The method chosen is to frighten us by the threat of simultaneous war in the Atlantic and the Pacific if we carry our help to Great Britain much farther. The attempt at intimidation is so obvious that it is bound to fail. The American people see clearly the immeasurable importance of a British victory, for the sake of all that they hold dear. They will see it all the more clearly now, when three predatory Powers, the avowed foes of the American way of life, not only seek to divide Europe, Asia and Africa among themselves, but also incite Latin America, by promises of "support," to permit totalitarian penetration into the New World.

But there are three other major Powers besides ourselves to whom the Pact of Berlin poses immediate decisions. The first of them is Great Britain, which must decide whether to reopen the Burma Road, the chief artery of supplies to China from the outer world; the second is Russia, another potential source of supplies for China; the third is China herself, still battling heroically in the fourth year of her war with Japan, and until now the greatest obstacle to Japan's expansion into the East Indies and to the English-speaking Commonwealth below the Equator.

The importance of Chinese resistance was fully known to the British when they decided to close the Burma Road early this Summer. But the British feared also that they could not rely on support from us in case Japan should regard any British help for China as a "provocation." Japan needs only an excuse which is always easy to manufacture. The only thing that has held Japan back from attacking British possessions in the East is the lack of power; and this, in turn, is conditioned by the extent to which China can keep Japan involved.

Russia now has a similar decision to make, but her choice is more perilous. For Russia is now caught between two potential enemies, on her German and Japanese frontiers. The pact between Berlin and Tokyo is the very thing which Stalin thought he had avoided by his pact of death with the Germans last year. The controlled press in Moscow now gives prominence to the news of Anglo-American cooperation in Europe and Asia; there is talk elsewhere of a new alignment between London, Moscow and Washington which would send a flood of new supplies into China. But Russia is no longer as free as formerly in her Chinese policy. Every development of Russian policy for the past year has shown the dread in the Kremlin of an open clash with Germany. That dread may well have been redoubled by the Berlin pact of last week; and Russia may be forced to abandon her help to China, with miserable "compensation" for herself in Persia and Afghanistan.

Whatever Russia may decide, however, China shows no sign of weakening. Already she has immobolized great masses of Japanese troops; she has inflicted a million Japanese casualties and strained the Japanese war machine so that it has been unable to launch a major operation elsewhere. Only yesterday came the news from China that General Chiang Kai-Shek has ordered troops into Indo-China to fight the Japanese invaders on their chosen ground. The Pact of Berlin may yet strengthen Chinese resistance if it leads to the opening of the Burma Road and to further measures of help such as the loan announced in Washington last week.

There are undoubted perils to us in the Axis pact, but they can be lessened or nullified if the United States sees its course clearly. After all, there are still greater perils to us in letting the world be divided at the pleasure of totalitarian conquerors. We have learned, as the British have learned, that we cannot buy security by cynical deals with nations which have shown that no treaty obligations, no promises, will deter them. We can do it only by making sure that both aggressors—all three, if Italy is included—shall be pinned down now and prevented from extending their depredations to our own hemisphere. Increased help for Britain and for China should be the anchors of our policy for the self-defence of the Western world.—New York Times.

Keeping Fit For Any Work or Play

When we were young, the word 'exercise' was not in general use. We simply went outdoors to play. In the gymnasium we would patiently go through the calisthenic exercises—free hand or with dumb bells or clubs—waiting for the period when we could play a group game such as basketball or volley ball, or do some individual work on the apparatus. All this was done for fun or enjoyment, not with the idea of taking exercise to benefit our health.

For years exercise to many men and women has meant golf with its couple of miles of walking, climbing, stooping, and hitting the ball. Tennis, a more strenuous game, is more popular, and rightly so, with younger men and women.

However in Europe and Great Britain the old fashioned and none too popular exercise to cause fitness has in recent years been backed or supported by the government because fitness for work or play means much to the health and morale of a people.

Dr. E. P. Cathcart, University of Glasgow, in the British Medical Journal states that "national fitness" means the building up of a healthy human beings, well balanced physically, mentally and emotionally who will be fully capable of adjusting themselves to their immediate surroundings, be it of work or play.

"People must want to be fit. They must be prepared to pay the price, but many want the final result without the necessary effort". As a matter of fact, the most important point about acquiring fitness is 'regularity', regularity of exercise, of eating hours, and of sleeping hours.

In regard to exercise, the average individual can get all the exercise necessary by attending gymnasium classes three times a week or taking systematic setting up exercises, of ten minutes, at home daily. A daily walk should be a regular habit.

Regular exercise strengthens heart and lungs, keeps blood vessels more elastic—postponing high blood pressure— aids digestion, prevents constipation by stimulating the flow of bile, and keeps the body springy and erect.

He Hurried

The scene of this little drama of business is the home office of abig manufacturing company. The switchboard girl got two incoming calls momentarily crossed, so the vice-president of the company briefly heard the voice of his sales manager before being connected with the right party (a party named Miss Smith, whom he was to take to the Cafe Pierre that evening). Asking Miss Smith to wait a moment, the vice-president dashed out to the switchboard and said to the operator, "If you've still got Jones (Jones is the sales manager) on the wire, ask him to step up to my office right away." "All righty," said the switchboard girl.

This was at nine-thirty in the morning. At five-thirty that afternoon Jones appeared in the vice-president's office "Well, you took your time about getting here. I sent you a message early this morning," the vice-president said. "I came as fast as I could," Jones said rather sulkily. "After, all, I was in Georgia."—New Yorker.

German Public Fed on Myths

Recently public attention has been focussed on the conflicting claims of the British and German commands, in the matter of air activities, by a graphic radio description of an attack on a convoy and by an American newspaperman's eyewitness account of a German raid on the south coast of England.

The German radio stated that, in the first instance, four merchantmen were seriously damaged, ten British fighters were shot down and only one German plane was lost. Actually no ships were hit, writes a staff officer of R.C.N. in Hamilton Spectator. One German bomber and two German fighters were brought down, while the rest made off. The ten Hurricanes and Spitfires reported destroyed must refer to one Hurricane that came home for ammunition. No British planes were lost.

The second case was treated similarly. The German radio claimed that three merchantmen, totalling 17,600 tons, were sunk; one cruiser, one destroyer and four merchantmen were severely damaged, some of them being set on fire. They admitted the loss of two planes, but claimed four Hurricanes. The facts were that one ship of 799 tons was sunk and one escort vessel received damage to her starboard engine as a result of a near miss. That, however, did not prevent her from reaching port safely, together with the rest of the convoy. Seven German planes were definitely destroyed and only one Hurricane was lost.

Why do Germans repeat, day after day, these claims of non-existent air successes? There are two basic reasons. (1) Germany has always feared sea power because she has been restrained by it, and has never been able to use it herself to the extent she desired. (2) Germany has concentrated on air power as the only means of defeating Great Britain. During the last war Germany had a powerful navy which she could not make effective; during this war she has a small navy and must find some other weapon to combat the British Fleet. The British Fleet must be destroyed, not only for military reasons, but also because it is what Germany hates most in the British Empire. A constantly recurring phrase in German conversation and writing for decades has been: "If it weren't for the British Navy."

• • •

Germany's air force must gain the mastery of the seas if she is to win. This fact is realized in Germany more clearly than anywhere else in the world, for they have unpleasant memories of the effect of sea power on the result of the last war. Germany also realizes that the whole world is watching anxiously the contest between air and sea power. If aeroplanes are superior to men-of-war, the British Isles will fall; if not, Germany will fall. Hence, from the German view, air power must be superior, for in their country the only crime is failure.

German aircraft and German propaganda set out on a well-planned campaign to master the British Navy. It will be recalled that they practised on fishing snacks and lightships before working up to their larger targets. Then followed an "orgy of destruction" upon battleships, cruisers and destroyers, with an occasional aircraft carrier or shore establishment thrown in for good measure. It seemed as if a squadron could be annihilated by one or two aircraft "laying their eggs" at leisure. Gradually, all our warships "disappeared." A few stubborn ones, like the Ark Royal, Warspite and Glasgow, rose again from the deep to be "disposed" of by the Italian air force. If Germany had sunk all the naval units she claimed, there would be no reason to procrastinate about invading England because there would be no navy left.

The result hoped for was that all those countries that had feared Great Britain, because of her navy, would take heart. One country did, and is continuing the work by "bombing" the navy out of the Mediterranean, although leaving a trail of its own naval units behind. According to the German and Italian reports, the British Navy has been forced into hiding at Alexandria and Gibraltar by Italian aircraft, and even "those bases are rendered practically valueless."

Another result aimed at was to alienate from Britain those countries who had benefited from the British Navy. The numerous air attacks on Scapa Flow, prior to the invasion of Norway, were meant to influence the Scandinavian countries just as much as to cripple the warships. Both North and South America are deluged with propaganda to the effect that Britains cause is hopeless because her fleet has been overcome.

• • •

It may not be generally known that efforts to sink old, undefended battleships by bombs have been made by Britain and the United States. The results were most unsatisfactory, as far as aircraft were concerned. One ship was finally sunk, but two others had to be destroyed by other means. This being the case, is it likely that a battleship in action would be sunk? The height of wishful thinking was reached when the Germans reported that the Warspite had been sunk in two minutes after being hit by bombs! The Warspite is still afloat, as the Italians well know, and in any case it would require more than two minutes to sink a battleship by any means.

Germany claims to be blockading the British Isles by sea and air. Submarines and aircraft sink ships by torpedo or bombs, or lay mines in shipping lanes. Submarines alone can not be decisive nor can mines, as has been effectively proved. But the argument runs, if aircraft can cripple the navy, convoys cannot be formed, submarines can operate unopposed and merchantmen will prove an easy prey. Hence they endeavour to convince the world that aircraft has driven British shipping from the seas, or at least into the paths of the U-boats and mines. If this were true, the British Isles would be short on materials and food. There would be no equipment for the services, no new aeroplanes, no food. But this is not true, as is proved, not only by official statements, but by the thousands of communications that reach Canada every week. If Britain were being blockaded, as the Germans hope, there would be ample intimation of that in the letters from the troops in England.

It must be remembered that German news and propaganda are meant for home consumption as well. As has already been stated, the Germans must be told encouraging things about the failure of the British Navy, which most of them fear. Any one who has read Mein Kampf knows Hitler's opinion of people en masse, and of how they can be controlled by propaganda. If Germans thought that the British Navy was still effective —remember they receive no outside news—they would be, to put it mildly, unhappy. So their loving Fuehrer not only conforts them by "sinking" our ships, but also emboldens the people for an attack on Britain, and thus brightens his own halo. They don't feel so hungry or blockaded when they are told that the people in the British Isles are much hungrier and much more blockaded.

German pilots have been found to hold an astonishing view of their omnipotence. Before the war it was conclusively shown in theory that bombs could sink ships. Tests carried out on vessels proved entirely satisfactory and gradually the conviction grew that bombs were superior to armour plate. This is one of the main reasons why Germany built such a large air force. Planned propaganda spread the glad tidings and maintained the belief. When war broke out, this conviction had become almost a faith, and many "sinkings" are explained by the fact that a pilot sunk a warship simply because he dropped several bombs in her general direction. There is of course, also the question of prestige—it is pleasant to get the Iron Cross for sinking a battleship. "After all," says the airman, "it was a ship and I dropped bombs. It may have been a battleship, and, of course, I sank it." Thus another headline is born. And even if there are no reports to go on, there is a program that must be carried out. The public must have action — so give it to them. What better action could be desired than a few more British warships going to that favorite destination of German radio announcers: "Daily Jones' Locker"?

Another interesting insight into German propaganda on behalf of the air force, is gained from the study of their reports of British raids. It will be recalled that the battleship Scharnhorst was reported seriously damaged by bombs (Note that she wasn't reported sunk, although six hits were claimed.) The Scharnhorst got back to port, went into floating dock for repairs and was bombed again. We have not merely the airman's word for this: aerial photography and reconnaissance observations show her to be still in the same place, and there she will remain for months. Now what does the German radio say? Curiously enough, they think it worth while devoting several hundred words to an explanation of how the Scharnhorst suffered no damage and had shot down a dozen planes that had ventured to attack her.

• • •

There is an interesting story behind Germany's anti-aircraft defences. During the Spanish Civil War the Loyalists were forced to use as anti-aircraft guns French 75's and other field artillery — obviously a purpose for which they had never been intended. Franco's army had proper weapons of Swedish, German and Italian make. In addition the Loyalist planes were inferior in quality and armament to those of the great experimenter. The net result was that the Germans obtained an exaggerated idea of the value of guns as a method of defence, and so they concentrated on guns in Germany, to the exclusion not only of butter, but also of fighter planes and, more important of pilots trained to fly under all conditions. In many cases the R.A.F. meets no fighter opposition during raids on Germany, and it has been satisfactorily proved that the most effective defence against an aeroplane is a better aeroplane. The daily German report, therefore, contains it element of chagrin, for they see our bombers causing more destruction than is generally realized, partly because Goering's bombers soar only in the dark.

PLANE PRODUCTION 12 TIMES GREATER THAN BEFORE WAR

Canadian Production Will be Tripled Again Within Year Says Deputy Air Minister

Toronto, Oct. 7—(CP)—Canada's average rate of production of aircraft now is twelve times greater than before the war began, and within a year it will be tripled again, James S. Duncan, Deputy Minister for Air, said in an address prepared for delivery today to a joint meeting of service clubs under auspices of the Canadian Club of Toronto. Mr. Duncan said that production of the aircraft industry before hostilities was worth not more than $1,000,000 annually, and less than 1,000 men were employed.

"With the outbreak of war, it became necessary to throw Canada's aircraft production into high gear," he said. "Many millions of dollars have been spent on capital facilities including both plant and tooling. Orders totalling over $100,000,000 have been placed for aircraft, many more are yet to come. Ten thousand men now find employment in our aircraft factories throughout this Dominion and within 12 months this number will be doubled.

"In the three months ending Sept. 30 our factories have turned out planes at an average monthly rate largely in excess of the yearly production of pre-war days, and within a year this figure will be multiplied by three."

'Beyond Expectations'

Mr. Duncan said Canada's war effort in the air is proceeding at a pace "well beyond our most optimistic expectations.

"At this moment," he said, "we have more men overseas, more men on home defence, more men in training, more schools in operation, more airdromes constructed, more buildings ready for occupation than were contemplated in our original plans."

The Deputy Air Minister said Canada today is producing as many planes each month, per head of population, as the United States.

Mr. Duncan described the British Commonwealth Air Training Plan as "Canada's greatest single enterprise" in the war effort.

Emulate Men of R.C.A.F.

He appealed to Canadians to "give of ourselves unstintingly," emulating the spirit of the young men in the Royal Canadian Air Force.

"Our country lacks no defiance nor valor in its young men," he said. "If we lack anything, I think it is rather in an adult realization of the task confronting us.

"Let each one of us resolve that whatever the sacrifices may be, they will be cheerfully and eagerly borne, that whatever has to be given will be given with both hands as befits those participating in a crusade."

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE—

And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

The liver should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily. If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You get constipated. Harmful poisons go into the body, and you feel sour, sunk and the world looks punk.

A mere bowel movement doesn't always get at the cause. You need something that works on the liver as well. It takes those good, old Carter's Little Liver Pills to get these two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up". Harmless and gentle, they make the bile flow freely. They do the work of calomel but have no calomel or mercury in them. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills by name! Stubbornly refuse anything else. 25c.

Bomb Splinters From Battle of Britain

By Louis V. Hunter Canadian Press Staff Writer.

The steel helmet—it's been dubbed the "battle bowler"—is the fashion hat of the moment and if the shape is uniform the color schemes are anything but.

The services still prefer a dull, matt-surfaced khaki but the civilian defence organizations paint their tin hats in many gay, distinctive ways. Some have scarlet bands with monograms emblazoned in green and gold on the front. Black is a popular color, too.

It took a war to do this. In a southeast coast town where the sirens sound several times daily, a young couple vary the daily routine by exchanging jobs one day a week The husband doesn't mind doing the housekeeping and cooking and looking after the two children, "but I should not like to exchange jobs permanently — it's too much like work".

The wife attends to some of her husband's typing and deals with many of his routine jobs

Two Brighton children who were in a theatre struck by a bomb were missing for several hours afterwards and worried parents had an anxious time until the pair returned.

"Weren't you at the theatre?" asked the overjoyed mother.

"Certainly," replied the children. But they gave us back our money and we went to another show."

Deaf and dumb people in Southampton are wearing large luminous badges to protect them during blackout hours. The Hants and Isle of Wight Deaf and Dumb Association has distributed free hundreds of the badges, specially designed and bearing the word "deaf" on a luminous background.

The all clear sirens are sounding now for one minute instead of two. It is a move designed to reduce the strain on peoples' nerves. The alert was cut to one minute recently.

Rising Tide of Famine in Europe Will Constantly Grow More Acute

Solution of Problem Will Require "Co-operation" Not "Controversy" Says Herbert Hoover

SHORTAGE FORECAST

New York, Oct. 7 (AP).—The "rising tide of famine" among Europe's conquered civilians "will constantly grow more vivid," says Herbert Hoover, and the solution of the problem will require "co-operation" instead of "controversy".

In a statement commenting on the opposition of a number of Americans to any plan which would directly or indirectly "strengthen the enemies of democracy", the former president expressed belief that no one wishes to do anything which "would injure the British cause".

On the other hand, he said that where it is possible to alleviate distress "without strengthening the conqueror and so p[illegible]longing his conquest, every impulse would prompt the American people to seek to do so."

He said the problem arose from the appeals of Belgians, Dutch, Norwegians and the Poles of central Poland for an agreement by which they could import food with their own money from other parts of Europe and from overseas "with an international organization supervising the operation and protecting their supplies from the occupying armies."

"Such an agreement would of necessity have to be made by some third party with the British on the one hand and the Germans on the other."

Shortage Is Forecast.

Washington, Oct. 7 (AP).—The United States Agriculture Department forecast today a difficult food situation in Europe this winter, particularly in Belgium, France and former Poland.

"Germany, Austria and former Czecho-Slovakia apparently have sufficient food on hand or in sight to supply such quantities as consumers will be permitted to purchase under existing rationing regulations," a foreign agricultural relations statement said.

"With rigid application of rationing it is believed that Italy will be able to pass th[illegible]gh the winter with a margin of safety."

As for France, Belgium and Poland, the department said the situation was complicated by "the existing inequality in the distribution of total available food supplies among individual countries."

"The German Reich, it is indicated," the statement continued, "possesses the key to such distribution since it has larger food reserves than any of the other countries and since it exercises in addition military or economic control over a large part of the European continent."

Prime Minister To Make Statement On Burma Road

London, Oct. 7 (CP). — Well-informed circles said today that Prime Minister Churchill may make a statement in parliament soon on the question of reopening the Burma Road for transportation of supplies to China.

When questioned about reports that Mr. Churchill would make such a statement, a spokesman smiled and replied "it's not impossible".

Japanese actions, the spokesman continued, have nullified "the whole point of the agreement to keep the road closed three months while an attempt was made to relax the sentiment between our two countries and reach a settlement of some of the difficulties to good relations".

Instead of this, "quite a fair amount of progress has been made in the opposite direction," he observed.

"The Japanese have gone into Indo-China with obvious intent to attack China from yet another direction," the spokesman continued. "And they have associated themselves with countries who are our enemies in a so-called pact."

The three months closure of the Burma road expires Oct. 17.

Spending Record For U. S. Fiscal Year Reaches Huge Total

Washington, Oct. 7—(AP)—The United States treasury expects the current fiscal year to produce a peacetime spending record of $13,000,000,000, and a deficit of about $5,760,000,000. The fiscal year ends June 30.

The anticipated total expenditure would be the second highest in United States history, yielding only to the first Great War fiscal year 1939 when the outlay reached $18,522,895,000.

Officials contrasted the new outlook with the $8,424,191,570 spending budget President Roosevelt submitted in January, before the huge defence program materialized.

President Roosevelt's requests for defence money last January totalled only $3,539,445,160. Now current estimates on actual expenditures for that purpose ran around $5,750,000,000, including the cost of conscription. This compares with less than $5,000,000,000 spent in the first year of the first Great War and is surpassed only by the $11,000,000,000 in the last year of the war.

MAN QUESTIONED AFTER BODY OF WOMAN FOUND

Toronto Police Seek to Solve Mystery of Death of 22-Year-Old Finnish Woman

MISSING A WEEK

Toronto, Oct. 7—(CP) — Hugh Alexander Newell, 27, of Toronto, an aircraftman in the Royal Canadian Air Force at St. Thomas and veteran of the Russo-Finnish war, was held for questioning last night as Toronto police sought to solve the mystery surrounding the discovery earlier of the body of Newell's 22-year-old Finnish wife, Aune, in a secluded spot on Toronto Island.

Police said they also were holding Newell's friend, Elna Lehto, 24, also Finnish, as a material witness.

Mrs. Newell's body was found hidden by high bushes and covered with branches with one of her own silk stockings tightly knotted about her neck. She had been missing a week.

Dr. I. H. Erb, pathologist, who conducted the post-mortem examination, said that death was due to strangulation but there were no marks to indicate the woman had been stunned before the stocking had been drawn about her neck.

Estranged from Wife

Police said they were puzzled how both of the stockings had been removed without any indications of violence and why both had been removed when only one was used to strangle the woman.

Police said Newell had been estranged from his wife and had been trying to induce her to hand over custody of their two-year-old son, Billie, to Miss Lehto. The child now is being cared for by relatives at Vineland, Ont.

Miss Lehto told police at headquarters that she had registered in the national registration as Mrs. Newell, explaining that she had been given to understand that such a course was proper since she was living with him as his common-law wife.

Not Reported Till Wednesday

Police said that although Newell's wife had been missing a week, they had not received a report until last Wednesday when the woman's roommate, Torwakki Hakamies notified headquarters. They had questioned Newell Saturday night about his wife's whereabouts.

In that first questioning, before the body was found, Newell told police the last time he had seen his wife was a week ago yesterday when he had taken her to dinner and they had separated in downtown Toronto. Miss Hakamies told police the last time she had seen her roommate was when she left for the dinner engagement with her husband.

Police said they found among Mrs. Newell's belongings a letter which Newell apparently had written to her Tuesday after he had returned to St. Thomas.

Shoe Led to Discovery

The letter was quoted in part as follows: "Why did you intend to come if you didn't intend to see me? It's as much in your interest to fix everything up as it is mine. If you won't see me at least write me out a paper signing over Billie to me You said that I could have him, so why go back on your bargain?"

Finding of a s[illegible]e on an island pathway led to discovery of the body, police said. It was carefully concealed and fully clad except for shoe and stockings.

Newell was the only Canadian who went to Finland last January with a large group of Finns to assist in the defence of the country at the time of the Russian invasion. He returned to Toronto last April 5 and told of being wounded in the war.

Miss Vera Gray, sister of the groom, as bridesmaid, wore a brown dress, matching hat and accessories and carried yellow roses.

Mr. Norman Hunt, brother of the bride, was groomsman and the ushers were Mr. Harold Thrasher and Mr. Albert Lewis.

A reception was held at the home of the bride, which was charming with pink and white asters and gladioli. Mrs. Gray, mother of the groom, wore royal blue triple sheer, navy hat and accessories and corsage of pink roses.

The bride and groom left on a wedding trip to Toronto and eastern points, the bride travelling in a black wool crepe suit, trimmed with Persian Lamb, matching hat and accessories. She carried a corsage of red roses. Upon their return they will reside on the Second Concession of Thurlow.

DURKIN—MACKEY

A pretty autumn wedding took place on Tuesday morning, Sept. 24, at nine o'clock at St. Charles' Church, Read, when Mary, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Mackey, Read, became the bride of William Durkin, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Edward Durkin of Stoco.

Rev. Fr. Pickett officiated and the Nuptial Mass was served by Lawrence McKenny and Francis Kehoe.

The bride was charming in a street length dress of Royal blue silk velvet with hat and accessories to match. She wore a gold locket, the gift of the groom and carried a bouquet of gladioli and baby's breath.

Miss Marjorie Brennan, cousin of the bride, was bridesmaid and wore a lovely gown of rosewood crepe with maching accessories and carried a bouquet of maiden hair fern and gladioli.

Mr. James Mackey, brother of the bride, was groomsman.

The wedding music was played by Miss Mary Walsh and Mr. Dennis Callahan and Mr. Wm. Hanley sang.

After the ceremony the wedding party motored to the home of the bride's aunt, Mrs. John Ryan, where a sumptuous wedding dinner was served to immediate relatives. The room was attractively decorated in pink and white with large wedding bells. The bride's table was centred with a beautiful wedding cake.

The groom's gift to the organist was a necklace, to the bridesmaid, a gold engraved compact and to the groomsman, a gold engraved tie pin.

The bride and groom received many beautiful and useful gifts.

Mr. and Mrs. Durkin left on a wedding trip to Peterborough, Toronto and Hamilton, the bride travelling in a frock of navy blue sheer with matching accessories.

HUSBAND HONORED

Mrs. Rose Bingham Fiske is shown as she arrived in New York from England. She is the widow of William Meade Lindsley Fiske, III, American bobsled ace who died of wounds sustoined in an aerial fight against German raiders while he was flying as a member of the British Royal Air Force. Fiske had shot down several German planes in the Battle of Britain. In an unprecedented gesture, the British governor is to honor the memory of the young American hero by installing a plaque in Westminster Abbey, where the national heroes of England are buried.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Love, Friendship, Popularity Must Be Worked For

The other day a reporter interviewed the librarian at the Information Desk of one of the largest public libraries in this country. The question asked was "What kind of books do people read — all sorts of people?"

Young people read love stories and books on love. Top-notchers, who draw down huge salaries and have their books sent to them, read mystery stories, the more lurid the better.

But the average person, the one known as "the man in the street", reads popularity books. He wants to make friends and keep them.

It seems to me, however — and the secret springs of my information have come from the thousands of letters written to this column—that the inspiring of love and the making of friends and keeping them is something quite outside the realm of "book learning."

Love — and who has ever succeeded in defining love — is the flame that unites two people for better or worse. And people who make friends and keep them are unselfish people who give as much or even more than they take. We have, in other words, to sell ourselves to people to make worthwhile friends and keep them.

Continuing the interview with the librarian, it seems that the people who borrow these popularity books often confide in the librarian that the rules of the game haven't worked in their cases. They've read all about being popular, but have found no "takers," which isn't hard to explain. They know all about the theory, but are too sluggish to put it into practice.

Great beauties, or people who have the drawing quality of magnets, often go through life with out-stretched hands in a "gimme" gesture and get away with it too. Beauty is a compelling spider-web into which the unwary fly walks without realizing that the pursuit of beauty may be one of nature's little jokes.

The run-of-the-mill people, not particularly interesting, a little dull perhaps, who sit tight and expect the world to beat a pathway to their doors, like that traditional man who invented the perfect mouse-trap, are victims of a delusion. They fail to realize the truism that in this weary old world you never get something for nothing.

Friendship is a give-and-take proposition. Self-indulgent people who never write a letter of condolence because it's too much trouble, who never contribute to a cause, never go to see a sick friend, or send a little note when there's a new baby, or when someone has had a stroke of good fortune, are the people who wail that the world is selfish and no one bothers with them.

You don't have to read books to learn that borrowing is the death of friendship, and that it's a dangerous thing to be too intimate, or ask too many favors, or fail to return courtesies, and that people who quarrel and try to drag in their entire circle of friends as umpires may expect to taste the joys of solitude. People who get talkative after cocktail parties and confide things about themselves and their families, which had better be left unsaid, may expect to have no path beaten to their doorways.

Friendships that have withstood the tooth of time are those which have observed a certain amount of reticence and courtesy and have been mutually beneficial.

Your Beautiful Brow

"Coiffure styles hang on just so long and then they have to go."

FLUFF bangs appear on many an alabaster brow that has been on parade naked and unashamed. The swept back effect has prevailed for so long a time there's bound to be a change. Remember when the girls did their side locks in hound dog ears? No? You're too young, of course. Ask your mother. Hairdressers had a terrible time upping those hirsute curtains. But coiffure styles hang on just so long and then they have to go.

You can still have your rolls if you wear a fluff bang. The hair may be parted on the left side, the right side of the head carries rolls set on the bias. If you haven't anything else to do by way of amusement you can design for yourself a personal hairdo. It is an investment that pays in beauty gold.

If you are sweeping your back locks upward, anchoring them with tuck combs, do have some decorative effects back of the ears, the unloveliest portion of a woman's tete.

Let us thank Madame Fashion for long evening skirts. They're ever so much more romantic than short ones. They flatter all figures, slenderizing the poor dear who is plumptitudinous and displaying the neat lines of the slimmer duckies.

While every woman should carry herself beautifully, it is particularly necessary to pay heed to posture and carriage when the robe is form fitting, without a sign of a wrinkle. These pretty duds are being worn, even if the bouffant skirt has got such a hold on the feminine fancy. They are distinguished to the Nth degree: women who believe that simple effects are the best bet won't give them up.

Long draperies call for dignified behavior. We behave as we are dressed. Dignity, in itself, adds to beauty. Dignity doesn't mean that one can't have fun; it means that one has developed grace and self respect.

Soapsuds Lead to Happiness

"Use two light applications of liquid polish instead of one heavy one." 15 minutes later apply a second film.

By HELEN FOLLETT

MANY a girl has been made wretched because of a complexion spotted with blackheads and pimples. Self-consciousness resulted, some keeping away from social contacts because of these unsightly blemishes.

If your daughter is so afflicted, be deeply sympathetic, and if the condition continues take her to a medical man who specializes in diseases of the skin and scalp. Young persons can't stop meddling with pustules; they spread the infection and, if there is severe pressing and pinching, scars may result.

The first need is scrupulous cleanliness, not only of the facial area but of the entire body surface, so the skin will function normally as an eliminating organ. The daily hot bath with soap suds and a heavy brush is helpful. Twice a day soap should be used on the face, not just with a wash cloth, but frictioned in with the finger tips, the flesh being picked up lightly or tapped and slapped to increase the activities of the blood streams.

After the thorough cleansing, suds should be rinsed away, a heavy wash cloth dipped in hot water and the face steamed to soften blackheads and to heal pimples which are small boils. Then a gentle drying, a laving with lotion made by dissolving one teaspoonful of baking soda in a cup of water.

Dr. Chase's Ointment

You'll get a prettier shine on your finger nails if you use two light applications of liquid polish than if you use one heavy one. The talons will look daintier, more shell like.

Let the liquid drain from the brush. Place the bristles at the base of the nail, sweep lightly toward the eave. Try not to let the veneer seep into the surrounding cuticle. Whether or not you tint the eave is something for you to decide; some do, some don't.

Help the Baby's Appetite

By Garry Cleveland Myers, Ph.D.

MOST eating problems begin because the mother will push food into the baby. It might be desirable to do a bit of "pushing" of a new food, if only a small morsel of the food (no bigger than a soup bean) is gently put into the unwilling mouth. Even then, if there is strong resistance it were better to give up and try it later.

If the baby constantly closes the mouth against a certain kind of food, turns the head, pushes the spoon away showing annoyance, it is the time to end the meal. Don't substitute another food. Give the child lots of water and fruit juice but no milk, except at night perhaps, until a small portion of the offered food is wanted. Not many mothers will accept this advice since they "can't bear to see the baby go hungry," and they are sure he needs the food, the more so as they check on the child's weight. They are thinking of immediate intake of nourishment, not on the kind of appetite which, with persistence, can be cultivated and which, after a week or so, will guarantee more weight.

Then the food which the baby enjoys for some days or for the first few spoonfuls will be forced into the child, or slipped in while he is not watching, long after he has indicated he wants no more of it. As a result this food once liked becomes hated.

Popular Potato

Of all the food problems I have heard or read about, potato, so far as I can recall, has never been named as a disliked food. Why?

Because it is not one that the mother supposes the baby needs so much as he needs cereals and leafy vegetables; besides, he can eat baked potato with his bare hand or a spoon very early. Mothers have no emotions over potatoes. If the mother urged the little child to eat other foods no more than she urges him to eat potatoes there would be no eating problems.

Of a nine-months-old baby, a mother writes:

"She pushes every kind of food offered her away at first and after I manage to give her a taste of it and if she likes it, she'll open her mouth wide. But cereals and many vegetables she knocks out of the spoon. I manage to slip it in sometimes when she's looking elsewhere"—mean trick, it seems to me.

"Should I give her a spoon and let her try to feed herself regardless of the mess she makes?"

Fingers Before Forks

Yes, indeed, never mind the mess. But until she is almost a year old she may have a hard time operating a spoon even with mashed foods. She can, no doubt, even now eat such with her bare hands and there's no better way to cultivate a good appetite in her.

I go much farther into the early stages of cultivating the baby's appetite and discuss at length eating problems of various sorts and at different age levels in a pamphlet entitled "Helping Child Enjoy Food." This is one of 15 pamphlets of mine on everyday problems of bringing up the baby and small child, being simple presentations of my university lectures to preschool parents. A folder describing these pamphlets and showing how they may be procured may be had by writing me at 235 E 45th St., New York City, N.Y., enclosing a self-addressed envelope with a three-cent stamp on it. In like manner you may receive a chart to help you find out roughly how smart your baby is. Indicate his age.

Never be Afraid Of Your Face

Soap suds in all cases, should be removed with warm water.

By HELEN FOLLETT

Don't be afraid to give your complexion a thorough friction with soap and water. Some women clean their faces with little dabs as if the skin were something sacred, should be treated with the utmost gentleness. Friction tones the tissues, stimulates glandular activity and rouses up the blood streams which give good coloring to the flesh. Muscles and tiny fibers are exercised.

There are skins that have a soap phobia. They have to be coddled. The only way to live in the same house with such a complexion is to use a cleansing oil. After the oil is on, it is possible to dip a cloth in a mild soap solution and press against the flesh lightly.

Warm Rinse

Soap suds, in all cases, should be removed with warm water. Cold water won't take it all away. Also, if a cream is to be used, the flesh should not be chilled as the skin will not absorb it. There used to be a difference of opinion on that subject, some specialists believing that oil does not penetrate the human hide. Now it is said by many physicians that the oil does seep into the pores beside the tiny downy hair shafts that reside there. The longer oil or cream is left on, the more effective will it be as a skin tonic.

x x x

Cosmetic meals can be used in place of soap. Some of them are made of finely ground oatmeal, are soothing to a skin that likes to kick up a fuss when it comes in contact with soap. Almond meal is a precious item in the beautifying outfit. When hands are soiled from gardening or heavy housework fluff up soap in the palms, pour in yellow cornmeal and you will have a perfect cleansing medium. It digs away those little dark lines in the knuckles, whitens and softens the cuticle around the fingernails.

When using a cleansing oil wipe it away to the last light film. If you don't your makeup will do a disappearing act after an hour or two because of too much moisture on the cutaneous surface.

DR. DAFOE'S COLUMN on the Quintuplets and the Care of Your Children

Tonsils And Adenoids

We are approaching the "tonsil and adenoid season." The disease of these two seem to reach their peaks in the days when Autumn is giving way to Winter. So now is the time for preparedness measures against them. And if you start building up your child's resistance to colds—and your own resistance, also—you have gone a long way toward preventing tonsils and adenoid attacks. You won't have to worry about operations either.

Colds—adenoids—tonsils constitute a vicious circle, and if we could just eliminate the first phase of it, the others would be easily handled. When the child gets a bad cold, the adenoids become diseased and as a result they are enlarged. When they are enlarged the passages of the nose are blocked up, and the child breathes through the mouth. When he breathes through the mouth, he loses the use of the germ-removing equipment in his nose, and so is exposed more than ever to infection. Most common infection, is of course, the common cold, and these recurring colds make the adenoids more irritated, more diseased, and larger. So colds in the head become chronic.

Also, mouth-breathing as caused by bad adenoids, changes the shape of the victim's mouth and jaws and has a bad effect on the shape of the teeth as they grow. In fact, if this vicious circle persists, about the only thing that will remedy the situation is an operation.

In almost every case, this diseased, adenoidal growth is accompanied by an even more dangerous health racketeer—the diseased tonsil. I think this arch-criminal has about as long and as impressive a record as any single health-destroyer ever arrayed against mankind. When the Quintuplets' tonsils were removed two years ago, they ended about the only worries the children caused us. If you think they were a minor worry, you're all wrong, for somehow those tonsils became infected with septoecemia—septic sore throat and at one time we didn't know whether Emilie would survive it. Those tonsils kept me awake more nights that I care to think about now. So do you blame me, if I have an extra special hate on against tonsils?

In the cases of the Quins, the bad tonsils had so undermined the health of the little girls that we had trouble getting them up to the physical state necessary for a successful operation. First their resistance had to be built up to a point where the germs that caused the diseased adenoids and tonsils could make as little headway as possible. Then they had to be conditioned for the operation.

Every day we gave them ample helpings of fruit or tomato juice, cod liver oil, plenty of sleep and fresh air. When they caught colds through contacts with outsiders, we doubled their rations of fruit juices, increased the rest periods, and saw to it that they had normal eliminations.

When something goes wrong with your child's tonsils and when his breathing shows that his adenoids are swollen and diseased, then for goodness sake, don't try home remedies, call your doctor in. He is the one who will know what to do, whether disease is so strongly entrenched in the organs that an operation is necessary or whether by proper treatment, they can be preserved in a healthy state.

Tonsils aren't given us just to be removed. They have a purpose to serve as part of our physical structure. They aren't just growths in the throat as some people seem to think, they are lymphoid tissue that normally aids in fighting infection. It is only when they themselves get diseased that they cause us trouble.

GOOD MANNERS

MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

STEPMOTHER'S PROBLEM

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I am the stepmother of a young girl who has just eloped. I would like to know if it is permissible for me to give a shower in her honor.

I am so eager to do something to make a start with this stepdaughter of mine. In the past we have not been on the best of terms, but I want so much in the future to have her friendly with me, to have her come to me to talk over things. Her mother is dead, and I thought that this party might be suitable for me to give. There has been a difference of opinion among our relatives and friends as to whether or not it is proper for me to give this party.

P.A.

Your letter is appealing and touching, and I can completely understand this problem of yours. I agree with you that this is the perfect time for you to show her that you wish to be friendly, that you wish to be as "motherly" to her as she will accept.

Giving a party in her honor will show her the sure direction of your interest and friendliness. However, I am not enthusiastic about your giving a shower for her. To begin with, it is not considered in good taste for a member of the immediate family to give a shower. Then, too, there will be the question of the guests bringing gifts. This means that your hospitality will be involved with gift-giving.

I suggest that you give a tea or a buffet supper in honor of your stepdaughter and her husband. Invite the friends of the family, invite the friends of the newly-married couple, and emphasize the fact that the couple are the guests of honor. Leave the giving of showers to her friends; they are the ones who should plan these.

Talk over with your stepdaughter your plans for this party, and ask her for a list of friends whom she would like to have you invite. I am sure that she will be delighted with your plans.

THANKS FOR CARDS

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I would like to have some advice as to what to do after receiving some "get well" cards while in the hospital. Should I thank the friends personally, or send notes of thanks?

Wondering.

If, fairly soon after you have received these cards, the well-wishing friends come to see you or you meet them, you will have the proper opportunity of thanking them personally.

But if this opportunity doesn't occur within a reasonable length of time, you should write friendly little notes of thanks for this kind attention. However, if you are well enough, it's better to write these appreciative notes as soon as you can.

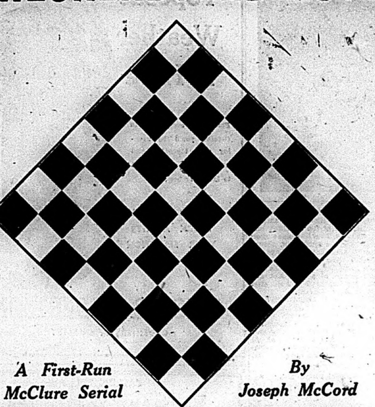
CHECKERBOARD LOVE



A First-Run McClure Serial

By Joseph McCord

CHAPTER V.

With her mother and father for an interested audience, Audrey had been detailing an account of the Castle dinner over her morning coffee and a cigarette.

"I'm real glad you went and met all those nice young people," Martha Swan observed. "I'm sure that Mrs. Castle was very friendly, too, wasn't she?"

"Oh, rather! And the Judge was a dear. He usually is, only I'm always half afraid of him. But the nicest part of the whole . . ."

"Oh, Miss Audrey!"

The girl turned to see the cook's face peering through the kitchen door. There was a worried look upon the round, red countenance.

"What is it, Julia?"

"A man at the back door what wants to see you. Will you come out? Or shall I tell him you ain't home?"

"A man at the back door?" Audrey repeated with a puzzled frown. "What does he want, Julia? Don't you know who he is?"

"No'm, I never saw him, but he says he knows you. Said his name's Shin . . . of something like that. He's got a real way with him."

"For goodness' sake!" Audrey half rose from her chair, sank back with a laugh. "It's Vic, Mom. That odd lawyer man I was telling you about. "Show him in, Julia."

It was none other than Victor Quinn who strolled in smilingly and called a cheery greeting. "Hello, Audrey! You're looking very well indeed this morning."

"I am. Mr. Quinn, my mother."

"Mrs. Swan, I am delighted to meet you. Please don't get up."

"Oh, we've finished breakfast long ago," Audrey smiled. "We'll find more comfortable chairs. It may be pleasant out on the porch."

"But I want to stay here," Vic expostulated. "I want a cup of coffee. That's what I came for. Don't tell me I'm too late."

"Of course you're not!" Martha exclaimed, taking refuge in a burst of hospitality. "You sit right down here with Audrey. I'll have some hot coffee for you in just a minute." She caught up the pot and started out with it then paused at the door to ask, "Can't we fix you some bacon and eggs, too? You must be hungry after your walk."

"Well . . ."

"Of course you will. I'll have Julia bring you some orange juice first."

"Do you mind telling me what all this is about?" Audrey demanded, lighting a cigarette. "I thought you were the gentleman who didn't go in for early rising."

"I don't. Neither am I in the habit of begging breakfast from the neighbors. But that bunch up on the hill doesn't seem to go in for getting up at all. I prowled all over the place without seeing any sign of life until I stumbled over a serf working in the garden. By way of making conversation I asked him who lived in the pleasant looking house I could see in the distance. He told me. And here I am. Oh, thank you!"

The last was for Julia who had come padding in with the orange juice, looking the guest over curiously as she deposited it before him. He lifted the glass with a little gesture in Audrey's direction. "I did want to see you again."

"That's a weak excuse." She rested her elbows on the table and regarded him soberly. "You hoped I'd ask you to go for a ride. I will. You notice I'm dressed for it."

"Not I! Make it Chinese checkers and I'll stay for lunch. There's a man's sport."

Audrey shook her head. "You must be a good lawyer, Mr. Quinn. You haven't said one truthful thing since you came in."

The arrival of Julia with the bacon and eggs put an end to their raillery. In the role of a forgiving hostess, Audrey poured her guest's coffee and made toast.

"You know, Audrey . . ." Vic paused for a satisfying bite. "I don't recall ever taking part in a domestic scene like this. Not in years, at all events. I can't tell you how it makes me feel."

"I'm sorry we haven't a pet rabbit for you."

"But I'd rather have you and your nose," he grinned impudently. "And that reminds me . . ."

"I knew there was something here that didn't meet the eye."

"Not at all. It was your mention of riding. The topic came up before we all retired last night. I think you'll see a cavalcade of sorts heading this way after a bit. Jeff gave a glowing account of your equine menagerie and Olive was all set for an inspection."

"I'm defeated by all this sudden popularity. Won't you have more coffee? No? Are you sure you wouldn't like to go out and see the place, then? I'll guarantee that you won't be bitten or trampled to death."

"Well, I shan't mind letting the callers know that I beat them to it. They're probably wondering where the devil I've got to."

"I doubt it," Audrey discouraged. "But you may be right, at that," she added, as the sound of the telephone bell came from the hall. "Excuse me a moment."

It was Jeffrey Castle. "Hello, Audrey. I wasn't sure you'd be up this early."

"I've been up for hours. What disturbed you?"

"Oh, we're all barging about. Would it be all right if some of us rode over after a bit? We want to have a try at your bars, if you don't mind. We'll all go for a ride later, so be ready to join us."

"Maybe."

"Sure you can. Say, Cygie?"

"Yes?"

"Vic is missing this morning. Nobody's seen him."

"He's here."

"The devil you say! So it's as bad as all that!"

"You win," she admitted to Vic who stood smiling at her from the doorway. "Let's go."

When the stables were reached, Audrey introduced the guest to her father and admitted to a little feeling of relief at Vic's attitude. He dropped his bantering air, said nothing about his fear of horses, but displayed a keen interest in all that was shown him. The two men were still deep in their conversation when her ear caught the pounding of hooves in the lane.

"Company's coming," she announced. "Let's go out to meet them. You come too, dad."

During the introduction Audrey could not keep her admiring eyes from Olive's smiling face and trim, erect figure. She was even more attractive in her riding clothes than in a dinner gown, the girl acknowledged to herself. Olive was mounted on Eileen.

Jeff was aboard a rangy bay, looking particularly well in new whipcord breeches, his shirt open at the throat, bareheaded. Lee Warren also was in the party, mounted on a gray cob from the Castle stables. The group chatted with gay informality, with the exception of Anthony whose peroccupied attention was directed mainly to Eileen's restless movements.

HAWES'

It was Olive who created a diversion with a direct question to Jeff. "Where are those jumps you were telling me about, Jeffrey? I'm anxious to try them. So is this mare," she added as Eileen tossed her head fretfully.

"Over there in the paddock," he replied with an indicating wave of his crop, then an uncertain look directed at Audrey. "Aren't you saddled yet?"

"Go ahead," was her smiling rejoinder. "I'll be with you presently." She turned and rested her arms on the top of the fence watching the three ride away.

"Why doesn't Mr. Jeffrey tell that young woman to go easy on the curb?" Anthony's usually mild voice carried a growl.

"That's what I'm thinking," Audrey agreed in a tense little voice.

Vic took his place at the fence, held by the undercurrent of anxiety in the words he had just heard. The trio stood in silence, watching. They saw the horses reined up some fifty yards from the first set of bars, then Eileen shot forward urged into a swift gallop.

"My Gawd!" And Anthony Swan was scrambling over the fence.

Sensing that some calamity was imminent, Vic lifted Audrey unceremoniously in his arms and dropped her on the other side of the white barrier, vaulting over after her. He caught her hand and the two raced after Anthony, who had sprinted ahead.

It happened before they could reach the scene. Eileen, head thrown high, barely had her forelegs over the top bar when she crashed down, turned an almost complete somersault and flung her rider in a heap. By the time the others came up, Jeff had dismounted and was holding Olive's limp figure in his arms. Eileen had attempted to get to her feet but had rolled on her side and lay still.

Anthony, accustomed to spills, took curt charge of the situation. "Carry her to the house," was his order to Jeff. "Audrey, you go with him. Lay her on a bed and call the doctor. I'll be there. . . . Wait." The last was to Victor, as Anthony ran over and took a quick look at the prostrate Eileen. "I fancied as much," he reported grimly. "Mr. Quinn, will you be good enough to stop at the stables and ask for Jim? Tell him it's a broken leg. He'll know what to do."

CHAPTER VI.

When Anthony Swan hurried into the front hall he encountered his wife at the foot of the stairs. She was carrying a hot water bag in her hands. "It might be useful," she suggested quietly.

"No doctor yet?" He had just noticed Audrey at the telephone, apparently waiting.

"Doctor Davis is out. She's trying to find Doctor Bardsley."

"I'll have a look at the girl. Where did you put her?"

"Jeffrey laid her on Audrey's bed." Martha led the way.

Quinn and Warren were in the upper hall near the bedroom door, talking in low tones. Jeff, white and shaken, stood beside the bed looking down at Olive, who lay with closed eyes. He and Mrs. Swan had removed the injured girl's jacket and loosened the stock about her neck.

"Do you think she's badly hurt, Swan?" was his low-voiced question.

"I fancy not," was the quiet rejoinder. Anthony elbowed the young man aside, bent over the bed and began a gentle but thorough investigation. "She didn't land on her head. I was watching that. It will be an arm or leg if anything worse than a shaking up. She's breathing well enough."

At that moment Audrey entered with her report. "Mrs. Bardsley is expecting the doctor to call the house any moment, she says. He will come out just as soon as he gets word. Doctor Davis isn't expected for several hours."

Anthony pulled a knife from his pocket and opened its heavy sharp blade. He looked up rather apologetically at Jeff.

"Sorry to cut a new boot like that, but it's uncommonly tight. I'm afraid to drag it off."

"Go ahead," Jeffrey urged nervously. "Lord, I'll buy her a dozen pair, if she isn't hurt badly. Don't cut her foot, whatever you do."

"Never fear . . . just a slit."

Audrey watched her father part the leather with cautious strokes, drag the boot off carefully and drop it. Then he turned to her. "Maybe you can do a better job, my girl, getting that stocking off."

As the sheer silk hose was freed from the breeches cuff, Audrey rolled it down with gentle fingers, noting, womanlike, the flesh of the slim beautifully formed leg, the flawless white skin. Even the foot when exposed was as unblemished as a child's The nails were highly polished, tinted deep rose.

"What do you think, Dad?"

"I can't say. It may be no more than a sprain ,or there may be broken bones or torn ligaments. For the time being, a tight bandage will ease it. Fetch me a roll and some tape. I'd like to get it done before she comes to."

"Listen, Swan," Jeff whispered somewhat irritably. "What was the matter with that darned mare, anyway? My man brought word that you said she was O.K. at the jumps. Were you watching? She acted as if she'd never been put at a fence."

"There was nothing the matter with the mare whatever, Mr. Jeffrey." The last word scarcely had left his lips when the silence was punctured by the distant crack of a rifle. "She'll not be jumping again," he added with grim bitterness.

It seemed as if the report might have startled Olive into wakefulness, for her eyelids fluttered, then opened wide. There was a helpless, dazed expression in the large dark eyes. She must have recognized Jeff for she called his name faintly and he dropped to his knees at her side. "Olive! Are you all right?"

"What happened?" She was looking wonderingly at the others. "Oh! I remember."

"You had a spill," Jeff explained hurriedly. "You're all right now."

"Fancy that wretched mare refusing an easy jump like that!" said Olive. "I hope she broke her neck. Oh! My ankle!"

"You wrenched it a bit," Jeff soothed. "Mr. Anthony bound it up for you until the doctor can look at it. He'll be here shortly."

Olive looked at the faces about the bed and managed a smile. "Sorry I made such a spectable of myself. I'm all right now. If you'll help me up, Jeffrey . . ."

"You stay right where you are, Mrs. Cooper, until the doctor sees you." Martha directed. "I think that's Doctor Bardsley coming up now," as steps were heard on the stairs. "Yes ,it is. In here, Doctor."

The others, save Jeff, left the room as the physician entered and Audrey found herself being escorted below stairs by Victor Quinn. "Tough break," he suggested. "Maybe it wouldn't be a bad idea for you to have a drag on the bottle. You look sort of upset."

"I don't care for anything," she retorted shortly.

"Audrey," Vic said, "my equestrian ignorance is depressing. But I couldn't help thinking from some remark your father made that this accident shouldn't be charged fairly to . . . to the horse."

"The horse had nothing to do with it. But please don't quote me."

"Naturally not. I'm sincerely glad the girl was not seriously hurt, but I can see where it definitely puts an end to the party. It does for me, at least. I'm going to wander back with the tidings and pack my pajamas and toothbrush, try for the afternoon train. I fancy I'll have company."

"I'm sorry. But I imagine you're right. Mrs. Cooper won't be up to much of anything for a little while, I suppose."

"Maybe she'll have to stay on with you," Vic suggested maliciously.

"We'll try to take good care of her."

"I was spoofing. But I'm not spoofing when I tell you that Mrs. Castle will have her over there before sundown. You'll see. And while I'm definitely not spoofing, I want to tell you something. I'll not be seeing you again. May I come back? I mean it terribly."

"You will be welcome any time, of course."

"Thanks a lot for everything." His hand came out, held hers for an instant as he stood looking at her with his head tilted on one side in characteristic fashion. "Please make your nose do that."

She complied in spite of herself.

"Thanks. You're a cute number, Audrey. Good-by." And he was gone.

Audrey was in the dining room, standing by the sideboard when her mother entered.

"For goodness' sake, child! You're not upset, are you?"

"No. Not much."

"Has Mr. Quinn gone home?"

"Leaving for the city, so he said. Do you know what the doctor found?"

"He's still upstairs. I don't believe it's anything very serious. Audrey, did you have a chance to get acquainted with that woman?"

"Mrs. Cooper, you mean?" she returned guardedly. "Why, no. I didn't have much of a chance at the dinner." She could have added that Olive paid but slight attention to her after their introduction, only that might sound disloyal to Jeff. Instead, she explained: "And you know she had that spill only a few moments after they came over."

"She's pretty," Martha admitted. "But I hate to see Jeffrey taking up with a divorced woman."

"Oh, that's nothing these days." Audrey was thinking of what Vic had to say regarding modern marriage. "Besides," she added with a faint smile, "she isn't divorced. Yet."

"Then she should wait till she is. Before she lets men start fussing around her. Jeffrey's clear out of his head over her. Your father is really upset about that horse."

"I don't wonder," was the grim retort. "That was rotten! I suppose she didn't know any better, but . . ."

"Did you hear what she said about it?"

"Yes, I heard."

"Do you know," said Martha, "I would have liked to see more of that Mr. Quinn. He talks a heap of foolishness, but anybody with half an eye can see there's a lot to him. He's smart. A lawyer, did you say?"

"Yes. He works for Shyster, Flywheel and Shyster."

"I never heard of them. But he'll get along. Mark my words."

"I believe he will. Maybe you will be pleased to learn, Mrs. Swan, that he has asked your daughter's permission to come back again. Do you mind?"

"Indeed, no!" Martha regarded her daughter curiously. She could not quite understand this sudden light mood. "I think that would be very nice," she amended. "He seems to like you."

"Oh, he does. He thinks I'm a cute number. He just told me."

"Well, for. . . . Audrey, there's a big car coming around! Isn't that Mrs. Castle in the back seat?"

Audrey turned quickly, in time to see a blue limousine roll past the windows. A chauffeur in smart livery, a portly white-clad passenger in the rear.

"It's her Royal Highness," she reported briefly.

"I've never done more than speak to her!" Martha recalled in sudden consternation. "You go to the door. I'm not dressed."

CHAPTER VII.

From a discreet post in the bay window, Audrey saw the Castle chauffeur assist his mistress from the car and offer her his arm for the ascent of the porch steps. When the bell sounded, she walked leisurely out into the hall, quickening her pace as she saw Jeffrey and the doctor starting down the stairway. That would ease the situation considerably, she decided.

"Why, good morning, Mrs. Castle!" She tried to put delighted surprise in her tones. "Come in."

"I just heard about this dreadful thing and drove right over," the caller began a trifle breathlessly. "What . . . oh, Jeffrey!" as she spied her son. "Is the poor child hurt? Where is she?"

"It's nothing very serious, Mother."

Doctor Bardsley added his professional opinion. "The young lady appears to have a badly wrenched ankle. I would not venture to say how much of an injury it is until we can have an X-ray. I was just suggesting to Mr. Castle that it would be well to drive her out to the hospital and let them take one as soon as she feels up to it."

"I have our large car with me. Jeffrey, step out and call Dean."

"I don't believe I need any help," her son replied with a slight shrug of his broad shoulders. "I'll go up and get her now. Thank you very much for coming out, Doctor. I will get in touch with you later."

As Bardsley bowed himself out, Mrs. Castle turned to Audrey. "It's a miracle the child wasn't killed! I should have warned her. Riding in the city, you know, is confined to bridle paths . . . more of a social custom, really. She is not accustomed to the reckless way you young people in the country ride. I dare say it was one of your father's horses." She made it clear that in some way the accident was to be laid at the Swans' door.

"No, Mrs. Castle," Audrey explained quietly, "Mrs. Cooper came over here on one of your horses . . . Jeff's. But it is dead now, so there is no danger of it hurting anybody else."

"How shocking! It might so easily have been just the other way."

"Yes. They had to shoot the horse."

Mrs. Castle stared uncertainly as this information was imparted, but before she could decide whether or not some implication was intended, Jeffrey appeared with Olive in his arms. White-faced, and with her hair in disorder, she looked very small and childish. One arm was about her aide's neck, her other hand held her hat dangling by its elastic cord.

"Hello, Mrs. Castle," she called with attempted gayety. "Aren't I a mess?"

"You poor darling!" The older woman hurried forward and brushed a kiss on the patient's cheek. "Are you in great pain? I'm so relieved to know that you are not badly hurt."

Olive turned her head and looked at Audrey. "So sorry, dear, to have caused all this commotion. It spoils everything. But you'll come to see me, won't you? And please do thank your father and mother for their kindness."

Mrs. Swan tiptoed into the hall and over Audrey's shoulder watched the departure of the car.

"Of course I would have been glad to do anything I could for that girl, but I'm glad she didn't have to stay."

Afterwards, life seemed to assume its normal trend at the Swans'. The late afternoon found Audrey on the side porch trying to forget everything in the pages of a new novel. When the sudden crunch of tires on the gravel drive caused her to look up, she was startled to see Jeff in his yellow roadster. She had not expected to see anyone from the Castle house, of all places.

She was more puzzled when she discovered that her caller was decidedly ill at ease. "How is the lady now?" she inquired dutifully.

"Olive, you mean? Oh, she's all right. Sleeping when I came away. She decided not to go to the hospital until tomorrow. I believe we left Olive's boot behind in the excitement," he remarked offhandedly. "I thought I'd drop in as I was passing and pick it up."

"You did. I found it under the bed when I straightened my room. Excuse me a second and I'll run up and get it for you." She went in and appeared with it almost at once. "Pity Dad had to cut it," she remarked.

"Oh, I guess it can be fixed. Maybe." Jeff turned the boot over in his hands and regarded it closely. "Sure is a little one for a girl as tall as Olive."

"She has the most beautiful feet I have ever seen."

"Has she? I guess I didn't notice particularly."

"Mr. Castle!"

"Oh, well . . . I was pretty much rattled, I'll admit. You know, Cygie . . . hang it all, I feel pretty rotten about the whole affair. It was my fault, after all."

"I don't see why."

"Sure you do. I know you well enough to guess what it would do to you to see a good horse done in like that. When I sent Eileen over here, I figured that you'd ride her. Same as I knew you wouldn't say she was all right at the bars if she wasn't."

"I had no trouble with her," Audrey observed quietly.

"When we started from the house," he went on dejectedly, "I saw Olive wasn't handling the mare right, making her nervous. She told me she had done a lot of hunting, jumping and whatnot. I supposed she knew the rudiments. If I had known what was going to happen . . ."

"Well, you can't do anything about it now. It would have been ever so much worse if she had been really injured."

"Olive told me to ask you up to the house if I saw you. I wish you would come, Cygie. The rest of the bunch thought they'd better pile out and it's going to be pretty quiet for Olive. Besides, I still want you two girls to get acquainted. I hoped you were going to have a chance today. Will you?"

"Let's see," Audrey mused. "Tomorrow's Sunday, isn't it? I'll run in during the afternoon. Will that do?"

"Thanks a lot, Cygie." He rose to his feet. "Guess I'd better be getting back to . . . an errand in town. See you tomorrow, then."

True to her promise Audrey drove to the house on the hill and was admitted by Jeff himself who must have seen or heard the car.

"Hello," he greeted her effusely. "I'm going to take you right up to the ward. Olive's all pepped up over your coming and wants to see you." He stood aside to allow Audrey to precede him up the stairs.

There was little about Olive Cooper to suggest the invalid. She was propped up in a nest of pillows and wearing a lacy negligee of bright yellow that set off her coloring. Her hair was perfectly arranged, her eyes shining, her cheeks flushed. She extended her nearest hand, her left, in a graceful greeting.

"So sweet of you to run in, Cygie . . . you don't mind if I call you by Jeffrey's name, do you? It's so cute. This is one time I really am going to have a chance to visit with you. Nothing can stop us now unless I have a relapse, and I don't think I look like that, do I?"

"No, indeed! How's the ankle?"

"Doing nicely. We went to the hospital this morning and had its picture taken. Just a bad sprain, but they say I must keep off of it for a time. It's a dreadful imposition on these dear people."

"Terrible!" Jeff laughed. He brought a chair for Audrey, setting it close to the bedside, then took his place at the head with his arm outstretched in a protective gesture.

The three chatted animatedly for a little time, by common consent avoiding any discussion of the accident. Olive was so friendly and charming that Audrey felt repentant for having entertained a slight dislike for her. No wonder Jeff had fallen a captive! And she really was beautiful. It was a pleasure to hear her talk. She must have had all the advantages that wealth could give, yet she seemed gay and unspoiled. And that in spite of the unhappiness that must have resulted from her marriage. For some reason, it was rather difficult to think of her as a married woman. It was only a technical bond at that, if Vic had been correct in his surmise.

Then Jeffrey, with a return of that oddly self-conscious air, excused himself for a few moments, saying with exaggerated carelessness: "I know you two girls would like to have an uncensored gabfest for a bit. I'll go down and amuse the old folks with my bright sayings." He went out and closed the door softly behind him.

"Isn't he precious?" Olive asked with a light laugh. "He reminds me of a little boy. Cygie . . ?"

"Yes?"

"Has Jeffrey told you about . . . us?"

Detroit Needs Only One Game To Win World Series as Teams Take up Battle in Cincinnati

Bobo Newsom Allows Only Three Hits on Sunday as Tigers Score 8-0 Shutout

REDS WIN SATURDAY

Paul Derringer Scores 5-2 Victory Allowing Only Five Hits but Gave Six Walks

(By Gayle Talbot)

(Associated Press Sports Writer)

Cincinnati, Oct. 7.—(AP)— The World Series returned to Cincinnati today with Detroit leading three victories to two and needing only one more to end the battle.

The Reds figured to square the series today behind Bucky Walters who tamed the Tigers with a three-hitter in the second game here last week.

Bobo Newsom shutout Reds 8-0 in yesterday's fifth game at Detroit. Cincinnati had squared the series Saturday with a 5-2 triumph at the-hit pitching of Paul Derringer.

Newsom pitched one of the greatest games of his life yesterday. His aged father had died after seeing his big son pitch the opening victory in Cincinnati. He was determine to pitch another "for Dad" and he did.

Battered Red Pitchers

His teammates battered the Red pitchers, starting with Junior Thompson, so quickly and violently that Buck's magnificent effort practically was wasted.

The second guessers were saying that Baker would have been smart to pull Newsom from the game after Detroit piled up a 7-0 lead in the fourth innings and save him for what might be the deciding bout tomorrow. Baker might have done it, except that Newsom was so wrapped up in "pitching another one for dad", that it would have broken his heart.

Newsom gave the Reds only three hits, one a grounder past Dick Bartell that a more sprightly shortstop would have gobbled up. Only one Red reached second base.

Gene Thompson, starting hurler for Cincinnati, remained on the mound until he let the Tigers get started on a four-run rally in the fourth.

Three Relief Hurlers

Subsequently Whitey Moore, Johnny Vandermeer and John Hutchings were called from the bull-pen in an effort to subdue the Tigers, but since the Reds themselves were helpless the efforts of the trio had no effect on the outcome.

Actually the Tigers scored in only three innings although they had runners on base in every frame and in scoring position, beyond first, in all but one.

Besides 13 hits, of which Greenberg accounted for a home run and two singles, the Tigers received ten bases on balls.

SERIES NOTES

By Dale Stafford Associated Press Sports Writer.

Cincinnati, Oct. 7 (AP) — The 1940 World Series is the first million dollar series since 1937 and the ninth in history after the fifth game at Detroit yesterday the receipts totalled $1,057,596.10, including $100,000 received from the sale of the broadcasting rights which went into the players' pool. In event the present series goes seven full games and the gate receipts at Cincinnati are up to the standard of the first two contests, the all-time record gate of $1,304,399 for series competition, set in 1936 by the New York Yankees and New York Giants, will be in danger.

Each series victory has been scored with an umpire from the rival league of the victors working behind the plate.

Bill Kelm of the National circuit, called balls and strikes as Detroit won the first and fifth contests and Lee Balianfandt, of the National circuit, was the arbiter in Detroit's third game triumph. Emmett Ormsby and Steve Basil, of the American League, umpired at the plate in Cincinnati's second and fourth game wins.

BURRARDS TO WIN THREE IN ROW SAYS DICKINSON

Coach of Vancouver Lacrosse Team High on Chances Against St. Catharines

PLAY IN TORONTO

Annual Meeting of C.L.A. Will be Held During the Series

Toronto, Oct. 7—(CP)—Vancouver Burrards, holding an impressive record of 22 wins in their last 23 starts, meet St. Catharines, Ont., Athletics here tonight in the first game of the best-of-five series for the Canadian Senior Lacrosse Championship.

Burrards' record was fashioned against such opposition as New Westminster, B.C., Adanacs, 1939 champions, and provides some basis for the statement of Coach Les Dickinson of the British Columbia champions that he has a better team than Athletics.

When Burrards arrived here last night after eliminating Cornwall in two straight games, Dickinson intimated he would not be surprised if his team beats St. Catharines three straight as New Westminster did last year in the Dominion finals.

The Vancouver team is at top strength for the series that continues Wednesday and Friday. If fourth and fifth games are needed, they will be played Monday and Wednesday next week.

Dickinson has seen Athletics play and said he is aware of their scoring strength but he still feels Burrards are better and good enough to win.

Only Two on Club Smoke

The Vancouver coach expressed pride that only two players on the club smoke and drink. "It's not that we ask that of them. It just happened to be that way."

Burrards, accustomed to a board surface, went through a short workout at Maple Leaf Gardens today to get the "feel" of the concrete floor.

The annual meeting of the Canadian Lacrosse Association will be held during the series and several British Columbia officials came east for the series. They are Jim McConaghy, C. L. A. President; Jack Streight, C.L.A. Secretary and Archie Holland, President of the British Columbia Association.

Probable lineups tonight are:

St. Catharines—Goal, Whittaker; defence, C. Madsen, Bernard; rover, McMahon; centre, Cheevers; wings, Fitzgerald, Wilson; subs, Myers, P. Madsen, Hope, Coles, Urquhard, Morton, Teather, Coupland.

Vancouver—Goal, Walt Lee; defence, Berry, Dickinson; rover, McDonald; centre, Dale; wings, John Cavallin, Morphitt; subs, Jenkinson, Gray, Roy Cavallin, Theal, Matheson, Bradford, Pugsley, Frank Lee.

Former Belleville Player, Jimmy Follwell, Kicks Point For Argos that Beats Montreal

Last Play of Game Gives Argos an 9-8 Win Over Their Opponents

BEACHES WIN

Balmies Take Hamilton Alerts 21-0 but Lose Backfield Ace for Season

(By Sydney Gruson)

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

A new contender —ready, willing and apparently amply able to make the challenge —emerged Saturday from the first splash of the East's football season that uncovered, among other things, the presence of Ottawa's well-known power along the ground and a dynamite-loaded Argo aerial offensive.

The Ottawa Power and Argo Aerial Pyrotechnics were nothing now— they've been playing it that way since 1936—but the all-round strength of the Sarnia Military team replacing the famous Imperials was a pleasant shock to the East in general and Senior Ontario Union in particular.

It has been feared that the O.R.F.U. would be top-heavy with Toronto Balmy Beach at the head and the others too far behind to make the schedule interesting—let alone profitable. But the 2-26 battery team which picked up the Sarnia colors when Imperial disbanded gave promise of stout opposition for Beaches in an upset 21-3 lacing of Camp Borden.

Otherwise the opening went as expected, although the Argonauts had to score six points in the last two minutes to beat Montreal's unnamed big four entry 9-8 at Montreal. The champion Rough Riders, driving for one touchdown in an unbroken 65-yard march along the ground, swamped the Tigers 21-1 at Hamilton.

Beaches Beat Alerts

Beaches won from Hamilton Alerts, 20-0, at Toronto but they lost more than they gained when Bobby Porter dislocated a shoulder in the third quarter and was lost to the Beach backfield for six weeks. The Alerts, coming up from intermediate ranks where they were Provincial Champions as Dundas Red Bombers, simply didn't have the stuff for Senior ball.

There was a distinct Imperial flavor to the Sarnia triumph. There was Hank Galloway firing two touchdown passes to Joe Woodcock and kicking a field goal and there was Ralph Perry leading a charging line that left the Fliers' front wall bruised and battered and in no position to give protection.

With a little more protection Mike Neskas might have made better use of this dangerous passing arm and Eddie Thompson's kicking and running might not have been wasted as thoroughly. Sarnia got nine points in the first quarter and 12 in the third, with Nick Palthouski picking up a loose ball for another touchdown.

Placement Kicked

Neskas tossed the Fliers into position for their only score, Dave Irvin kicking placement field goal from 35 yards in the second quarter.

The Rough Rider drive through the left side of the Hamilton line, capped by Tony Golab's short plunge for the touchdown, showed Ottawa's tanks are still able to roll. Ottawa's other touchdowns came, when McCarthy fell on Eddie Jordan's fumble of a high kick and Artie McWatters' 92-yard run after intercepting a forward.

Wilf Tremblay kicked a 35 yard placement field goal for three more points Murray Griffin and Orville Burke gave the Riders a nice short-passing game while the Tigers' only Consolation was the work of Al Lenard, the Windsor, Ont., boy who showed a brilliant passing eye and arm.

Forward Passes Shot

Gord Noseworthy and Tommy Burns kicked three singles and Lloyd McDaniels' ran 30 yards on an interception of an Argo forward to give Montreal an 8-3 lead with less than two minutes to play. Then Bill Stukus, the "Peck's Bad Boy" of Argos, started shooting passes.

He sent Art West over for a touchdown with 15-yard toss and that tied the score at 8-8. When, just three seconds before the final whistle and on the last play, he rifled one for 50 yards to Red Storey. Storey was tackled high and Argos were given 15 yards and another play, although regulation time had ended. Jim Folwell kicked to the deadline from 40 yards and it was all over.

Don Crowe pitched two touchdown passes for Beaches, one to Porter and another to Eddie Morin. Both came in the first quarter and after that there was nothing to excite Beaches or the 2,000 fans who watched glumly.

NEWARK BEARS NEED ONE GAME

Team Will Send George Washburn to Mound to Snare This Contest

Newark, N.J., Oct. 7.—(AP)— Newark Bears will send George Washburn, their ace hurler, to the mound tonight in an attempt to register their fourth victory over the Louisville Colonels and snare the Little World Series trophy — minor league baseball prize.

Confronting the International League playoff winners, however, will be Cecil (Tex) Hughson, Colonel Hurler who was credited with the American Association entry's only victory thus far in the four games played of the best-of-seven series.

Newark, aided and abetted by Leroy (Tarzan) Parmelee, Louisville pitcher, gained its third victory over the Colonels here yesterday by a score of 6-1.

The Bears got their first run in the opening frame in an orthodox manner, but Parmelee, long known as a wildman of the mound ran true to form in the third and fourth innings and uncorked four wild pitches to let in three Newark runs —or enough to insure victory for the home club.

Parmelee lasted only four innings.

Around comes Monday and again it's professional wrestling at the Hume Arena. Getting to be quite a habit, but as one woman remarked last week "These Monday night grappling exhibitions are a tonic for the rest of the week and takes one's mind off that 'blue Monday' feeling." It's safe in betting Tom George won't turn hand-springs around the squared circle after his bout with Mike Domerko tonight. Tom put on a great egotistic performance after winning last week, but this man Domerko is as tough a hombre as George ever met and despite Tom's chesty opinion of himself he's in for a going over tonight, and if he doesn't realize it now, he will after the main bout. The fans should welcome the Jimmie Allen-Otto Olson semi-final, as both boys are fast clean grapplers. Jimmie Micheall, the local Greek lad, makes his professional grappling debut against Pedro Valdez and it won't do any harm to give Jimmie a little moral support.

World series history was made in Saturday's game when "Oom Paul" Derringer gave up but five stingy hits and the Reds knotted the series count. Incidentally it was Derringer's first world series victory in six starts. Prior to Saturday Derringer had pitched in the fall classic last year and in 1934 with the St. Louis Cardinals, not counting the opening game of the current series, and in five previous starts he tasted the bitter pill of defeat, but Saturday "Oom Paul" was handled superbly by Jimmie Wilson, in fact they gave up two bases on balls purposely and Derringer went on to win a great game. Another history-making event was made when "Pinkie" Higgins, the Tigers' third sacker, established a new record in world series play when he had nine assists, the greatest number of infield assists ever recorded in any one game of the fall classic. Higgins broke another series record when he completed 27 assists in five series games this year.

Jimmie Follwell, Belleville's gift to big time Canadian football, scored the winning point when the Toronto Argos beat Montreal 9 to 8 in the Quebec metropolis Saturday. On the last play of the game a Montreal player tackled high and a penalty was called, necessitating one more play by Argos, despite the fact full time had been completed. On that last play Jimmie's educated toe mounted the old pigskin to the Montreal deadline for a point and an Argo victory. Nice going. It looks though it's Ottawa to beat in the Big Four, the Rough Riders trounced the Hamilton Tigers 21 to 1 Saturday when in the Senior O.R.F.U. the 26th Battery of Sarnia beat Camp Borden 21 to 3, while Balmy Beach downed the Hamilton Alerts 20 to 10. All of this reminds us that the district Senior Interscholastic group pushes off with Albert College at Cobourg on Wednesday, while Cobourg makes their initial Belleville appearance on Thanksgiving Day here.

Do you remember when Christy Mathewson, immortal pitcher of the New York Giants, died at Saranac Lake, N.Y., 15 years ago today? Baseball mourned one of the greatest hurlers in its history. Mathewson had been ill many months from tuberculosis.

It has been 20 years since a pitcher came through with three triumphs in a single world series. In 1920, Stan Coveleskie became the hero of Cleveland's lone world series conquest by taming the Brooklyn Dodgers in a trio of contests without suffering a loss. However, this series went five out of nine games. The last time a pitcher hurled three victories in a best four-out-of-seven game set was in 1917, when Red Faber of the Chicago White Sox thrice defeated the New York Giants while bowing to the McGrawmen in a single encounter.

Six other three-game winners were: Jack Coombs, Philadelphia Athletics, against the Chicago Cubs, 1910; Smoky Joe Wood, Boston Red Sox, against the New York Giants, 1912; Bill Dinneen, Boston Red Sox, against Pittsburgh, 1903; Charles Phillippe, Pittsburgh vs. Boston Red Sox, 1903; Babe Adams, Pittsburgh, vs Detroit, 1909, and Christy Mathewson, New York Giants, against Philadelphia Athletics, 1905.

In all world series victories to date this fall the winning pitchers have been dominate. For instance Paul Derringer hurled a five-hitter for the Reds to win on Saturday, but yesterday Buck Newsom came back with a three-hitter for the Tigers, and you don't win many ball games on three hits, especially when they're all singles as was the case yesterday when Newsom chalked up his second series win. Also it must be remembered that Newsom is labouring under the thought of a recent family bereavement. Standing at three games to two the series returns to Crosley Field with the Tigers strong favorites to win. Newsom revealed yesterday he was "pitching that one for Dad," and there was no victory bedlam in the Detroit clubhouse out of respect for the big stout-hearted hurler's father, who died after seeing his son win the first game of the series. And who says there isn't any sentiment in baseball?

SPORT SPICE: Apparently the brand of baseball played in the Central Ontario senior circles is just as dominant as in years past . . . On Saturday Peg Hurst's Oshawa ballsters beat Niagara Falls 9-0, after having won at home in the opening series game . . . The teams continue at Oshawa in a best-in-five series next Saturday . . . At Niagara Falls Steamer Lucas yielded up nine hits, but scattered them so masterfully that the poor boys from the town of the Big Roar could not mold them into a single run . . . Buck Newsom delivered exactly 115 pitches against the Reds yesterday as but 31 batters faced him . . . N. A. (Pete) Beach promised us the names of the personnel of his 1940 Albert College senior football squad before they play in Cobourg Wednesday and Pete says he's got a couple of likely looking kids coming up.

ESCAPES BOMB

Prince Rudiger von Starhemberg had a narrow escape when a German bomb demolished a house next to that occupied by the prince in London. Von Starhemberg barely escaped with his life when Hitler took over Austria, of which the prince was vice-chancellor. He is wearing some kind of a flying uniform here, but the British caption written fails to state what his status in England is—other than exile.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Zanzibar"

Persuading "atmosphere" players to work at close quarters with live lions and leopards in scenes for Universal's African adventure drama, "Zanzibar," now at the Capitol, was anything but an easy task for director Harold Schuster.

"I assured them we had taken every safety precaution, that we had armed guards and plenty of men close by to protect them in case the lions became too wild," Schuster said, "but I'm afraid I never really convinced them."

In one of the picture's most spectacular scenes, wild beasts, lions and leopards were turned loose upon natives by the white hunters, Lola Lane, James Craig and Tom Fadden, as they make their escape from a jungle village.

"We had to shoot that scene with three cameras, and it was one of the fastest bits of action I ever witnessed," director Schuster explained. "But it was only through using all the persuasion and psychology I knew that I could get the players anywhere near that mass of plunging and roaring lions."

On the same programme Noel Coward's "Private Lives" starring Norma Shearer and Robert Montgomery, also showing the new Canada Carries On series "Wings of Youth," showing Canadian airfields from coast to coast and its personnel.

AT THE BELLE

"I Was An Adventuress"

Glamorous romance and thoroughly absorbing entertainment result when exquisite Zorina meets Richard Greene in "I Was An Adventuress" the 20th Century-Fox presentation announced as the next attraction at the Belle theatre.

Zorina, appearing by courtesy of Samuel Goldwyn, portrays an alluring huntress of fortune who, until she meets one of her intended victims in the person of Greene, thinks love is not for her. How this engaging couple overcome the obstacles which threaten to keep them from completely realizing their love, makes one of the most delightfully entertaining films ever to come out of Hollywood.

Set against a series of breathtakingly smart Continental backgrounds, "I Was an Adventuress" provides the gorgeous Zorina with a role which gives her not only an opportunity to appear to best advantage in a wardrobe of eye-filling creations, but also to prove herself a dramatic actress of great ability, under the flawless direction of Gregory Ratoff. As for Richard Greene, this handsome young actor, who has risen to the top rank of Hollywood favorites, turns in a performance which is bound to win him a host of new fans.

Erich Von Stroheim "The man you love to hate," Peter Lorre, Sig Rumann and Fritz Feld are seen in leading roles.

"Sailor's Lady"

Moviegoers are promised an entertainment treat when "Sailor's Lady" 20th Century-Fox picture, packed with comedy and romance and starring Nancy Kelly and Jon Hall is presented as the added laugh feature.

Grand fun all the way through, "Sailor's Lady" has a naval background. Gobs on leave make merry, an adopted baby is smuggled aboard the flagship during the war games and Nancy and Jon find love for keeps—finally! Chockfull of pleasant surprises with romance ashore and laughter afloat the film hits a side-splitting climax.

The strong supporting cast is packed with names of familiar funmakers headed by Joan Davis, Dana Andrews, Mary Nash, Larry Crabbe, Katharine Aldridge, Harry Shannon, Wally Vernon and "Skipper," the stowaway baby who scuttles the war games.

The Belle news of the hour will also be exhibited.

Razzle-dazzle

People who read the sport pages know what RAZZLE-DAZZLE means. It stands for football brilliance. The team that has it is flashy with unexpected passes and trick plays. A razzle-dazzle team gives the spectators plenty to yell about.

Razzle-dazzle is one of the spiciest ingredients of good football. It packs them in, and the customers go home satisfied.

Now, you might think such a satisfactory football ingredient would be a pretty nice thing to pass around to business in general. To merchants, for example. But you'll suddenly realize that razzle-dazzle is the LAST thing you want to find in a merchant you're dealing with!

Brilliant trickery is fine and dandy on the football field. But it's a different story in the marketplace. You want to dodge a razzle-dazzle merchant . . . or manufacturer . . . as you would the plague. And luckily, it's not hard to do.

Patronize those merchants and manufacturers who ADVERTISE. They're calling all their plays out in the open . . . for everybody to see. Merchants who advertise are bound to keep faith with the public . . . if they intend to remain in business.

The War Last Week

By DON GILBERT

(Canadian Press Cable Editor)

If similar meetings in the past can be taken as a criterion, the Brenner Pass conference of Hitler and Mussolini in the 57th week of the war foreshadows a new drive by the axis which may be as novel in its direction as was the Norwegian stroke which followed the April meeting of the dictators.

With the approaching bad weather raising the odds against an attempt to invade the British Isles, the Mediterranean appears to be the likeliest theatre for the next thrust of the axis forces. But whatever the main objective, it may well be preceded by a feint, as the Norwegian campaign was an attempt to divert the allied forces before the big attack was made in the west.

British politics furnished the other major development of the week. The retirement from public life of Neville Chamberlain was made the occasion of the first cabinet reorganization since Winston Churchill became prime minister in May. Ernest Bevin, whose vigorous direction of the Ministry of Labor has contributed to increasing industrial output, was taken into the war cabinet, together with Sir Kingsley Wood, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Sir John Anderson, whose duties as Home Secretary and Minister of Home Security were taken by Herbert Morrison.

Bevin Given High Place

Since Labor entered the government during the crisis of last Spring, Mr. Bevin, a trades union leader, has assumed an ascendant place in the Labor side of politics and his strong personality is likely to exert an increasingly large part in the war effort. Some newspapers grouped him with the Prime Minister and Lord Beaverbrook as one of the strong men of the war cabinet.

In the air war, it might be said that Germany had as rough a time this week as Britain did. While the Nazi bombings appeared to be losing a little of their fierceness before the unyielding perseverance of Britain's defenders, the Royal Air Force carried out repeated night attacks on Berlin and German industrial centres, and in continuing its harassment of the "invasion coast" the R.A.F. bombers made both day and night forays.

Nothing Tangible Develops

Nothing tangible developed during the week towards crystallization of the international line-up in the wake of the Rome-Berlin-Tokyo pact. The United States was unmoved by Axis shouts that it must choose between helping Britain and fighting the three powers.

There was much speculation as to Russia's course and consultations in London and Washington between the Soviet ambassadors in the two capitals and the British and United States governments were noted in connection with suggestions that the Berlin pact might be aimed primarily at Soviet Russia. Turkey, tied to both Britain and Russia, expressed hope that a London-Washington-Moscow understanding might be the outcome.

Glancing back 25 years: Balkan developments in the week of Sept. 29-Oct. 5, 1915, caused apprehension throughout Europe. Movement of Austro-Hungarian troops into Bulgaria resulted in Russia demanding a clear statement of Bulgaria's position. On October 5 Bulgaria demanded cession of Macedonian territory by Greece and the same day the pro-ally Premier of Greece, Eleutherios Venizelos, resigned.

London's A. A. Defence Best of Any Met by Nazis Russians Say

Moscow, Oct. 7 (AP)—The Soviet press established Sat. a Tass dispatch reporting that "the present system of anti-aircraft defence for London is more imposing than any so far encountered by German aviation."

The two-column dispatch of the Russian News Agency described an anti-aircraft battery outside London and reported, among other reasons for approval, that seven of the [illegible] soldiers manning it were members of labor unions.

Soviet Russia's own air raid defence exercises continued last night with a blackout of Leningrad, for the second successive night.

Little Benny's Note Book

We were eating breakfist without anybody saying anything on account of it still being early in the morning and everybody proberly still wishing they hadn't even got up yet, and our cook Nora looked out of the kitchin, saying to ma, I'm not going to get me washing done, Monday or no Monday, unless the plummer comes to see what ales them washtubs, and on top of that there's not a morsel of laundry soap in the house, and while I'm about it I might as well remind you the front doorbell only rings when it has a mind to, no matter if the mayor himself was on the doorsteps.

All right, all right, I'll do the necessary telephoning, ma said. O deer, the things that can go wrong about a house. With your smoothly running routines you haven't the faintest idea of what a gasly hectic struggle daily existence can be, what a lucky sex, she said.

Meening men, and pop said, Is that so, well I'm glad for your sake you never have to walk into an office to find all your important correspondents locked up in your secretary's top draw, and there on your desk lies a letter from her telling you she'll report for work the following day if her stiff neck is less stiff, and I said, Sure ma, G wizzickers, and I'm glad for your sake you never have to sit there in school like a slave waiting to find out what question your teacher is going to ask you and wondering whether it's going to be one you know the answer to or one you studied and forgot.

Wich just then Nora stuck her head in out of the kitchin again, saying, I forgot to tell you me electric iron wont get hot.

Being another point for ma, and she got up to telephone and pop went to his office and I went to school.

Proving there's enough trouble in the world to go around for everybody.

NEW YORK STOCKS

New York, Oct. 7 (AP)—Hesitancy ruled in the stock market today. Early dealings were the slowest in several weeks and, near the fourth hour minor fractional price changes left trends in doubt.

Pending further developments in Europe and the Far East, brokers said, speculative contingents apparently inclined toward a policy of discretion. Broadening of the United States business structure provided scant stimulation to the market.

Edging forward now and then were shares of U.S. Steel, General Motors, Chrysler, Sears Roebuck, Kennecott, Anaconda, Eastman Kodak, Loft, White Rock and J. C. Penney.

Backward were Bethlehem Steel, Douglas Aircraft, Texas Comp., Du Pont, Westinghouse, Western Union, Consolidated Edison and Air Reduction.

Most Canadian issues moved higher. McIntyre, Distillers Seagram and Lake Shore Mines each gained ¼ of a point. Hiram Walker dipped ⅜. Canada 4s, in the bond market, held steady.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Oct. 7 (CP)—In dull trading through the early hours on Toronto exchange today, mining issues improved slightly, industrials were down narrowly and the western oils steady. Turnover in the first three hours totalled 64,000 shares.

Upper Canada and Bidgood-Kirkland traded in considerable volume at higher prices and Macleod-Cockshutt, San Antonio and Malartic Gold Fields gained narrowly. Pamour dropped 4 cents and Lake Shore 1-2.

The Abitibi issues were stronger, helped, apparently by the impending court action to stop the proposed sale of the Abitibi assets. Utilities and foods were firm.

Home Oil and Calgary and Edmonton posted gains of a cent or two. Other western oils were dormant.

LIVESTOCK

Steadier Tone In Egg Prices

Toronto, Oct. 7.—A steadier tone developed in eggs as butter held firm and cheese unchanged on Saturday's session of the Toronto open produce market.

Demand for grade A-large improved on the egg market and the price on this grade in the graded division firmed 1-2 cent per dozen. Other grades maintained previous levels. Government inspected shipments of graded eggs remained at the one-cent-per-dozen premium.

Light offerings of first-grade Ontario creamery butter solids cleared readily at steady to firm prices under fairly good demand. Holders asked 25 3-4 cents for No. 1 grades. Prints traded in retail channels at 26 1-2 cents to 27 cents per pound.

Spotty demand and small available supplies left prices unchanged on the wholesale cheese market. Local dealers again quoted 14 1-8 cents per pound for current make, new, large paraffined.

LAMBETH PALACE

Central Wall Collapses.

The blasts collapsed the central wall of the palace and caused havoc inside. No one was reported injured.

The bombs fell at about the same time Westminster Abbey and the House of Lords were damaged.

They landed in the rear of the building, thus saving from destruction several valuable paintings of former archbishops and other irreplaceable historical objects. The several paintings were scratched badly, however, when the dust of the explosion was removed.

Included are portraits by Holbein, Van Dyck, Hogarth and Reynolds.

Lambeth Place, London residence of Archbishops of Canterbury for seven centuries, stands opposite the House of Parliament on the south side of the Thames.

(The palace was begun in 1262 by Archbishop Boniface, but few of his successors failed to add to it or alter it in some way. The present residential part dates to about 1838.)

NAZI COASTAL

Bomber Fights Off 12 Planes

"Almost immediately after the attack the bomber itself was engaged by a formation of 12 Messerschmitt 109 fighters. In the running fight which ensued, the British rear gunner shot one of the Messerschmitts down in flames and held off the rest of the formation until the bomber had gained cover in a cloud.

"Barges and shipping at Boulogne and Ostend were also attacked. One raider crossing over Holland into western Germany located and bombed the airdrome at Diepholz, 30 miles southwest of Bremen where two high explosive bombs were seen to burst on the tarmac (runway) immediately in front of a line of hangars.

"Other bomber forces ranging over the Dutch coast bombed a number of supply ships lying alongside the quay at Horlisten, barges in the River Maas and attacked shipping in the Zuider Zee ports of Stavoren and Enkhuizen. At Stavoren, several heavy calibre bombs burst on the wharf side and at Enkhuizen hits were scored on the west quay and in the northern harbor. Here a number of small ships were hit and fires started.

"The supply ships in the Dutch harbor of Den Helder, terminus of the great North Holland Canal, were attacked in the afternoon in the face of heavy fire from anti-aircraft batteries. Four bombers struck harbor works, causing a violent explosion and what one observer described as a 'cloud of red sparks.'

"An 800-ton ship making towards the harbor also was bombed from a low level in a shallow dive attack. A direct hit was scored on the stern of the ship, which was left enveloped in a cloud of steam and smoke. When aircraft returned to the scene a few minutes later the vessel had disappeared."

2 GUARDS TO FACE COURT-MARTIAL

Men Charged With Responsibility for Escape of Two Prisoners From Internment Camp

Ottawa, Oct. 7 (CP)—Two guards, charged with responsibility for the escape of Ernest Nueller and Rudolph Rauschenback from an internment camp in northwestern Ontario will be court-martialled, defence Minister Ralston announced today.

Nueller was shot dead and Friday evening Rauschenbach recaptured.

The Minister said the district court martial would determine the responsibility of the guards.

The attempt of Neuller and Rauschenbach to gain their freedom brought the number of attempts to break out of internment camps in Canada to 14.

However only one man who tried to escape managed to evade Canadian authorities. He is 29-year-old Manuel Fischer, held at International Falls, Minn.

Nueller died under rifle fire when he resisted capture by an internment camp guard who came on the former German sailor and his companion in a trapper's shanty not far from the place where they broke away from an internment camp work party.

Rauschenbach was safely returned to the camp. He surrendered to the guard after Neuller was shot.

A 'MASTER PLAN' OF AIR ATTACKS UNDER OPERATION

Britain Will Start Land Offensive on Continent When Nazis Beaten Down, Says Croft

CRUSH PRODUCTION

Krupp Works and Nazi-Held Channel Ports Heavily Bombed During Weekend

London, Oct. 7—(CP)—London, rested by its first respite from bombing in 30 nights, looked hopefully today to Great Britain's own counter-offensive—a "master plan" of air attacks intended to cripple Germany so British armies could drive the Nazis back into Germany.

Predictions that Britain will seize the offensive in land operations on the continent when—according to plan—the Royal Air Force have beaten down the Nazi Air Force coincided with reports of widespread British night attacks during the week end.

The huge Krupp munitions works at Essen, important industrial targets in Germany, and the Nazi-held ports along the channel coast were bombed heavily.

Forecasts of a British offensive came from Lord Croft, Undersecretary for War, and the Daily Express, published by Lord Beaverbrook, Minister for Aircraft Production.

Lord Croft said Britain will attack when German air power and war production have been crushed. He estimated that there has been "a far greater casualty list" among Germans at the so-called invasion ports "than anything we have suffered from indiscriminate attacks on Great Britain."

British Bombs Take Toll

He declared "it is highly probable" that British bombs have killed more workers in German factories than the total of British civilians killed and added:

"It is believed that ten days ago a single British submarine sent more German soldiers to their doom than all British deaths caused by German airmen in the whole month of August."

The British reported 1,075 civilians killed in August. The September toll has been estimated at 5,000 dead and 8,000 injured.

(The only German transport which the British recently have reported sunk by submarine was a 10,000-ton ship off Denmark with 4,000 soldiers aboard. It was reported Sept. 20 that the ship was sunk Sept. 2.)

Lord Beaverbrook's Express predicted the next phase of the war would be "the hurling against Germany of the strength of the English-speaking world expressed in air power."

The newspaper declared 54,000 airmen for Britain already are in training in the dominions and said the Empire's Air Plan aimed at an output of 50,000 pilots a year from the British Commonwealth Air Training Plan in Canada.

The Air Ministry said R.A.F. blows at Germany, following a "master plan," already have curtailed German warplane production, seriously hampered communications, and hit at plants producing 50 per cent of Germany's annual production of 2,500,000 tons of oil.

Two Tons Dropped on Krupps

During the week-end attacks two tons of explosives were dumped on the Krupp works. Fires were seen after the bombing of the freight yards at Hamm and Osnabruck and the waterfront at Rotterdam, fliers said. German-used airdromes were bombed at Schipdel, Texel, Oldebroek and Bummum. Gelsenkirchen was bombed for an hour and a half, setting factory districts afire.

A heavy attack was concentrated on German barges in the French ports of Brest and Gravelines, along a coastal section repeatedly hit by R.A.F. night fliers.

Lord Croft's statements were contained in a letter yesterday thanking Alderman Dickinson, Chairman of Bournemouth's war services organization, for the past year's work for the comfort of British troops.

He warned that the vital points now are "first," the defence of Great Britain and second, defence of Egypt and the Suez Canal"

No Despondency

"The British people," he said, "have every reason for grim resolution but none for despondency. Our navy still commands the wide oceans. Our army is equal to meeting the two blows which we must expect at home in the desert, and our air force has risen magnificently to its great task."

He added that "less British blood has been shed owing to all the air attacks in 12 months than we frequently lost in a single hour" during the last war.

Sources at the United States Embassy in London said last night that Ambassador Joseph P. Kennedy has asked Washington to send another ship for removal of more United States citizens from Britain.

(The United States State Department said at Washington that no request for another ship had been received from Kennedy and that there was no present intention of trying to get another ship through)

INDIVIDUAL

Daylight raids, starting with attacks by single or small groups of planes, broadened into a series of thrusts with large numbers taking part.

The third daylight alarm was sounded in the London area as German planes, flying singly and by twos and threes, flew over the southeastern part of the city and also over the southwest coast.

Bursts of machine-gun and anti-aircraft fire told of brief battles during the second and third raids, and apparently the bombers were driven off. But later they returned over a southwestern London district and were met by ground fire and British fighters.

Bombs fell in two southeastern sections of London during the second alarm of the morning there.

Much of the air fighting over the southeast coast broke up quickly into individual combats. Watchers saw a Spitfire chase a German fighter over Kent at terrific speed. Haze enveloped the planes as they swept out over the set. The choked scream of an engine sounded as if one of the planes plunged. A few minutes later the Spitfire reappeared.

Barrage Balloons Attacked.

Long, yellow-nosed German fighters attacked the barrage balloons at Dover, swooping within 1,000 feet of the housetops. Two balloons near the waterfront fell in flames.

Shortly before noon a dive bomber dropped high explosives on a town in Kent. One exploded on the grounds of a large house on the outskirts. Another hit a cottage in the working class district. A woman was reported trapped in the ruins.

Two Spitfires shot down a twin-engined German bomber off the southeast coast.

One man was killed and several persons were injured when a raider dropped a whistling bomb in a street of a Kent coast town.

A south coast town was peppered with machine-gun bullets by another raider. One casualty was reported.

The Germans took advantage of brilliant sunshine which succeeded thick clouds and storms yesterday and last night, when air activity was greatly reduced.

The first day raiders were seen streaking at 20,000 feet over England's east coast, bursts of anti-aircraft ringing them.

Some bombs were dropped by the first planes. In a coastal town windows of a convent where 12 nuns were praying were smashed. The nuns were unhurt.

A nearby convalescent home was hit but the caretaker and his wife, its only occupants, were uninjured.

Night of Silence.

London's anti-aircraft guns roared into action just before dawn after a night of strange silence when a channel gale and wind-driven rain shielded the city from bombings.

The pre-dawn alarm was brief and anti-aircraft guns fell silent after a German plane, believed on a reconnaissance flight over the northwestern outskirts of the city, disappeared.

By mid-morning London had a second raid warning. Persons in central London saw puffs like shell bursts over the Thames estuary and raiders were reported to have dropped 12 bombs on a residential section of southeastern London.

Two homes were demolished and rescue crews rushed to the scene to dig for bodies in the wreckage.

A communique said a few bombs were dropped shortly after dark last night by a lone raider on the outskirts of the London area, "causing little damage and no casualties".

Elsewhere in England no overnight attacks were reported.

Weather Unfavorable.

Flying conditions were reported extremely unfavorable. A gale lashed heavy seas in the Strait of Dover. Sunday's rain continued in a drizzle through the night and visibility at Dover was still poor after dawn though the sun came out.

Sunday day-light attacks brought a resumption of street-strafing by low-flying planes. Three streets in eastern London were splattered with machine-gun bullets.

Four women and a child were reported killed at Folkstone by a dive bomber.

Some twenty districts around London and in southeastern England were attacked, many of the planes diving from cloudbanks which hid them from Royal Air Force fighter patrols and ground gun crews.

An undisclosed number of casualties was reported in raids on the east Midlands and east Anglia, and some houses were demolished in an unidentified town in Northamptonshire.

At least one raiding bomber was counted shot down despite weather conditions which the Air Ministry said "made interception by our fighters difficult."

MINING INDUSTRY PLAYS FULL PART IN PRESENT WAR

War Materials Can be Produced in Greater Quantity and at Lower Prices Than in 1914-18

YEAR BOOK OUT

Ottawa, Oct. 7 (CP).—Canada's mining industry can be expected to play its full part in the present war effort, "both in providing minerals essential for military and civil needs and for the support of the economic front," according to the Canada Year book for 1940.

The year book just published by the Department of Trade and Commerce, is the official statistical annual. The new issue contains a section of the development of Canada's mineral resources in relation to the war effort.

"Not only is the Canadian mining industry able to produce very important essential war materials in greater quantities than ever before, but it can do so profitably at prices very much lower than those that had to be paid during the war of 1914-18," the Year Book says.

"Thus, a very valuable indirect contribution is being made to the conservation of the allied economic reserves.

"In addition, by reason of the remarkable expansion in gold mining in recent years, the industry is in an exceptionally strong position to add directly to those economic reserves."

The year book points out that Canada's mining structure has been built up on the basis of peace-time needs. The gold production in 1939 was valued at $184,144,756 in Canadian funds. At $35 a fine ounce, that represented $178,331,160 in immediately available foreign credits in the United States—more than ten times the average annual foreign credits made available by Canadian gold for the four years from 1915 to 1918.

Nickel Production Increased.

The Year Book goes on to say that in 1914-18, Canada was an important nickel producer, although in unrefined form, but the Dominion produced comparatively little copper, lead and zinc.

"Since that time . . . its annual production of nickel has more than quadrupled; and the Dominion now holds a leading position, both as a producer and exporter, of copper, lead and zinc.

"It is fully equipped with huge metallurgical refining plants, one each for lead and nickel, and two each for copper and zinc, and all can be increased in capacity, as required, at relatively small capital outlay.

"The dominion's large producers of copper, lead and zinc are passing the advantages of their low costs of production on to the British government for war purposes, by agreeing to furnish the larger part of their outputs at virtually the prices that prevailed just prior to the war.

"On their purchases of these three metals under these agreements, the British government will pay possibly from $75,000,000 to $90,000,000 less per year than for similar purchases in 1918."

The Year Book mentions several "recent" events in Canadian mining—discovery of high-grade hematite from ore in north western Ontario, resumption after sixteen years of production of iron ore at the New Helen Mine in Ontario, and development of the Turner Valley crude petroleum field of Alberta.

BOY IS KILLED

The accident happened at the corners of Francis and Mercia Streets. The boy was riding his bicycle east on Francis Street and was attempting to grasp a passing truck driven by Herman Keetch, of 51 Nassau Street, Oshawa. In some manner the boy fell from his bicycle under the wheels of the truck.

The father was driving along Francis Street, looking for his son, to take him home for supper. Seeing the boy on the bicycle he stopped his car in order to call him. As he did, Mr. Buck saw his son thrown from the bicycle under the truck. Mrs. Kenneth Buck, an aunt and Miss Anne Bedore also witnessed the accident.

The driver of the truck did not know anything of the accident until he heard the shouts of Mr. Buck and the screams of the two ladies. He was able to stop his truck approximately 45 feet from the scene of the accident.

Chief William Bain who with Constable F. Lozo investigated the accident, stated the driver informed him that he felt a slight bump but did not realize he had run over the boy.

Surviving the young lad are his parents and one brother Laverne.

NEW TERRITORIAL FORCE

Wellington, N.Z., Oct. 7 —(CP—Reuters)—Six thousand young New Zealanders are being called up by lot to form a new territorial force. They are being chosen in this way from among 16,000 men liable for military service.

Hardly a Window Now Intact in House of Lords

Concussion Causes Considerable Damage To Historic Henry VII's Chapel

London, Oct. 7 — (CP)—Ancient Westminster Abbey, where Britain has crowned her kings and queens and buried many of her illustrious dead has been severely damaged by a large German bomb.

The raid occurred recently but the authorities at first barred mention of its effect.

The missile, which blasted a hole 20 feet in diameter in old palace yard, behind the statue of Richard the Lion-Hearted near the Peers' entrance of the House of Lords, also damaged the roof of fashionable St. Margaret's church, adjacent to the Abbey, and blew in hundreds of leaded windows of the House of Lords.

There is hardly a window now intact in the House of Lords.

Concussion from the bomb caused considerable damage to historic Henry VII's chapel, 16th century shrine at the east end of the Abbey, where many kings and queens lie buried and knights of the Order of the Bath are installed with ancient pomp.

No Direct Hit

There was no direct hit on the Abbey.

The part used for crypts for rulers was not damaged but huge chunks of the outside masonry were blasted away.

The famous Poets' Corner of the Abbey is some distance from the chapel, being located in one corner of the south transept of the Abbey.

Splinters were sent flying southeast from the bomb crater clear up and the tallest of the three towers over Victoria Tower, 36 feet high of the Houses of Parliament; others were catapulted to the northwest and marked a statue of Oliver Cromwell in front of Westminster Hall, 70 feet from the crater.

The figure of Richard the Lion-Hearted was undamaged but his sword was bent and the horse slightly injured.

U.S. FULLY up with our whining pseudo-intellectuals, the political pimps negotiating for the alien vote, the Communist isolationists, the hysterical pacifists and all those 'passive barbarians' in our midst who gave fawning acquiescence to ruthless power.

"We knew as a matter of plain decency and hard sense we must help our neighbors in the English-speaking world. We said, 'Stop Hitler Now'."

Pays Tribute to Canada

A forthright tribute to the part Canada is playing in bringing Britain and the United States closer together was paid by Mr. Hunt. In this connection, he said:

"My friends, I am not sure that you fully appreciate what an effective and decisive part Canada is playing in this war. Perhaps you are too busy. I am referring not only to your military efforts, which are becoming more obvious and more splendid day by day. There is something even more important than that for us and our children

"Canada has become, as never before, the mighty bridge of a better understanding and a warmer sense of kinship between the British Empire and the United States. You are bridging the gap which certain superficial differences have created between Englishmen and Americans. Yes, superficial indeed, as we now know, but sufficient in times past to cause needless irritations and absurd suspicions.

"It is given to you to bring about the mightiest and most enduring friendship in the history of nations. If you can do that, it will be the noblest achievement of any country in modern times. Did I say 'if?' You are doing it by word and deed, by your superb and unquenchable loyalty to Britain and by your daily acts of friendship to America.

"If ever a nation deserved loyalty it is Britain now. She has won such a loyalty as she has never had before—loyalty from her sons and daughters throughout the Empire, from her kinsmen and friends in America, from men and women throughout the world who want to remain or pray to become free. They know that if Britain lives, freedom lives."

Mr. Hunt paid tribute to Winston Churchill as "a magnificent leader . . . . the living symbol of the underlying unity of the English-speaking world, a unity which is the best hope for the future of mankind.

"A heroic people and a heroic age need a heroic leader," he declared. "Such a man is Churchill. When America has hit her stride as you have done, when she has taken her rightful place in the battle line of freedom, then we Americans shall be entitled to take the same pride that Winston Churchill is our man as well as England's.

Some people, he said, were amazed at the British spirit. They need not be. It was a story older than Canada or the United States.

"More than half a century before the first English settlers came to Jamestown and Plymouth, the great churchman, Bishop Latimer, was burned at the stake for his religious beliefs," said Mr. Hunt. "Just as the fires were lighted, he turned to his friend at the stake next to him and said, 'Play the man, Master Ridley. We shall this day light a candle, by God's grace, in England, as I trust shall never be put out.'

"That, my friends, is why there'll always be an England."

TRAINING PLANE CRASHES, KILLING 2 AIRCRAFTSMEN

Aviator Who Recently Received Wings is One of Victims in Accident South of Camp Borden

HIGHWAY DEATHS

Engineer Fatally Hurt as He Falls From Locomotive in London Roundhouse

(By the Canadian Press)

The crash of a Royal Canadian Air Force training plane, three highway accidents, one electrocution, one drowning, two falls and a scalding brought the Ontario week-end toll of fatalities to 10. The record was increased to 12 with the finding of the bodies of two women who had died previously.

Leading Aircraftman Thomas A. Barr, 22, of Edmonton and Aircraftman E. A. Frymark of Milwaukee, were killed Sunday when their plane crashed south of Camp Borden. Barr, celebrating his 22nd birthday, was piloting the plane in practice flying. He recently received his wings under the British Commonwealth Air Training scheme.

Electrician's Helper Electrocuted

Carlyle Winterburn, a 17-year-old electrician's helper in Cornwall, was electrocuted Saturday when he accidentally touched a high-voltage line.

Seven-year-old Tommy Fraser of Sarnia, son of Bombardier Robert Fraser, with the Canadian Active Service Force in England, was drowned Saturday when he fell into the St. Clair River.

A two-year-old baby, Ruth Ann Schilbe, died at Dashwood in Western Ontario of scalds received from boiling water in her parents' home a week ago.

Fall from Locomotive Fatal

Thomas Jones, 64, a Canadian Pacific Railway employee in the London roundhouse, was fatally injured Saturday in a fall from a locomotive. In Toronto Andrew Wardell, 55, a transient, died late Saturday of head injuries he received striking the pavement after he had been ejected from a beverage room.

Three young boys were victims in the highway fatalities; John McDowell, three, of Langton district near Simcoe, was killed when the car in which he was a passenger crashed near Langton Sunday; Delbert Buck, nine, of Trenton was killed when he fell from his bicycle under the dual wheels of a heavy transport truck Saturday; and seven-year-old Gordon Leclair of Windsor's suburban Riverside was killed when struck by a car Sunday.

The bodies of two women who had been missing a week were also found Sunday, one believed a murder victim. The latter was Mrs. Aune Newell, 22, whose strangled body was found in a clump of bushes on Toronto Island. At St. Catharines the body of Mrs. Helen Dayman, 28, was found in the old Welland Canal.

ITALIANS EXPEL

(President Roosevelt read without comment a Rome dispatch to the New York Times which said "the axis is out to defeat President Roosevelt because the President's foreign policy and because of everything for which he stands in the eyes of the Italians and the Germans.)

Virginio Gayda, Fascist editor, yesterday accused the President of inventing a "fable" of axis hostility to his re-election as a campaign manoeuvre and challenged the Times to prove the dispatch. He declared "it makes little difference to the axis whether Roosevelt is elected or not."

Gayda, referring in an editorial to the government's action, called it an "act to clarify Italian policy and relations with the United States."

Gayda said the American writer attempted to create "a new intrigue" by speaking without proof of an Italian plan to bring about the defeat of President Roosevelt.

"The plan does not exist, cannot exist," Gayda said.

Matthews said the reason for his expulsion was "because Roosevelt made a political issue of my story, and the axis feels it must answer."

Schoolboy Rowe of Tigers Knocked from Mound in First As Reds Score Twice on 4 Hits

Bucky Walters Keeps Tigers From Scoring Sheet for First Five Innings

GORSICA IN RELIEF

Billy Werber Leads All Hitters in the Series With Ten Bingles

(By Judson Bailey, Associated Press Sports Writer)

Crosley Field, Cincinnati, Oct. 7—(AP)—The World Series came back to Cincinnati today with Bucky Walters assigned to the pitching chore by the Reds and Schoolboy Rowe going to the mound for Detroit Tigers as the two clubs clashed in the sixth and possibly deciding game.

Rain during the night and early morning drenched the playing field and cut into the size of the crowd, which probably was no greater than 25,000 when the contest started.

Today's pitchers were the rivals in the second game of the series in this same arena last Thursday and at that time Walters, a slender right-hander who won 22 and lost 10 games during the regular season, gave the Reds their first series triumph.

Rowe, a big rugged-looking right-hander, was batted out in the box in that affair and the Reds hoped to repeat the performance today to atone for yesterday's 8-0 shutout at Detroit and again level the series.

Line-ups:

Tigers—Bartell, s.s.; McCosky, c.f.; Gehringer, 2b.; Greenberg, l.f.; York, 1b.; Higgins, 3b.; Campbell, r.f.; Tebbetts, c.; Rowe, p.

Reds—Werber, 3b.; M. McCormick, c.f.; Goodman, r.f.; F. McCormick, 1b.; Ripple, l.f.; Wilson, c.; Joost, 2b.; Myers, s.s.; Walters, p.

Umpires—Plate, Emmett Ormsby, American League;; first base, Lee Bilanfant, National League; second base, Steve Basil, American League; third base, Bill Klem, National League.

First Inning

Tigers—Bartell took one strike, and then lifted a high fly to Ripple. With the count one strike and two balls, McCosky lifted a pop foul which Werber took in front of the boxes near third base. Ripple made a running catch of Gehringer's fly in the left field corner. 0 runs, 0 hits, 0 errors, none left.

Reds—Werber waited out a three and two count, and then belted a liner against the fence in left field, 328 feet from the plate, and made second before Greenberg could recover the ball. M. McCormick laid down a sacrifice bunt on the first pitch and was thrown out, Rowe to York, Werber reaching third. Goodman hit the first pitch on a bounce to York about 30 feet from first base and reached the bag for a single before Rowe could get there to take a throw, Werber scoring on the play. F. McCormick waited out a count of two balls and one strike, and then shot a vicious single along the third base line, Goodman pulling up at second. John Gorsica, a right-hander, started warming up in the Tiger bull pen. Ripple sent a long foul into the right field stands, and then singled sharply to right centre, scoring Goodman and sending F. McCormick to third. Rowe was replaced by Gorsica. Wilson took one strike, popped a foul while trying to bunt and then struck out on the third pitch. Higgins raced to his left to make an almost miraculous pickup of Joost's grounder and throw to Gehringer to force Ripple at second. 2 runs, 4 hits, 0 errors, two left.

Second Inning

Tigers—Greenberg struck out on four pitches, the last being Walters' favorite sinker. York took one strike, and then sent a long fly to Goodman in right field. Campbell got the count to three and two and then walked on an inside pitch. Higgins singled into short left moving Campbell to second. Tebbetts took two strikes, and then bounced to Walters and was thrown out. No runs, one hit, no errors, two left.

Reds—Mayers looked at three straight balls and then struck out. Walters, with two strikes against him, bounced to Gorsica and was thrown out. With the count one strike and two balls, Werber punched a single through short. M. McCormick topped the ball in front of the plate and was thrown out by Tebbetts. No runs, one hit, no errors, one left.

Third Inning

Tigers—Gorsica swung at two pitches, and then flied to M. McCormick in deep centre. Bartell looked at three balls and two called strikes, and then doubled down the left field foul line. With two strikes against him, McCosky lined to Goodman in deep right, Bartell going to third after the catch. On the first pitch Gehringer raised a pop foul which Wilson caught half way to third base.

Reds— With two strikes against him, Goodman lifted a high fly to McCosky, who took it without moving out of his tracks. On the first pitch, F. McCormick raised a high foul to Higgins behind third base. Ripple walked on four straight balls. Wilson hit a low liner to Campbell who took it and fell on the soft grass but hung onto the ball.

Fourth Inning

Tigers—Greenberg looked at two balls and a strike, and then raised a high foul to Wilson a few feet from the batter's box. York slammed a three and one pitch into short left for a single. With the count one and one, Campbell shot a hot grounder to Joost who threw to Myers to start a double play, Joost to Myers to F. McCormick. No runs, one hit, no errors, none left.

Reds—Joost knocked a grounder to Bartell in deep short and was thrown out on a close play. With count two and two, Myers bounced the ball back at Gorsica, who deflected it to Bartell, who threw the runner out at first. (Assist for pitcher). Walters was called out on strikes. No runs, no hits, no errors, none left.

Time Not Dull For Bombing Crew On Raid Over Calais

London, Oct. 7 (CP)—A pilot's own version of the battle of Calais against a dozen German warplanes, as related by him after he had set his plane down safely at home with the radio blaring "body and soul", was told by the News Service today.

After scoring direct hits on Calais harbor, he said, he steered for home, heading for a nearby cloud bank, with the German anti-aircraft, "throwing up every sort of projectile they could lay hands on."

But three German fighters appeared off the starboard.

"They got to us before we got to the cloud," the pilot said, "firing for all they were worth. They passed astern of us which gave my rear gunner the chance he was looking for. Meanwhile, nine others had come rushing in at us in three's, also attacking from the rear."

Here the gunner took up the story:-

"I was really too much occupied with the original three which had now circled for the second attack to bother with the rest.

"On they came, still in formation. The leader was flying very steadily, firing all the time. As he closed in I returned the fire and he burst into flames.

"There was a final attack from three of the others, on sweeping just overhead. I gave him a half-pan in the belly at point blank range and after a few passing shots . . . we reached our cloud bank and saw no more of them. . ."

Distribution of Goods as Important As Production Says Lord Lothian

Boston Oct. 7 (CP)—Prime Minister Mackenzie King of Canada, in a message to 12th Boston Conference on distribution, said today that co-operation among English speaking peoples would assure "ultimate realization of sanity, decency and good faith" in human relations.

Noting that Canada and Great Britain were represented by speakers at the conference, Mr. King said:-

"It cannot be too often emphasised that the discussion of common problems and the reaffirmation of common ideals between the English-speaking peoples will inevitably stimulate the present hope and assure the ultimate realization of sanity, decency and good faith in the relations between man and man and nation and nation."

Mr. King's message was read to the conference, a two-day session bringing together many of North America's leading business men and economists.

"In this world distribution has a place at least as important as that of production," declared Lord Lothian, British Ambassador, in a message to the conference.

"Every totalitarian attempt to substitute some simplified and planned alternative (to the distribution system) has simply resulted in larger and longer queues of people waiting for supplies which as often as not are not there."

Preserved Body of Young Woman Kept in a Bedroom for Seven Years

Key West, Fla., Oct. 7 —(AP)—Police pieced together today the strange story of a 70-year-old man they accused of keeping in his bedroom for seven years the preserved body of a young woman whom he hoped to restore to life.

The man, a medical expert in X-ray holding degrees from Leipzig university in Germany, was booked as Karl Tanzler Van Cosel and was charged with removing the body of the 19-year-old woman from its grave without permission.

Van Cosel was quoted by Deputy Sheriff Ray Eldwood:—

"I did not want one so beautiful to go to dust.

"I tried experiments to restore her to life. I hope still if I live long enough to bring her back."

Van Cosel declared he visited the crypt in which the young matron's body lay, and, about two years after death, decided to take the body away.

He said he secretly transferred it to Key West's United States Marine hospital, to which he had ready access as a former X-ray employee, and there treated the body chemically for a week to restore decomposed parts.

Then, secreting the remains in an old airplane he had purchased, he had it trucked to his home in a remote section of this island community, and applied beeswax to protect the outer tissue.

He expressed a firm hope that inner cells could be reactivated with X-ray treatments.

His professed labor of love was interrupted yesterday when sheriff's deputies armed with a warrant entered his home and discovered the secret.

Deputies said Van Cosel was employed in a hospital at which the 19-year-old married woman was treated unsuccessfully for tuberculosis. Impressed by her beauty, he fell in love with her.

After her death he obtained from her family permission to build a vault, disinter the body and place it in the crypt. He spent hours in the vault every day.

"Then one day," he told officers, "I opened her coffin and found that the body was decaying. I did not want one so beautiful to go to dust."

The body, wrapped in a silken robe, lay on one of the two twin beds in the room. On the wrists were gold bracelets and in the hair was an artificial rose.

Americans, Here on Fishing Trip, Pleased With Cordial Reception

"They couldn't shove their rotten propaganda down our throats. We have been in Canada before and we know what kind of treat we know what kind of treatment ed like royalty in peace years, and we are getting the same kind of treatment now that you boys are at war".

Thus spoke E. P. Grissinger, and A. Ziegler, residents of McKeesport, Pennsylvania, who paused in the city Sunday to secure fishing licences, tackle and bait prior to proceeding to Gunter to spend a week's holiday.

The Americans were surprised at the spirit of co-operation that permeates all walks of Canadian life. "You Canucks are wonderful in this respect", he said, "and can certainly give the U.S.A. an object lesson in pulling together. We haven't seen any sign of discord, no labor troubles, no street corner orators bellowing propaganda; just a quiet determined attitude to win the war at all costs".

He bit the end off a large cigar. "We are beginning to awaken at last in the States", he said, "and the vast majority of Americans are behind Britain to the man. We are in this war with you, if not on the surface, and are beginning to realize what a powerful factor in the defence of the United States, the British Navy has been for a long number of years".

Enemy Propaganda in Some Places

Propaganda against Britain is vicious in some parts of the States, Mr. Grissinger said, but those who are in direct sympathy with Nazism and Communism are the only people paying attention to the propagandist. Others look on with tolerant amusement, and take a great delight in the action when a fight starts.

One young girl propagandist, tired of talking to herself on a street corner, secured a large chain, wrapped it about her body, lashed herself to a telephone pole and threw the key to the lock down a nearby sewer drain, to attract attention. She did all right, Mr. Grissinger said. She attracted the attention of the police who released her from the chains and took her to jail, kicking and screaming.

Fishing Here is Finest

Mr. Ziegler has been in Canada several times and has fished in all the prominent vacation spots from Vancouver to the Maritimes.

"It is a grand sport and I would not miss fishing in Canada for anything", he said. "And", he added, "I'll tell you a secret. The finest fish of the whole caboodle are those lake trout you get in your northern lakes in this district. The grey fellows are my choice of the Canadian fish, and I'll be sadly disappointed if I can't take some back with me to show the boys at home".

He laughed when the possibility of a Japanese threat to the United States was mentioned. "We'll handle those babies without firing a shot", was his prediction.

Both fishermen are executives in a large industrial plant in Pennsylvania, now turning out huge war contracts.

JAPAN MAKES NEW DEMANDS

Request Outright Cession of Slice of Tongkin Province in Indo-China

Chungking, China, Oct. 7—(AP)—Japan has made new and far-reaching demands on French Indo-China, including the outright cession of an important slice of Tongkin Province, in the northeast corner of the colony, a usually reliable source said today.

This source, reporting receipt o. "authentic information", said the second Japanese demand was cession of a northwest strip of the colony's territory to Thailand (Siam).

A third demand was reported to be that Indo-China grant independence to a southern district, presumably Cambodia, where a puppet native government would be established.

Reliable quarters here said that at present there are 30,000 Japanese troops in French Indo-China.

FULL REPORTS ARE AWAITED

Informed London Circles Say Rumanian Explanation of Reports of Maltreatment Are 'Not Satisfactory'

London, Oct. 7—(CP)—Well-informed circles said today the Rumanian Government's explanation of mistreatment of British subjects is "not satisfactory" and therefore "representations are being maintained."

Amongst those arrested for alleged oil field sabotage is a Canadian, Capt. John E. Treacy formerly of Calgary and Chatham, Ont. Capt. Treacy's wife was released last week and is recovering from the effects of rough handling by the Rumanian secret police.

While the British Government still awaits full confirmation of reports of maltreatment, such information as has been received thus far "looks reliable," a spokesman said.

"It has been partially admitted by Rumanian authorities, who are inclined to place the responsibility on the Iron Guard," he added.

Sir Reginald Hoare, British Minister in Rumania, is making inquiry and the government "hopes to receive information from him soon," the spokesman said, adding that there is no question as yet of breaking off diplomatic relations with Rumania.

The government also is awaiting further details and confirmation "of reports that the Germans have sent troops and anti-aircraft guns into Rumania to, shall we say, protect their interests there."

The government is without information as to a report broadcast by the Rome radio that a Rumanian government in exile is being formed in London, the spokesman said.

British Increase Value of Exports Despite War

Report of One of Its Old Country Suppliers is Received by Tip Top Tailors Limited

Toronto, Ontario, October 7 —An interesting sidelight on how a typical English business house has met the war situation and despite all vicissitudes has increased the value of its exports, is contained in a report received recently by Tip Top Tailors Limited, from one of its Old Country suppliers, Joseph Wood & Co. Ltd., of Bradford, England. The report in part says:

"The first aim is to win the war, but the position after the war has been won is not being overlooked, and Britain is trying to create and cater for a trade which will not only remain, but will increase. As regards the near future we cannot see either extreme advances or declines. No matter what happens we do not think there is much to fear as regards Export values, but we consider it the policy for all to cover reasonable requirements for delivery not too far ahead.

"So many false statements are made by German wireless that a few details regarding our own export business may not be considered as being out of place. The following facts are absolutely correct;

"Our yearly Stocktaking date is September 30th, and if we compare our Export turnover for the 12 months ending September 30th 1939 with the 10 months ending July 31st 1940, the Export Sterling value for 1940 has increased in ratio over 1939 by 29 per cent.

"Values are, of course, higher, so a yardage comparison may be of interest, and, so as to be quite up-to-date, we will take the 3 months April, May and June 1939, and compare with April, May and June 1940. Our actual yardage shipped during these three months in 1940 increased by no less than 21 per cent, and this is notwithstanding the fact that the 1939 figures include such markets as Finland, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Holland, etc., all of which were closed during the 1940 period owing to enemy action.

"Since war commenced we have shipped goods every week to most of the World's markets, including China, India, South America, etc., as well as to the British Empire markets, and losses through enemy action have so far amounted to less than one per cent."

Fire Prevention Short Film Shown At McCarthy Theatre

At the McCarthy Theatre for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week there is being shown a trailer film stressing the importance of fire prevention. The picture aims to bring home to Canadians a greater realization of the enormous loss in Canada by fire in a year.

The picture should be seen by every citizen so that there may be a full appreciation of the importance of careful habits in relation to fire.

The Monetary Times referring to the short says "the home front enemy fire costs Canada twenty-five million dollars a year. That amount would give Canada a battleship or send 1,000 planes to England for defence of freedom. It would arm 30,000 men".

Ex-Varsity Player Tells of Job Of Demolishing Shell

Toronto, Oct. 7 (CP).—Lieut. Melbourne Elson of Toronto, former Toronto Varsity rugby player in the Intercollegiate Rugby Union, told of his first demolition job in a letter received by his twin sister, Mrs. J. Harold Couch. Lieut. Elson is with a Canadian Active Service Force unit overseas.

He related how he "had to take three men and blow up an anti-aircraft shell which was due to go off at any time."

"We dug down 12 feet to get to it, then I loaded some gun cotton against it, sand-bagged the hole and blew it up. I've got a piece of it as a souvenir of my first demolition job."

Lieut. Elson, who had been working as a civil engineer until his enlistment, also told of capturing a German fighter plane with another officer. He said the plane was in "good shape".

Lieut. Elson played outside wing when Varsity won the intercollegiate title in 1932 and graduated the following year, winning the award for "the most outstanding graduate of the year".

137 Over-Age Tanks Now in Camp Borden

Ottawa, Oct. 7 —(CP)— Col. F.F. Worthington's armored brigade at Camp Borden, Ont., has up to today received 137 over-age tanks from the United States, Defence Minister Ralston said today.

Of 60 more tanks to come, 75 per cent will be ready for immediate training purposes, he said.

Col. Ralston expressed "my warm appreciation of the prompt action of the United States in shipping these tanks."

STUDY MANPOWER NEEDS OF ARMY

Tells of Conferences With View to Adjusting Situation Equitably

PLANS FLEXIBLE

Ottawa, Oct. 7.—(CP) —Defence Minister Ralston announced today that consideration is being given to the question of manpower in Canada with a view to adjusting the situation equitably as to the needs of the army and industry.

The Minister met newspaper reporters in his office at a press conference and told them the question of manpower was being raised by industry and that conferences are proceeding among the Munitions and Supply Department, the Labor Department, the National Labor Board and the three armed services.

The Minister made his statement on manpower when asked about a report that the 30-day training period now established for men called into the militia might be extended to one year.

"We have no plans for that", said the Minister, "but necessarily all our plans have to be flexible. We may want to give more intensive training to a smaller number of men".

Forces and Industry

In connection with manpower the government had to consider the position of industry, the supply of equipment and the needs of armed forces for men. All three services, the army, the navy and the air force were agreed the training program should be adjusted to the most effective use of available equipment.

With a possibility of more than 300,000 men being required for full-time service in the army, the navy and the air force, regard had to be had to the amount of wastage, the number of men needed continuously for replacements.

Other announcements made by the Minister were: legislation will be introduced at the next session of parliament to change the name of the military forces from "militia" to "The Canadian Army", the permanent force will probably be called the Active Army and the non-permanent active militia the Reserve Army;

Formidable Defences

The Minister was agreeably surprised at the formidable character of defences on the Atlantic coast on his recent trip there;

All of the 39 militia training centres will be ready for recruits called up when they arrive on Wednesday;

Two guards charged with negligence in the escape of two German prisoners from a northern Ontario camp a few days ago will be court-martialled.

Intensive attention is being given to the defence of Pacific coast.

ITALIAN BOMBER FORCED INTO SEA

Flt.-Lt. George P. Christie Home on Leave Tells of 'Dummy' Attacks on Fiat

Montreal, Oct. 7 (CP).—Flt. Lt. George Patterson (Pat) Christie, back home today with a Distinguished Flying Cross after two years with the Royal Air Force, has eight enemy planes as his official plunder but he's proudest of an Italian Fiat bomber he forced down with all guns of his plane out of commission.

Hale and hearty despite burns suffered when his Spitfire fell to a flaming crash that sent him home on sick leave, Christie scanned his log book as he told reporters last night of the reconnaissance flight with the R.A.F. Canadian squadron during which he met a big Italian bomber with a crew of five.

The guns were not working, but he dived at the Fiat from above in a series of "dummy attacks", forcing the Italian down to a watery grave as he circled constantly overhead. Christie said the enemy crew apparently was not injured. After the crash he saw men swimming for land, a couple of miles away.

Silent On Winning of D.F.C.

The Fiat incident was not the one that netted him his D.F.C. He would say nothing of that episode of his exploits with the R.A.F. proper, nor of the crash that sent him to hospital for two weeks and then home to Montreal on leave.

"Just a special job in France," was his only comment on the feat for which he was awarded the purple and white stripes.

Christie related a humorous incident of his victory over the Fiat that seemed to indicate the Italians were prepared for their fate. One of the sinking bomber's crew halted in the water and pulled over his head what appeared to be a yellow bathing cap before flailing his way toward shore.

Air Marshal Bishop Has Nazi Trophy

Ottawa, Oct. 7 —(CP)— Part of the tail assembly of a German bomber shot down over Britain last week is in Air Marshal W. A. Bishop's Ottawa home today, latest addition to his collection of air warfare souvenirs.

The section of metal, three feet square, painted green and marked with a black-swastika-on-white-circle insignia, arrived with the Air Marshal when he returned here during the weekend from an inspection visit to the United Kingdom.

Air Marshal Bishop, who shot down at least 72 enemy planes himself during the first Great War and thus provided plenty of material for souvenir hunters then, posed proudly with the relic when he landed Saturday at Boucherville, Que., from the Transatlantic flying boat Clyde. When he arrived here later in the day it was transferred to his automobile and taken directly to his home.

C. N. EMPLOYEES SUSTAIN BURNS

Explosion Occurs in Fire-Box of Engine Being Serviced at Coal Chutes

With a loud detonation that blew the fire-box door nearly off its hinges, an explosion in the fire-box of a Canadian National Railway engine resulted in three C.N.R. employees sustaining severe burns about the face and hands as fire and flames burst out of the fire-box door, surrounding the train crew as the engine was being serviced at the Belleville C.N.R. coal chutes east of the city early today.

The injured men are John Cooper, the coal chute assistant, Lester Culkin, engineer and A. T. Howe, engine servicemen, while Fireman Cecil T. Burley escaped serious injury, as the quartette were in the cab of the engine when the explosion happened. The three injured men were rushed to the Belleville General Hospital where it was later disclosed they were suffering from severe external burns about the face, arms and hands. They are being attended by Dr. W. D. Morgan.

Canadian National Railway officials at Belleville were at a loss to explain the basic cause of the explosion, that occurred inside the fire-box. "About the only solution to the explosion we can think of at this time is perhaps some foreign material got into the coal and worked its way through the automatic mechanical stoker into the fire-box, where it exploded as the result of the intense heat", one Canadian National employee stated as a possible answer to the explosion.

Fire Leaps Out of Door

Engineer Culkin and Fireman Burley were in the cab of their engine, which was hauling extra No. 444, a freight train. The train stopped at the Belleville coal chutes to be serviced and take on a supply of coal. It was at the chutes that Mr. Howe and Mr. Cooper boarded the engine for inspecting purposes. They had only joined the engine crew, when suddenly there was the loud explosion and fire and flames leaped out of the fire-door, which had been blown open as the result of the detonation. The entire cab was filled with flames and ignited gasses. Other employees at the coal chute heard the explosion and hastened to the assistance of the injured men. The train crew and injured chute men are of this city. Extra freight train No, 444 was a second section of the regular fast Toronto-Montreal night freight service. A new crew had to be dispatched to the train, as another engine was attached to the train, the engine in which the explosion occurred being removed to the Belleville roundhouse for further inspection.

Tempelhof Field, Aircraft Works In Germany Hit

Berlin Admits Bombardment by R.A.F. Heaviest in City's History

London, Oct. 8—(CP)—The Royal Air Force dropped 100 heavy bombs on three main power stations in Berlin, set fire to a freight yard at Tempelhof, Berlin's great airdrome, and attacked the Fokker aircraft works at Amsterdam during widespread raids last night, the Air Ministry announced today.

Bombing attacks also were delivered on the German naval docks at Wilhelmshaven, several airfields and freight yards, at least 10 German-occupied points on the invasion coast, and long-range gun emplacements at Cap Gris Nez, France, the communique said.

One British plane was reported missing.

"By October of 1941 Germany will be defeated and the continental nations liberated," Super, a former infantry Captain and author of a book on military strategy, predicted.

Air conditioning and defense!

To advance the plans for national defense, those who have charge recognize the necessity of air conditioning all plants for the highest efficiency of the workers. All efforts in improving the ventilating systems and other controls of indoor weather conditions result in greater productivity. The selection of sites for these plants is also very important. Some places are naturally favored, making the cost of air conditioning very low, while others will be more costly. Experience everywhere show that air conditioning more than pays for itself; it also shows that different kinds of work require different conditions.

D. F. C. Awarded B. C. Flier for Sinking Of 2 Italian Subs

Cairo, Oct. 8 (CP Cable)—Acting Flight Lieutenant William Weir Campbell of Revelstoke, B.C., was awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross for the destruction of two Italian submarines shortly after Italy entered the war, it was disclosed here yesterday.

(The fact that the D.F.C. had been awarded the aviator was announced in London last Sept. 14, but without details).

It became known that Campbell whose prowess in attacking underseas craft has won him the name of "Deadeye Dick", destroyed the two submarines on successive days in dive-bombing attacks.

On the second occasion the Canadian rescued four Italians from the sea as the submarine went down and kept them aboard his plane as he resumed patrol for the remainder of the day.

(A cable received by Campbell's mother early in September in Victoria said that he had been interned by the enemy after making a forced landing. Another Victoria flier, Fred Beckett of British Overseas Airways, in a letter to relatives told of Campbell sinking the two Italian submarines in the Mediterranean last July and mentioned that he may have sunk a third on the same patrol.

(Campbell is the son of Mrs. and the late Maj. P. J. Campbell.)

Seven Seamen, From Halifax, Lost on Tanker

Halifax, Oct. 4 (CP)—Seven of Britain's merchant marine seamen from Nova Scotia were given up as lost today in the sinking of a British oil tanker somewhere on the Atlantic, but at least 12 of her other 25 men from Canada were known to be safe.

Of the fate of the remaining 13, there was no announcement today from the charterers of the 10,525-ton tanker Frederick S. Fales. But it was considered likely, some of them, at least, had been rescued and that notifications were on the way to relatives.

Letters from the charterers, the Imperial Oil Shipping Company of Toronto, to the families of the seven missing Halifax County men and the ones reported saved gave the first disclosure yesterday of the sinking of the vessel. They gave no details of the sinking, nor did they indicate the total loss of life.

Besides the men who signed on in Canada before the Fales sailed from an East coast Canadian port for Britain about a month ago, she carried an estimated 15 men, believed mostly British. The letters received by relatives told nothing of the other seamen or the ship's officers under Capt. F. Ramsay, a Scot.

29,750 Young Canadians Enter Training Camps Wednesday

Ottawa, Oct. 8 (CP)—A surge of activity will sweep over 39 military training centres across the dominion tomorrow as 29,750 young Canadians move in for 30-days at camp.

Today the centres are comparatively quiet, except for the work of officers and men getting ready to receive the recruits.

But this is definitely the last full day at home for the 21, 22 and 23-year-olds—mostly 21—called up for the initial training period under the National Resources Mobilization Act Some of them who live in outlying sections are already en route to their training centre.

But most will leave home tomorrow, arriving at camp during the day to go through the formalities of signing on, getting their uniforms and becoming familiar with camp organization.

All these details will take up the first day. Then Thursday morning, real training in the khaki-clad recruits will begin.

The defence department says they need not worry about getting too much exercise in their first few days in camp. "It would be absurd to drill unaccustomed men to the point where their health or morale suffered," one official explained.

TRAFFIC-PACKED LONDON CAUGHT IN SWIFT RAID

Buildings Wrecked by Explosives as Crowds Dashed for Shelter

BUS IS HIT

Same Bomb Smashes Several Shops and Kills Two Standing in Doorway

London, Oct. 8 (CP)—Waves of Nazi planes smashed at London today in four swift raids which caught the traffic-thronged capital during morning rush hours and caused a number of dead and injured.

Buildings in the central city were wrecked by explosives which screamed down as crowds dashed for shelter.

One bomb hit a London street, smashed a bus and all aboard were feared killed. Some bodies were taken from the bus and workers dug into the wreckage to get to others caught in the smashed upper deck.

The same explosion smashed several shops and killed two men huddled in the door of a restaurant. First aid squads sped through the streets treating many who suffered cuts and bruises. Those badly injured were taken to hospitals in whatever vehicles rescue crews found handy.

Union Men Continue At Work Pending Settlement of Dispute

Cornwall, Ont., Oct. 8.— (CP)—Edward Hazeley, plant manager for Courtlauds (Canada) Limited Monday issued a statement on negotiations between the Company and Cornwall Rayon Workers' Union in their current dispute.

"During the negotiations, the company suggested various compromises which were refused just as many times", he said. "A single arbitrator was then suggested and the company agreed . . . but this suggestion was also refused.

"The only avenue of settlement left was the suggestion of a Conciliation Board, and the Company immediately agreed to this also, but we have as yet no further information as to the attitude of the Union".

Operations at the company's rayon plant here are continuing under mutual agreement between the company and the Union, pending a settlement of the dispute.

About 8,500 Killed, 13,000 Wounded In Air Raids Sept. 7-Oct. 7

London, Oct. 8 —(CP)— Air raid casualties up to last Saturday were about 8,500 killed and 13,000 wounded since heavy bombing began Sept. 7, Prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons today.

Casualty tolls had declined steadily, he said, from over 6,000 in the first week, to about 5,000 in the second week, about 4,000 in the third and 3,000 last week.

Lord Lothian Will Cancel Plans to Return to England, Receives Order From London

British Ambassador to Washington Says He Has Been Instructed to Remain Because 'They Think There May be a Crisis in Far East'—He Had Planned to Go to England as 'Battle of Britain Has Been Won for This Autumn'

Washington, Oct. 8 (AP). — The British Ambassador, Lord Lothian, asserted after a White House call today that his government had ordered him to cancel plans to return to England because "they think there may be a crisis in the Far East".

The Ambassador declined to go into details of his conference with President Roosevelt.

Asked how soon the British government thought a Far East crisis might develop, Lord Lothian said it might come through the reopening of the Burma road, a supply line to China, Oct. 17.

Lord Lothian said he had been ordered on Sunday to fly back to England, that the trip did not look so good on Monday and that it was cancelled today.

The Ambassador said that it was customary for British diplomats to go home about every six months and his trip had been planned because "the battle of Britain has been won for this autumn".

Shortly before the Roosevelt-Lord Lothian conference, the State Department announced that United States citizens in the Far East, including all of Japan and China were being asked to consider the advisability of returning home because of disturbed conditions.

'Further Evidence' Given To Support Story Nazis Tried British Invasion

New York, Oct. 8—(CP) — The New York Sun said Monday it had obtained from an "unofficial British source" what it termed "further evidence" to support a report the paper published Sept. 11 that the Germans made a "disastrous" attempt to invade Great Britain late in August.

(Reports that the Germans several times have failed in invasion attempts have been frequent in the American Press in recent weeks. However, British authorities have denied the reports, saying they would be only too glad to announce that an invasion had been repelled.) The Sun yesterday said its informant, who came to the United States from England a few days ago, based his story on stories told him by friends on leave from the navy. They were said to have taken part in the action to repel the invaders.

"The New York Sun's information is that at dawn on the morning of the attempted invasion the German big guns in the vicinity of Cape Gris Nez began a bombardment of the English coast. Royal Air Force fliers took to the air to silence them and encountered a strong force of Nazi bombers and fighters.

Terrific Carnage

"From the fog and haze of the sea there emerged hundreds of flat-bottom barges each carrying about 200 German soldiers wearing full field equipment. . . . While the British fliers battled the German air force the land batteries raked the barges with fire. The carnage was terrific.

"Evidently the Germans had counted on their airmen silencing the land batteries before they could annihilate the invaders, who were helpless themselves. The barges carried no artillery, probably because their only hope of getting across the mine fields safely was their light draft, which would have been deepened by the weight of guns and ammunition.

"Because their draft was not more than six feet, they did negotiate the mine fields, but the withering fire from the land sank them as fast as they appeared. The extremely shallow draft of the

RENEWAL OF U.S. TALKS WITH SOVIET A POSSIBILITY

London, Washington and Moscow May Collaborate on Eastern Situation

"AID TO CHINA"

Washington, Oct. 8 AP)—A renewal of United States talks with Soviet Russia revived conjecture today on the possibility that common concern over Far Eastern developments might establish a basis for active collaboration by London, Washington and Moscow.

The conversations here appeared to be aimed first at removal of what considered relatively minor points of friction between the United States and Russia.

Success in these efforts, diplomatic sources said, might lead to discussion of more far-reaching questions of policy, possibly starting with "aid to China", to which Great Britain, the United States and Russia have all contributed.

The talks here were begun last July by Sumner Welles, Undersecretary of State, and Constantine Oumansky, Soviet Ambassador, prior to renewal of the annual United States-Soviet Trade Agreement. They were continued in what Welles described as a friendly and constructive manner to determine whether relations generally might be improved.

One-Fourth Italian Subs Said Destroyed

Alexandria, Oct. 8 (CP).—Almost one-quarter of Italy's submarine strength has been sunk since June 11, when Italy entered the war, British naval sources said tonight.

Twenty-two Italian submersibles have been accounted for. In 1939 Italy was officially listed as having 104. There is no way of knowing how many were put into service since.

One of the latest victims of the British Mediterranean Fleet was destroyed by depth charges and the other was disabled by a bombing plane and later sent to the bottom by gunfire.

(Sinking of two Italian submarines in the Mediterranean area was announced last Friday by the Admiralty in London.'

Many survivors were reported picked up by British warships.

HEAR JAP NAVY LANDS TROOPS ON LIU KUNG IS.

Shanghai Reports Say Landing Apparently Designed to Enforce Stand of Nanking Government

PROCLAMATIONS ISSUED

Japan, it is Said, Will Take Over Island for Military Necessity

Shanghai, Oct. 8 (AP).—The Japanese navy was reported today to have landed forces on Liu Kung Island off Shantung Peninsula on which the Chinese government of Gen. Chiang Kai-shek recently granted Great Britain renewal of a 10-year lease.

The landing apparently was designed to enforce the stand of the Japanese-dominated Chinese regime at Nanking, which regards the lease as no longer operative.

Travellers from Wehaiwei on the northern shore of Shantung Peninsula said the Japanese posted proclamations announcing they were taking over the island.

The proclamations, printed in Japanese, Chinese and English, said: "British interests based on the Liu Kung Tao agreement of 1930 having terminated on Sept. 30, 1940, the Imperial Navy will hereafter take over and administer Liu Kung Tao for military necessity."

A Japanese cruiser, two destroyers and several auxiliary vessels were reported several days ago off the island ,which the British navy's China squadron has been using as a summer station.

The Japanese were said to have landed a contingent of marines as a garrison and to have quartered them in buildings in the former British dockyard.

It was understood British naval officials here have been unable to communicate with Liu Kung. A protest to Tokyo was expected.

Travellers brought reports, also that the Japanese had requested British naval authorities to move out of all property they occupy. Hitherto the Japanese have made no request against private British properties.

Says Axis, Japan Ready Go to War If U. S. Rejects

Rome, Oct 8. (AP)—Premier Mussolini's newspaper Il Popolo D'Italia declared today that Germany, Italy and Japan are ready to go to war with the United States if Rome should reject the Rome-Berlin-Tokyo axis' mutual "living space" offers and prefer instead to "throw down the gauntlet."

Unoccupied France Living Today On Bed of Thorns, Short Rations

(By Lloyd Lehrbas)
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

New York, Oct. 8.—(AP)—Unoccupied France is living today on beds of thorns and short rations, mourning for its dead and its past glory, and dreading every hour of the future.

Most Frenchmen can see ahead of them and their children only months—if not years—of trampled liberties, privation and threatened starvation, racial animosities, and drudgery that may almost approach slavery to pay the Germans $9,000,000 a day tribute—unless Germany is defeated.

Most tragically, many seem to have lost their spirit; they feel that they themselves can do little to influence their own fate.

Chaos is natural considering the strange course the war took in France. In the north, the Germans pulverized the country, smashing halfway across France. In the southwest, the people hardly knew a war was being fought. Along the Mediterranean the war was over before it had a good start.

On the Italian front the French were never beaten.

Life Varies Greatly

Life in France today varies greatly depending on where you live, whether you have a job, whether you have children, and a dozen other factors.

A vast majority of the French population have common problems. Nearly 2,000,000 French soldiers are prisoners of war and their families are worrying about fathers, husbands and sons in prison camps in occupied France or Germany, few know just where.

There is a shortage of food in nearly all prison camps, but families (themselves on short rations) are not permitted to send food packages. They hear disturbing reports of health conditions in the prison camps and know that, in some, serious diseases have already appeared.

Severe Shortage of Food

Destruction in war, curtailed production, lack of transportation, government purchases and requisitions and depleted stocks left in the wake of the millions of refugees who swept through unoccupied France has caused a severe shortage in food and household necessities.

When I left unoccupied France everyone was getting enough to eat, but the new and strict rationing, designed to conserve as much as possible, made it evident that the French were face to face with an extremely serious food problem this winter. A large number live in privation, some may go hungry, some may starve.

There is considerable apprehension concerning infants and children. Severe restrictions in the sale of milk, designed to ensure milk for babies and growing youngsters went into force weeks ago.

Triple Pact Aimed At U.S., Russia, Says Churchill

Britain Aims to Inflict Maximum Harm Only on War Capacity of Germany

By J. F. SANDERSON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Oct. 8 (CP). — Britain will re-open the Burma Road Oct. 17, Prime Minister Churchill announced today in a statement in which he reassured the nation that casualties and damage from the German air attacks are diminishing week by week.

The prime minister spoke almost an hour to a House of Commons that hung on to his words, which were punctuated by the faint blast of Ack-ack guns in the distance.

Hitler is throwing almost all his potential air strength toward Britain, Mr. Churchill declared, but casualties are diminishing each week and the mortality rate per ton of bombs is less than one tenth of the rate in the first great war.

Since last September 8,500 people have been killed in Britain from German air attacks and 13,000 wounded, he continued. But these totals are infinitely lower than had been feared and for which plans had been made.

Steady Decline In Casualties.

Since Sept. 7, when the blitzkrieg started, casualty totals have dropped steadily and progressively from 6,000 in the first week to 5,000, then to 4,000, and finally to 3,000 last week.

Property damage was severe but at the present rate of destruction it would take Hitler ten years to demolish one half the homes of London.

Bombing attacks also were delivered on the German naval docks at Wilhelmshaven, several airfields and freight yards, at least 10 German-occupied points on the invasion coast, and long-range gun emplacements at Cap Gris Nez, France, the communique said.

One British plane was reported missing.

Air conditioning and defense! To advance the plans for national defense, those who have charge recognize the necessity of air conditioning all plants for the highest efficiency of the workers. All efforts in improving the ventilating systems and other controls of indoor weather conditions result in greater productivity. The selection of sites for these plants is also very important. Some places are naturally favored, making the cost of air conditioning very low, while others will be more costly. Experience everywhere show that air conditioning more than pays for itself; it also shows that different kinds of work require different conditions.

D. F. C. Awarded B. C. Flier for Sinking Of 2 Italian Subs

Cairo, Oct. 8 (CP Cable)—Acting Flight Lieutenant William Weir Campbell of Revelstoke, B.C., was awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross for the destruction of two Italian submarines shortly after Italy entered the war, it was disclosed here yesterday.

(The fact that the D.F.C. had been awarded the aviator was announced in London last Sept. 14, but without details).

It became known that Campbell whose prowess in attacking underseas craft has won him the name of "Deadeye Dick", destroyed the two submarines on successive days in dive-bombing attacks.

On the second occasion the Canadian rescued four Italians from the sea as the submarine went down and kept them aboard his plane as he resumed patrol for the remainder of the day.

(A cable received by Campbell's mother early in September in Victoria said that he had been interned by the enemy after making a forced landing. Another Victoria flier, Fred Beckett of British Overseas Airways, in a letter to relatives told of Campbell sinking the two Italian submarines in the Mediterranean last July and mentioned that he may have sunk a third on the same patrol.

(Campbell is the son of Mrs. and the late Maj. P. J. Campbell.)

Seven Seamen, From Halifax, Lost on Tanker

Halifax, Oct. 4 (CP)—Seven of Britain's merchant marine seamen from Nova Scotia were given up as lost today in the sinking of a British oil tanker somewhere on the Atlantic, but at least 12 of her other 25 men from Canada were known to be safe.

Of the fate of the remaining 13, there was no announcement today from the charterers of the 10,525-ton tanker Frederick S. Fales. But it was considered likely, some of them, at least, had been rescued and that notifications were on the way to relatives.

Letters from the charterers, the Imperial Oil Shipping Company of Toronto, to the families of the seven missing Halifax County men and the ones reported saved gave the first disclosure yesterday of the sinking of the vessel. They gave no details of the sinking, nor did they indicate the total loss of life.

Besides the men who signed on in Canada before the Fales sailed from an East coast Canadian port for Britain about a month ago, she carried an estimated 15 men, believed mostly British. The letters received by relatives told nothing of the other seamen or the ship's officers under Capt. F. Ramsay, a Scot.

TRAFFIC-PACKED LONDON CAUGHT IN SWIFT RAID

Buildings Wrecked by Explosives as Crowds Dashed for Shelter

BUS IS HIT

Same Bomb Smashes Several Shops and Kills Two Standing in Doorway

London, Oct. 8 (CP)—Waves of Nazi planes smashed at London today in four swift raids which caught the traffic-thronged capital during morning rush hours and caused a number of dead and injured.

Buildings in the central city were wrecked by explosives which screamed down as crowds dashed for shelter.

One bomb hit a London street, smashed a bus and all aboard were feared killed. Some bodies were taken from the bus and workers dug into the wreckage to get to others caught in the smashed upper deck.

The same explosion smashed several shops and killed two men huddled in the door of a restaurant. First aid squads sped through the streets treating many who suffered cuts and bruises. Those badly injured were taken to hospitals in whatever vehicles rescue crews found handy.

Union Men Continue At Work Pending Settlement of Dispute

Cornwall, Ont., Oct. 8.— (CP)—Edward Hazeley, plant manager for Courtlauds (Canada) Limited Monday issued a statement on negotiations between the Company and Cornwall Rayon Workers' Union in their current dispute.

"During the negotiations, the company suggested various compromises which were refused just as many times", he said. "A single arbitrator was then suggested and the company agreed . . . but this suggestion was also refused.

"The only avenue of settlement left was the suggestion of a Conciliation Board, and the Company immediately agreed to this also, but we have as yet no further information as to the attitude of the Union".

Operations at the company's rayon plant here are continuing under mutual agreement between the company and the Union, pending a settlement of the dispute.

About 8,500 Killed, 13,000 Wounded In Air Raids Sept. 7-Oct. 7

London, Oct. 8 —(CP)— Air raid casualties up to last Saturday were about 8,500 killed and 13,000 wounded since heavy bombing began Sept. 7, Prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons today.

Casualty tolls had declined steadily, he said, from over 6,000 in the first week, to about 5,000 in the second week, about 4,000 in the third and 3,000 last week.

29,750 Young Canadians Enter Training Camps Wednesday

Ottawa, Oct. 8 (CP).—A surge of activity will sweep over 39 military training centres across the dominion tomorrow as 29,750 young Canadians move in for 30-days at camp.

Today the centres are comparatively quiet, except for the work of officers and men getting ready to receive the recruits.

But this is definitely the last full day at home for the 21, 22 and 23-year-olds—mostly 21—called up for the initial training period under the National Resources Mobilization Act Some of them who live in outlying sections are already en route to their training centre.

But most will leave home tomorrow, arriving at camp during the day to go through the formalities of signing on, getting their uniforms and becoming familiar with camp organization.

All these details will take up the first day. Then Thursday morning, real training in the khaki-clad recruits will begin.

The defence department says they need not worry about getting too much exercise in their first few days in camp. "It would be absurd to drill unaccustomed men to the point where their health or morale suffered," one official explained.

Lord Lothian Will Cancel Plans to Return to England, Receives Order From London

British Ambassador to Washington Says He Has Been Instructed to Remain Because 'They Think There May be a Crisis in Far East'—He Had Planned to Go to England as 'Battle of Britain Has Been Won for This Autumn'

Washington, Oct. 8 (AP). — The British Ambassador, Lord Lothian, asserted after a White House call today that his government had ordered him to cancel plans to return to England because "they think there may be a crisis in the Far East".

The Ambassador declined to go into details of his conference with President Roosevelt.

Asked how soon the British government thought a Far East crisis might develop, Lord Lothian said it might come through the reopening of the Burma road, a supply line to China, Oct. 17.

Lord Lothian said he had been ordered on Sunday to fly back to England, that the trip did not look so good on Monday and that it was cancelled today.

The Ambassador said that it was customary for British diplomats to go home about every six months and his trip had been planned because "the battle of Britain has been won for this autumn".

Shortly before the Roosevelt-Lord Lothian conference, the State Department announced that United States citizens in the Far East, including all of Japan and China were being asked to consider the advisability of returning home because of disturbed conditions.

'Further Evidence' Given To Support Story Nazis Tried British Invasion

New York, Oct. 8—(CP) — The New York Sun said Monday it had obtained from an "unofficial British source" what it termed "further evidence" to support a report the paper published Sept. 11 that the Germans made a "disastrous" attempt to invade Great Britain late in August.

(Reports that the Germans several times have failed in invasion attempts have been frequent in the American Press in recent weeks. However, British authorities have denied the reports, saying they would be only too glad to announce that an invasion had been repelled.) The Sun yesterday said its informant, who came to the United States from England a few days ago, based his story on stories told him by friends on leave from the navy. They were said to have taken part in the action to repel the invaders.

"The New York Sun's information is that at dawn on the morning of the attempted invasion the German big guns in the vicinity of Cape Gris Nez began a bombardment of the English coast. Royal Air Force fliers took to the air to silence them and encountered a strong force of Nazi bombers and fighters.

Terrific Carnage

"From the fog and haze of the sea there emerged hundreds of flat-bottom barges each carrying about 200 German soldiers wearing full field equipment. . . . While the British fliers battled the German air force the land batteries raked the barges with fire. The carnage was terrific.

"Evidently the Germans had counted on their airmen silencing the land batteries before they could annihilate the invaders, who were helpless themselves. The barges carried no artillery, probably because their only hope of getting across the mine fields safely was their light draft, which would have been deepened by the weight of guns and ammunition.

"Because their draft was not more than six feet, they did negotiate the mine fields, but the withering fire from the land sank them as fast as they appeared. The extremely shallow draft of the

RENEWAL OF U.S. TALKS WITH SOVIET A POSSIBILITY

London, Washington and Moscow May Collaborate on Eastern Situation

"AID TO CHINA"

Washington, Oct. 8 AP)—A renewal of United States talks with Soviet Russia revived conjecture today on the possibility that common concern over Far Eastern developments might establish a basis for active collaboration by London, Washington and Moscow.

The conversations here appeared to be aimed first at removal of what considered relatively minor points of friction between the United States and Russia.

Success in these efforts, diplomatic sources said, might lead to discussion of more far-reaching questions of policy, possibly starting with "aid to China", to which Great Britain, the United States and Russia have all contributed.

The talks here were begun last July by Sumner Welles, Undersecretary of State, and Constantine Oumansky, Soviet Ambassador, prior to renewal of the annual United States-Soviet Trade Agreement. They were continued in what Welles described as a friendly and constructive manner to determine whether relations generally might be improved.

One-Fourth Italian Subs Said Destroyed

Alexandria, Oct. 8 (CP).—Almost one-quarter of Italy's submarine strength has been sunk since June 11, when Italy entered the war, British naval sources said tonight.

Twenty-two Italian submersibles have been accounted for. In 1939 Italy was officially listed as having 104. There is no way of knowing how many were put into service since.

One of the latest victims of the British Mediterranean Fleet was destroyed by depth charges and the other was disabled by a bombing plane and later sent to the bottom by gunfire.

(Sinking of two Italian submarines in the Mediterranean area was announced last Friday by the Admiralty in London.'

Many survivors were reported picked up by British warships.

Shanghai Reports Say Landing Apparently Designed to Enforce Stand of Nanking Government

PROCLAMATIONS ISSUED

Japan, it is Said, Will Take Over Island for Military Necessity

Shanghai, Oct. 8 (AP).—The Japanese navy was reported today to have landed forces on Liu Kung Island off Shantung Peninsula on which the Chinese government of Gen. Chiang Kai-shek recently granted Great Britain renewal of a 10-year lease.

The landing apparently was designed to enforce the stand of the Japanese-dominated Chinese regime at Nanking, which regards the lease as no longer operative.

Travellers from Wehaiwei on the northern shore of Shantung Peninsula said the Japanese posted proclamations announcing they were taking over the island.

The proclamations, printed in Japanese, Chinese and English, said: "British interests based on the Liu Kung Tao agreement of 1930 having terminated on Sept. 30, 1940, the Imperial Navy will hereafter take over and administer Liu Kung Tao for military necessity."

A Japanese cruiser, two destroyers and several auxiliary vessels were reported several days ago off the island ,which the British navy's China squadron has been using as a summer station.

The Japanese were said to have landed a contingent of marines as a garrison and to have quartered them in buildings in the former British dockyard.

It was understood British naval officials here have been unable to communicate with Liu Kung. A protest to Tokyo was expected.

Travellers brought reports, also that the Japanese had requested British naval authorities to move out of all property they occupy. Hitherto the Japanese have made no request against private British properties.

Says Axis, Japan Ready Go to War If U. S. Rejects

Rome, Oct 8. (AP)—Premier Mussolini's newspaper Il Popolo D'Italia declared today that Germany, Italy and Japan are ready to go to war with the United States if Rome should reject the Rome-Berlin-Tokyo axis' mutual "living space" offers and prefer instead to 'throw down the gauntlet."

Unoccupied France Living Today On Bed of Thorns, Short Rations

(By Lloyd Lehrbas)
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

New York, Oct. 8.—(AP)—Unoccupied France is living today on beds of thorns and short rations, mourning for its dead and its past glory, and dreading every hour of the future.

Most Frenchmen can see ahead of them and their children only months—if not years—of trampled liberties, privation and threatened starvation, racial animosities, and drudgery that may almost approach slavery to pay the Germans $9,000,000 a day tribute—unless Germany is defeated.

Most tragically, many seem to have lost their spirit; they feel that they themselves can do little to influence their own fate.

Chaos is natural considering the strange course the war took in France. In the north, the Germans pulverized the country, smashing halfway across France. In the southwest, the people hardly knew a war was being fought. Along the Mediterranean the war was over before it had a good start.

On the Italian front the French were never beaten.

Life Varies Greatly

Life in France today varies greatly depending on where you live, whether you have a job, whether you have children, and a dozen other factors.

A vast majority of the French population have common problems. Nearly 2,000,000 French soldiers are prisoners of war and their families are worrying about fathers, husbands and sons in prison camps in occupied France or Germany, few know just where.

There is a shortage of food in nearly all prison camps, but families (themselves on short rations) are not permitted to send food packages. They hear disturbing reports of health conditions in the prison camps and know that, in some, serious diseases have already appeared.

Severe Shortage of Food

Destruction in war, curtailed production, lack of transportation, government purchases and requisitions and depleted stocks left in the wake of the millions of refugees who swept through unoccupied France has caused a severe shortage in food and household necessities.

When I left unoccupied France everyone was getting enough to eat, but the new and strict rationing, designed to conserve as much as possible, made it evident that the French were face to face with an extremely serious food problem this winter. A large number live in privation, some may go hungry, some may starve.

There is considerable apprehension concerning infants and children. Severe restrictions in the sale of milk, designed to ensure milk for babies and growing youngsters went into force weeks ago.

Triple Pact Aimed At U.S., Russia, Says Churchill

Britain Aims to Inflict Maximum Harm Only on War Capacity of Germany

By J. F. SANDERSON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Oct. 8 (CP). — Britain will re-open the Burma Road Oct. 17, Prime Minister Churchill announced today in a statement in which he reassured the nation that casualties and damage from the German air attacks are diminishing week by week.

CITY AND DISTRICT NEWS

MOTORCYCLE PATROLS TO BE SUPPLEMENTED

District motorists should drive with caution while in the city or immediate district, if for no other reason than the supplementing of motorcycle patrols over the week-end. Motorcycle Patrolman J. J. Hatch, of the O.P.P., returned to his detail after a fortnight of vacation yesterday and will resume his detail west of the city. Motorcycle Patrolman Siple has taken over the detail east of Belleville. In the city Traffic Officer Doug. Ellis mounted his motorcycle after a month of ordinary police work on city detail. Several delinquent motorists have already been apprehended speeding on local streets, while others, who have failed to stop at designated stop streets, are already in possession of court summonses charging them with violations of the city traffic regulations.

CITY WORKMEN FINISH EXCAVATION

City workmen today completed the excavation of earth in the boulevard on the north side of Victoria Avenue, from Church Street to Pinnacle Street. The boulevard will be eliminated on Victoria Ave. hill the curb extending to the north sidewalk, thus allowing the widening of the travelled portion of the street fully three feet.

MANY LAYMEN TO ATTEND BANQUET

A large representation of the laymen of the Anglican deaneries of Hastings and Prince Edward are expected to attend the annual banquet being held in Bancroft on Wednesday night. The guest speaker for the occasion will be Flying Officer Denton Massey, R.C.A.F., Trenton.

A NICE GIFT

Partridge are plentiful in the northern districts of Hastings County, according to hunters, but when the birds crawl into shopping bags and conveniently park themselves in the back compartments of automobiles, that is overdoing even the famous northern hospitality.

That was the experience of a Belleville resident in the village of Madoc yesterday who could scarcely believe his eyes when he opened the package. Later it was discovered the birds were the gift of a friend.

MARKET DISPLAY NOT VERY HEAVY

A rather slim market display was offered on the Belleville market on Tuesday morning, with prices remaining practically at previous levels. Apples were featured at $1.00 per bushel for most varieties or at 25c per basket. St. Lawrence apples sold at 35c per basket.

Grapes sold at 40c for blue variety or at 45c for mixed baskets. Peaches were 50c for No. 1's and 40c for No. 2's. Plums sold at 25c per basket for Blue Damsons or at 40c for Raine Clauces.

Corn on the cob sold at 20c per dozen ears. Potatoes held at the usual price of 25c per peck or at 85c per bushel. All kinds of vegetables sold at the usual price of 5c per bunch.

BUILD HYDRO LINE TO BOMBING SCHOOL AT MOUNTAIN VIEW

Construction of a hydro branch line from Consecon, Prince Edward County to the new bombing and gunnery school at Mountain View is now under way. The new branch line is being erected on poles and the work has given employment to a number of Belleville men.

Started last week, the work is expected to be completed in the near future.

NORTHERN WOODS RIOT OF COLOR

Touched by the magical brush of the Master Artist, the woods of North Hastings present a glowing colorful Autumn picture to motorists driving along the highways in that part of the county.

Vivid scarlets and glowing yellows of the maples, the softer red glow of the sumachs against a mutitudinous array of the greens of the perennial's, form a picture that only nature can paint.

According to residents of the northern districts, the woods and foliage this year "are the prettiest" they have been in a decade, due to the early frost which touched the trees when they were in full leaf. The lush of green grass of the north country, which appears to be much fresher than that in the southern sections, forms a picturesque background that completes a scenic beauty seen at no other time of the year.

Lady Officers to Take Over Command From Major T. H. Alderman

Adjutants Morgan and Charlong, of Barrie, Ont., lady officers of the Salvation Army, will arrive in the city on Thursday of this week to take over the command of the local corps of the Salvation Army left vacant by the transfer of Major Alderman, who leaves today for his new charge in Sussex, New Brunswick. The new officers will be afforded a hearty welcome by members of the corps on the night of their arrival, while a public welcome will be extended to them in the Army Citadel on Sunday night.

The new commanding officers bring a wealth of army experience with them, and have done most of their work in Ontario.

Major T. H. Alderman, one of the most popular commanding officers of the local corps to head the Army in this city, spent the week-end in Camp Borden. Saying farewell to a large circle of friends today, the Major, whose associates are numbered in all walks of life, expressed grateful appreciation for the fine assistance rendered him by Belleville citizens during his tenure here. "Residents of this city are among the finest in Canada," the amiable officer said, "and Mrs. Alderman and myself are loath to leave. But duty calls and we must obey. Kindly tell the good people of Belleville that we shall miss them and convey to them our thanks and gratitude for the many fine associations we have made. We shall always remember them."

The Major's new appointment carries with it a great deal of war work. He has had plenty of experience in this department of Army work, and it will be but a short time before he is an established favorite among the troops as well as the civilian population of his new charge.

Richard Hart Heard in Broadcast From England

Richard Hart, of Belleville, now an officer in the Canadian navy was heard in a program last night over the broadcast "With the Troops in England." Local listeners heard him taking part along with other Canadians.

He was one of those who were greeted on Thursday last by W. T. Cranfield, correspondent of The Toronto Telegram at London, England, who described a scene in which 35 young Canadian naval officers were attending a lecture on H.M.S. King Alfred, where ratings have been picked out for promotion to officer rank and young naval reservist officers from overseas complete their training. It is part of the scheme whereby for the duration of the war suitable sailors may progress from the lower to upper deck in accordance with the new democratic spirit in all branches of the fighting services.

The present batch of young Canadian officers is the eighth to arrive, the first having begun to arrive last April and having come on the direct invitation of the Imperial Government.

O.R. THOMSON DIES IN CAR COLLISION

Local Hydro Engineer Succumbs to Injuries When His Car Collides With Truck Near Salem

In the city of Belleville today many citizens entertain sincere feelings of regret occasioned by the sudden death of Oscar R. Thomson, Hydro Engineer, residence, 104 West Dundas Street, in this city, which occurred as the result of injuries sustained in a motor car accident Monday afternoon, Oct. 7th., three miles east of Colborne, near the village of Salem. At this point, there is a dangerous curve and when passing over this part of the road, Mr. Thomson's car, which was proceeding westward collided with a Canadian Cartage System transport, which was being driven by W. Hobbs, 84 Bleecker Street, Toronto, who escaped injury. Mr. Thomson, however, was badly injured and was conveyed as quickly as possible to the hospital in Cobourg, where he died soon after being admitted. Death was due, it is said, to fractured skull, concussion and internal injuries.

Riding in the car with Mr. Thomson was Aircraftsman John Doust of the R.C.A.F., stationed at St. Thomas, he received minor injuries. Traffic Officer D. Wilson, of Colborne investigated the accident, and he states that Mr. Thomson's car was practically demolished; it was thrown into the north ditch and the truck was turned sidewise upon the road.

At Cobourg an inquest was conducted by the resident Coroner and after the usual preliminaries an adjournment was made for one week.

Born Near Blenheim

The late Oscar Roland Thomson, who held the important position of Assistant Operating Superintendent Eastern Ontario Hydro System in connection with the Belleville office, was born near Blenheim, in Kent County, 57 years ago. At an early age he commenced the study of electrical engineering and made rapid progress in his chosen profession. For some time he was associated with the old Seymour Power Company and lived in Trenton for a few years. In the year 1916 he entered the service of the Ontario Hydro Power Commission and made his home in Belleville for the past twenty-five years. With his associates throughout the Hydro System he was popular and held in high regard and to them as well as to many close friends his sudden passing brought sincere sorrow.

In religion Mr. Thomson was a member of Bridge Street United Church and fraternally he was a member of Moira Lodge A. F. & A.M. No. 11; Past First Principal of Moira Chapter; Past Preceptor of King Baldwin Preceptory, and a member of Rameses Shrine, Toronto.

Surviving him, and to whom the sympathy of many friends will be extended, are his wife, formerly Miss Marian Lick; one daughter, Carolyn, two brothers, one with the Hydro System at Niagara Falls, Ontario, and one residing on the family homestead near Blenheim; two sisters, Miss Florence Thomson and Mrs. Tape.

The funeral announcement is made elsewhere in this paper.

RENEWAL

In early August, however, they were broken off and it was reported substantial differences had barred progress.

Talk Half an Hour

Yesterday, however, Oumansky and Welles talked for half an hour. Oumansky had no comment to make but State Department officials said he had resumed the talks begun during the summer. They indicated others were planned.

Oumansky's visit came at the end of a day of intense diplomatic activity centring on the Far East and United States and British steps to maintain their positions in an area in which Japan has been assigned the dominating role by the Tokyo-Berlin-Rome Alliance.

As British and Australian diplomats conferred during the day with State Department officials and High Navy Department officials considered defences in the Pacific, Great Britain appeared about ready to announce a decision to reopen the Burma Road, an overland "life line" for supplies to China. The road was closed a few months ago at Japanese insistence.

Resist Japanese Effort

Coming after the recent granting of a new $25,000,000 loan to China by the American Export-Import Bank, reopening of the road with tacit or announced United States approval will, in the opinion of some well-informed authorities, constitute a new sign of Anglo-American intentions to resist Japanese efforts to dominate all "East Asia."

Grandmothers' Tea At Central Butte, Sask.

The seventeenth annual "Grandmothers' Tea" which attracts the grandmothers and great-grandmothers of Central Butte, Saskatchewan yearly as the guests of Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Faulkner, intimate relatives of Dr. and Mrs. J. A. Faulkner of this city, was again the highlight of the year's social activities in the western town, according to information received here.

Grandmothers, great grandmothers and widows of the surrounding districts were the guests of Mrs. Faulkner at the function, which was held in the hall of the United Church of Central Butte. Mrs. Faulkner graciously welcomed her many guests to the scene of the function which was beautifully decorated with flags and flowers.

During the refreshment hour, an elaborate program was furnished by the hostess which included the artistry of local musicians, vocalists, and entertainers. The hostess gave a brief address in which she outlined the first tea held seventeen years ago. Two ladies present, were the only two at the function who attended the inaugural tea in that year.

Tribute was paid to departed grandmothers whose names were engraved on a beautiful scroll. A brief memorial service was held for two who had passed away since the last tea was held.

Letters were read from guests of previous years. These included people from all parts of the United States and Canada including Dr. J. A. Faulkner of Toronto. Prizes were presented to the oldest grandmother present, the tallest grandmother, the grandmother being the youngest daughter of her own and the grandmother coming the greatest distance.

The guests were presented with flowers when they left for their homes, after expressions of appreciations to the host and hostess had been voiced by a number of those present.

Kinsmen Hear Address on Oil Industry

Pinch-hitting in the absence of a regular guest speaker, President "Jeff" Marvell, of the Belleville Kinsmen Club, delivered an enlightening discourse to his fellow-members on subject of the petroleum industry when the Kinsmen met in fortnightly conference at the New Queens Hotel last evening.

"Some people think all you have to do is drive a pipe down into the ground and out spurts crude oil. Unfortunately this is not exactly the case," lamented President Marvell, who is also district manager of the local branch of the Shell Oil Company. "The origin of petroleum or crude oil commenced millions of years ago and came about by the ever-changing earth's surface, coupled with intense heat and pressure upon the buried debris. This crude oil is known in the petroleum business as hydrocarbon, various forms of which cannot be attacked by heat," explained the speaker as he produced samples of petroleum to bear out his statements. Speaking of drilling for "crude," President Marvell stated there was the old procussion method and the more modern rotary drilling system, which is less expensive and more thorough and productive.

"Petroleum is not only used for combustion purposes but in the manufacture of ammunition, armaments, cosmetics, rubber, in the leather industry, in the manufacture of paints and varnishes and literally hundreds of every-day essentials, so you can readily understand why the countries of the world today are seeking this vital product," concluded President Marvell.

In the general business of the club Kinsmen Max Waters and Newt Wilbur were named to the executive of the Belleville Kinsmen Club to replace Don Thomas and William Hurst, both of whom have joined the C.A.S.F., while Kinsmen Harry Rollins was appointed chairman of the entertainment committee for the remainder of the semester. The annual Kinsmen Thanksgiving dance will be held next Monday with Kinsmen Newt. Wilbur as chairman.

Don Roe acted as song leader and Newt. Wilbur collected the club fines as sergeant-at-arms.

Magistrate Lloyd Dismisses Charge Of Infringement

Laxity in amending municipal by-laws to conform with the statutes of Canada was the reason given by Magistrate J. L. Lloyd, Northbrook, in Marmora police court Monday night, for dismissing a charge of an infringement of a municipal bylaw preferred against E. L. Denny and James Webb, Trenton, by village authorities.

The two men were arraigned before the bench on a charge of being transient traders contrary to a village bylaw, enacted in 1913.

"Municipalities should keep abreast of the times, and keep their bylaws to date with those of the country," the Magistrate remarked in dismissing the charge. He added that, due to the nature of the charge and ensuing argument, he would like to see the Crown appeal his decision in order to clear up the hazy issues of the case. In his opinion, however, the evidence produced, and the nature of the village bylaw was such that he felt obliged to dismiss the counts.

Webb and Denny had, evidence brought out, sold cards of a patriotic nature by a house-to-house canvass. Denny had been held and questioned by Village Constable Lavender, Reeve William Linn and A. Bedore and later charged with the offence under the village bylaw.

H. Branscombe, of Shaver, Polden and Branscombe, Toronto, appeared for the defence, and long argument relative to the case ensued before final judgment was given.

The case was adjourned for an hour while a copy of the Municipal Act was secured. Sections pertaining to the case involved were aired in court, precipitating lengthy argument between defense counsel and the Crown. In his summing up, Magistrate Lloyd pointed out that two sections of the Municipal Act were affected by the charge, but the village bylaw under which the accused were arraigned, did not clearly define the case. He closed with the advice to municipal authorities to bring their bylaws up-to-date.

PTE. A. H. DEVOLIN OF H. & P. E. REGT. BADLY WOUNDED

Enlisted With First Battalion and Detailed to Special Duty With Regt.

LIVES NEAR MADOC

Madoc, Oct. 8 —Pte. Alvin Henry Devolin of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment has been listed on the casualty list issued by the Dominion Government recently.

Pte. Devolin, was one of the first to enlist from this district with the H. and P. E. Regiment last fall and went overseas with the regiment in the First Division. His first contact with the enemy was when the regiment went to France last spring and withdrew a short time later.

Dnuring his enlistment, Alvin had distinguished himself as one of the best riflemen in the regiment and was picked for special duty. In correspondence with Mr and. Mrs. John Devolin, an uncle and aunt of Madoc, he stated that he often came in contact with the enemy. He had been detailed to special police duty to take charge of any German airmen who parachuted to safety when their plane was shot down.

It is believed that he was engaged in this work when he was injured in the leg by an exploding bomb. A cablegram received by his aunt stated, that he was progressing favourably.

Pte. Devolin lived with his brothers Albert and Melville, on a farm, seven miles northwest of Madoc. His parents are not living.

Police Blotter

Complaints that mischievous boys were climbing to the roof of the Hume Arena and damaging the same resulted in P. C. Evans cautiously reaching the roof of the building during the progress of last night's professional wrestling bouts.

Lengthened out in a reclining position were four teen-aged boys who were lying down on the roof and peering through the skylights enjoying the evening's performance from their lofty perch. The names of the boys were obtained and they were instructed to report to Chief Kidd after school hours today.

Picton police reported the theft of a 1930 Desoto coupe stolen from that town last night. The vehicle was equipped with 1940 Ontario licence plates number 85-X-62 when taken.

No arrests being necessary in Belleville during the past 24 hours, the cell block at the police station was left available for the two lone transients who sought shelter in the city last night. Since the National Registration police authorities have noticed a marked decline in the number of transients seeking to be harboured. "We make them produce their registration cards before admitting them each night," revealed Sergeant Arthur Booth today.

NAZI SUB BLOWN OUT OF WATER

Three Times Salvos Are Dropped, Twice U-Boat Leaps Up, Then Sinks

London, Oct. 8 (CP).—A German submarine was blown out of the water and destroyed by bombs dropped from a Sunderland flying boat in the Atlantic a short time ago.

The plane, operating with the Coastal Command of the Royal Air Force, made three attacks on the submarine, believed to have torpedoed a merchant vessel some hours before it was destroyed.

The captain of the Sunderland, describing the sinking, said:

"The weather was pretty thick but my second pilot spotted the U-boat about 300 yards off our port side. We could just see part of its conning tower.

"It began to submerge at once and by the time we had reached the spot it had completely disappeared. As we passed over the swirl left by its submerging we let go with a salvo.

"I at once made a steep turn to come back—so steep that the crew were thrown all over the place.

"The bombs had apparently got just under the submarine before they went off. It was terrific. The whole surface of the sea seemed to shudder for yards around.

"And then suddenly a blow-up—whoomph!

"In the middle of all the foam the submarine was lying tilted over a little with its decks awash. It sank again before we got back but we turned and dropped another salvo plumb in the middle of the patch of foam.

"Up came the U-boat once more, but this time it rocketed out of water at such an angle that we could see daylight between it and the sea. It seemed to stay poised for a moment, then slowly went down.

"I made a quick climbing turn, came back over the place and dropped a third salvo, just to make sure.

"Is a coup de grace was needed that supplied it. Huge air bubbles came rushing up—one was a good 30 feet across — and then great masses of oil.

"The whole thing was over in a minute and a half."

FATALITIES BY FIRES

Last year the Fire Demon numbered among his victims in Canada 263 men, women and children. In 1938, 118 children lost their lives by fire, while in 1939, the lives of 73 little ones were claimed. This is a staggering admission.

Such holocausts frequently occur in rural districts where neighbours are long distances away and the parents are unable to reach their burning home in time to save their children from a horrible death.

Every parent should realize that it is his duty to teach his children the principles of fire prevention. They should not be allowed to play with fire, matches should be kept out of their reach and the playing with celluloid toys should be discouraged.

BRITISH 'MASTER PLAN'

With the R.A.F. Britain is striking at the vitals of Germany, her war industries. Relentlessly this organization carries out its master plan, which so far has rained bombs on far more than 300 Nazi military targets.

Obliterate German war industry—that is the British aim with the Royal Air Force. It is remarkable that here Britain has more than met the Hun on his own ground for Hitler placed his hopes of victory on his air force, the force which Britain is turning back day after day and night after night.

The "master plan" will include a British counter-offensive on the European Continent "after the R.A.F. has wiped out the German air force and razed all her factories to the ground."

Hitler the attacker has not been successful with his air force under Goering. Some think he may pound away or make further preparation for an invasion of the British Isles but the British are prepared. Britain pounds relentlessly against the French coast held by the Nazis and misses no opportunity to smash at anything that looks like a Hun movement.

The "master plan" takes account of economic targets as well as military targets and every target has its part in the scheme. Germans are attacking lone villages, British beauty spots and churches and famous buildings which yield them no advantage while the R.A.F. is hitting at the heart of the Nazi machine.

History will never record a more glorious page in history to the present than the rising strength of the British people to face the crisis which came with the collapse of France. Those who live in this age are seeing take place before their eyes one of the greatest triumphs of national courage, sanity, wise judgment and rugged endurance in all history.

This is the solid foundation on which Britain is building up her counter-offensive which it is planned will take them into Germany where they will eradicate the root and branch of Nazism and Hitlerism, the cancer of the modern world. Night after night great British bombers seeking military targets all over Germany disturb the morale of the German people and destroy the production of German engines of war, according to Brig.-General Lord Croft, Under-Secretary for War.

WHAT ARE PLANS OF DICTATORS NOW?

When Hitler and Mussolini met at the Brenner Pass, they looked upon the results of their uncompleted and disappointing task. At Munich in the early summer they had a more satisfactory scene to look over, France collapsing and Italy getting ready to strike France in the back for Hitler's sake and for Fascist gain. Germany had been overrunning the Low Countries and was getting ready to launch attacks on England, while Mussolini had only warm visions of what he thought he was to achieve.

But months have passed and Britain stands resolute and defiant, unbroken, stronger than she has ever been in her history.

The Brenner Pass meeting may be the symbol of a turn of interest, of a new phase in the war. Will the Nazis and Italians turn to the east and to the south in the Mediterranean area? The autumn is here, the winter is ahead. The nation whom Hitler would have crushed with the greatest relish, the nation that stands in his way to supreme tyranny, the nation which is the centre of the Empire which Mussolini would like to see wiped out as a power in the world to allow room for the vandal and jackal states to grab and seize, is confident and powerful. The plans of the Axis partners have not matured for Britain is growing in strength every week. Mighty miltary resources are pouring into England, the product of United States armament factories. The autumn has not brought the decision that Hitler was sure of and Mussolini thought he could foresee.

This brace of political pirates meeting at Brenner had to think over their unfinished work and look for easier tasks. Their problems are delicate. Italy claims a major interest in the Mediterranean and may not like the presence of Germans in that zone even if attacking the British.

The dictators have tried to frighten American material aid from being sent to Britain but without result. So they meet at the Brenner Pass.

They have plots in their mind and according to Ciano's paper "something big" is to come. Hitler is late in his schedule having missed his plans for London and he may feel compelled to do something. The Italian dictator may have to see the winter war carried on in his sphere. He would rather have it far away off near the North Sea and Hitler would rather have had it over with for he does not like waiting. He knows the effects of blockade. He knows that Britain will be vastly stronger in the springtime. Whatever disappointment he has caused the Germans by his failure is probably less than his own gigantic disgust at his delays whatever their explanation.

He had wanted to finish piecemeal northwest Europe, then go on his career to the south and east. It was Britain whom he feared most and it is Britain who battered his barges. Had he been able to carry out his task, the greater part might now have been performed and the rest would have been comparatively easy with most of the continent bowing before him. Now today he has to take up new plans with Mussolini and undertake a new phase of war and all the while he will have to see Britain growing more and more powerful with armaments, blockade and men while he has to take up his time with creating new strife in the Mediterranean or in the Near East.

THIS WICKED MAN: SHAKESPEARE HAS THE PERFECT WORD

A letter to Herr Hitler by John J. Freeland, in the Ottawa Journal.

I am writing to you, Herr Hitler, because I suffer from insomnia and I don't think you sleep any too well either. At least I don't see how you can. But I wonder how you pass the wakeful hours. As for me, I ease them by reading the two greatest works in the English language. The greatest is the Bible, you know. Or do you? The second greatest is Shakespeare. Have you read him? You should. He would amaze you. For instance, do you recognize this portrait of yourself? Britain speaks:

"..those whom we fight against
Had rather have us win than him they follow.
For what is he they follow? Truly, gentlemen,
A bloody tyrant and a homicide.
One raised in blood and one in blood established.
One that made means to come by what he hath
And slaughtered those that were the means to help him."

You did that, Hitler, didn't you? A purge, you called it. Euphemism for wholesale murder. For,

"Bloody thou art. Bloody will be thy end."

But there must be a reckoning, Adolf:

"For thou hast made the happy Earth thy Hell, Filled it with cursing cries and deep exclaims."

Rather well put, isn't it? And when you wonder, as you sometimes must, why Britain entered this struggle Shakespeare can give you the answer. It was,

"To reap the harvest of perpetual peace
By this one bloody trial of sharp war."

And so sure are we of the justice of our cause that,

"Everyman's conscience is a thousand swords
To fight against that bloody homicide."

Of course,

"'Tis true that we are in great danger;
The greater, therefore, should our courage be."

You haven't noticed any lack of courage, have you? Surely you know that,

"Now all the youth of England are on fire
And silken dalliance in the wardrobe lies.
Now thrive the armorers and honor's thought
Reigns solely in the breast of every man."

Of every man, Adolf, and— well, high and wide, through Czecho-Slovakia, Poland and Holland. You quislinged your way into Austria, Norway, Belgium and France. But, Adolf, you should have kept away from Britain. From the moment you sent your bombers over England you might say with Wolsey,

"I have touched the highest point of all my greatness,
And, from that full meridian of my glory,
I hasten to my setting."

Our Shakespeare even tells us how final is the end of such as you.

"For, when he falls, he falls like Lucifer, Never to hope again."

Because, you see, it is true of every Dictator,

"He hath no friends but who are friends for fear,
Which, in his dearest need will fly from him."

Isn't that the reason you keep so many divisions of troops in those countries you are protecting? It must be lonely too, to know that in all the world,

"There is no creature loves me,
And, if I die, no soul will pity me."

Pity you! No, Hitler. There are millions who curse you. Their curses are sincere but amateurish. They should use Queen Margaret's curse. Listen to it, Adolf:

"If heaven have any grievous plague in store,
Exceeding those that I can wish upon you,
O, let them keep it till thy sins be ripe.
And then hurl down their indignation
On thee, the troubler of the poor world's peace,
The worm of conscience still begnaw thy soul:
Thy friends suspect for traitors while thou liv'st,
And take deep traitors for thy dearest friends!
No sleep close up that deadly eye of thine
Unless it be that some tormenting dream
Affrights thee with a hell of ugly devils".

As I said before, nothing amateurish about that, is there? Queen Margaret had another, snappier curse; more slogan-like, more likely to be remembered. Here it is:

"Long die thy happy days before thy death."

Before I close this letter I'd just like to remind you of a little English history. We had a bad king in England, once, Adolf. A very wicked king. But when, on Bosworth Field, the tide of battle went against him and he was urged to fly, this was his answer:

"Slave, I have set my life upon a cast
And I will stand the hazard of the die."

You see, Hitler, after all, he was a king. An English king. I wonder will you meet your hour as bravely. I wonder. And, perhaps, if you had read this earlier, you'd stop wasting bombs on Buckingham Palace. Because another English King lives there, Adolf, and a Scottish Queen. Enough said?

Goodbye for now, Herr Hitler. Worst wishes to you. And, as my young son used to say: "I hope your rabbits die."

Westminster is One of the Oldest Churches in Europe

The following article in Montreal Gazette and written by one well versed in the history of the Abbey, explains why it holds such a unique place in English hearts.

The British, with their high regard for tradition, have a special feeling of affection and respect for the grey stones of their Abbey of Westminster, which stands near to the Houses of Parliament in London.

Westminster Abbey is the shrine of the British Empire. For centuries the British people have worshipped there, seen their kings crowned there, and their great and famous men buried within its four walls.

Some time about the middle of the 13th century—the precise date is not known—Henry III of England began to build the present church. Henry, like all the early Norman Plantagenet and Angevin kings of England, was French by blood and steeped in continental culture, and the church he caused to be built has the lofty roof, the rose windows, and the defiant flying buttresses of the cathedrals of Amiens and Chartres. It also has the same ground plan. But though the Abbey in its design follows closely the French models of the period, the work of building it was carried out by native English craftsmen. The result is "a beautiful French thought expressed in terms of perfect English."

Before William of Normandy landed at Hastings in the year 1066 and successfully invaded England—the last man in the country's history to make a successful invasion—the Saxon sovereigns of England had always been crowned in the cathedral of Winchester. The conquering William of Normandy was anxious, as he stood triumphant in London, to make manifest his blood ties with the Saxons he had conquered. But Winchester was too far away for a coronation in those troubled times, and so the great Duke of Normandy, remembering his links with the Saxon king, Edward the Confessor, ordered his coronation to take place in a church which the saintly Edward had built and which stood on the site of the present Abbey.

On Christmas Day of the year 1066, he was accordingly "hallowed King" in what has since become Westminster Abbey. When he died, his two sons chose the same church for their coronation, and their sons followed after them. Only two of his successors have been crowned elsewhere than at Westminster.

Old, graceful and beautiful Westminster Abbey is naturally enough a casually arrayed "museum" of art. Countless tourists have seen the beautiful wrought-iron work on the tomb of Queen Eleanor of Castille and the gates of Henry VII's chapel. Within the chapel, the stalls, beautifully carved by 16th century workmen, are a rare delight in this 20th century. The nameless artists, their fingers dust, still give pleasure to their fellow men by the carving they undertook so many centuries ago.

Within the walls of the Abbey lie the bones of the most famous of England's sons. From the accession of Queen Elizabeth, in the middle of the 16th century, it has been recognized that an Englishman can have no greater honour than to be buried in the Abbey. That is why "because he did well to God and to his house" the tomb of the Unknown Soldier of the last war is placed there.

The Abbey, too, has been the spiritual centre of the British Empire for hundreds of years. Three Archbishops of Canterbury and nine Archbishops of York served in its chapter before moving on to the highest office of the English church.

The Abbey is not a church of a single diocese like St. Paul's Cathedral. It has no diocese at all—it is the church of the British Empire. Again, although every Englishman all over the world refers to "the Abbey," the church is not an abbey at all. It has not been an abbey since 400 years ago, when the monastic system was abolished in England by Henry VIII. A few years later the church was reconstituted with the sovereign as "visitor" and the dean as its chief. Its legal title is "The collegiate church of St. Peter of Westminster."

But the English are so conservative that they go on calling it "Westminster Abbey," and more familiarly, "the Abbey," and doubtless will continue for so long as it stands there.

Dutch Not Broken By Hitler Tyranny

Hollanders line the streets of Dutch cities and, in defiance of Nazi rulers, cheer the successes of the R.A.F. as they smash at objectives which are of military value to the Germans. It is that spirit which has forced Hitler to change his ruling tactics in Holland, which has revealed to the world that the Dutch people will bow but will not break under the Nazi tyranny, and which is being revealed in non-cooperation and extensive sabotage which is giving the Germans almost as many headaches as the British planes, G. P. Luden, consul for The Netherlands, told the Westward Rotary Club at their weekly luncheon at the Westmount Y.M.C.A.

The sadistic cruelty and barbarity of the Nazi invasion of peaceful Holland has resulted in such a reaction among its people that today, asserted Mr. Luden, "The Netherlands are perhaps the most valuable, certainly the most determined ally of the British Empire."

"The force behind the young men of our enemy was their certainty and their conviction of victory. That conviction was sincere, but it was apparent, for it was laid on the surface. We of the democracies have nothing very spectacular to compete with that. But what we have is our own; it is the outward growth of inward certainties. It is not the hysterical expression of an oft reiterated lesson. It is the knowledge that what we stand for is right in the eyes of God and all His children, and it is the knowledge that right must win."

May 10 a Day of Shock

Mr. Luden described his feelings of bewildered horror and proud relief on May 10 last when the story of Germany's invasion of his homeland unfolded over the wires. "The bewilderment and horror is understandable, but perhaps not the proud relief," he added. Holland had never been at war for decades, would she now submit? Would her higher standard of living, and social progress that had been achieved, reveal a softening such that she would not fight? Were Hollanders not too-civilized to fight? Would we give in? These were the questions that surged through his brain, and when the paper came off the Press, telling what decision Holland had made, "I felt like going out onto the street and shouting: 'Thank God, we are fighting'," Mr. Luden said. "For over-civilized men will not fight at all or they will fight to the end."

The consul gave a graphic description of the destruction of Rotterdam which has shocked the world so. Tales of treacherous combat, of cowardly methods "of our common enemy," of how the regiment of the Royal Guards was wiped out to the extent of 85 per cent. and of the great mistake of the Germans, which had resulted in such a spirit among the Dutch people, "when these men who know how to make their millions march like clock-work gave the word, in one day 30,000 were killed and 70,000 wounded in Rotterdam as planes rained death mercilessly from the skies."

Today The Netherlands merchant marine, with an aching anxiety for their wives and children at home, facing starvation and oppression, carry food to Britain, Mr. Luden said. The Netherlands navy has joined the British navy. "And The Netherlands legions are growing hourly, fighting in England, the colonies, ready to fight anywhere they are sent. Some day they will fight again in Holland and Germany," he concluded. — Montreal Gazette.

Home Conditions Can Affect a Child's Present and Future Behavior

Some years ago I was requested by the government to make a physical examination of 300 boys at a reformatory school. A professor of psychology also examined these boys and our findings were discussed with a judge of a juvenile court.

In getting the family history of these boys I found that in the majority of cases one or both parents were dead, and if alive, were not living together. This meant in some cases the loss of a mother's love, and in other cases the loss of parental discipline. It got "under" me to realize that these boys were in the reformatory, in many cases headed toward a life of crime, because of the loss or the conduct of their parents.

There is another point about children and the home that is now receiving the attention of mental and children's specialists.

Dr. Paul H. White, University of Michigan, in the Journal of Pediatrics (childrens' diseases) states that early recognition and treatment of behavior disorders and emotional conflicts in children can do much to prevent more deeply rooted and serious emotional disturbances in later life.

The thought is that the family physician or the child specialist, in every case of behavior disorder, should, in addition to the physical and intellectual life of the child consider also his emotional life as regards his home, school, and other surroundings.

The three main needs of the child are: (a) security: knowing he is wanted in the home; (b) affection of his parents, brothers and sisters; and (c) being able or allowed to do things that will give him a feeling of superiority or equality, not a feeling of inferiority.

One of the important factors in supplying these three needs is a wholesome family-clad relationship in early life. If this family-child relationship is destroyed or upset by the loss of a loved one by death or desertion, there will also be a loss of that feeling of security. Harsh treatment, ridicule, or where discipline is to strict, spoil the emotional life of the child.

The symptoms caused by this disturbance of family-child relationship are shyness, timidity, day dreaming, night terrors, bed-wetting, loss of appetite and others.

Edwin A. Kellaway Committed On Criminal Negligence Charge In Madoc Police Court Monday

Charge Arose Out of Accident on August 17th in Which Mrs. Jessie Allore Lost Her Life

OWNER OF TRUCK

Kellaway Was Not Driving Truck at Time of Accident Evidence Adduced Shows

Madoc, Oct. 8.—(Staff)—Edwin A. Kellaway, Belleville fruit merchant, was committed for trial to the Fall Assize of the Supreme Court which convenes October 28, on a charge of criminal negligence in police court here yesterday, by Magistrate J. L. Lloyd. The charge arose from a motor accident three miles north of Millbridge on August 17, which cost Mrs. Jessie Allore, Trenton, her life and sent four Belleville residents to hospital. Hubert Herrington, driver of the truck owned by Kellaway, which figured in the fatality, was committed for trial last week on a charge of manslaughter arising from the same accident.

Following his committal for trial, four additional charges were read to Kellaway, and on suggestion of the Bench were laid over until November 25. E. Ormonde Butler appeared for the defence.

Shortly after the opening of the preliminary hearing, County Crown Attorney Gordon Robertson, informed the court that testimony of witnesses in the Herrington hearing would be submitted to court in the Kellaway preliminary to be filed as evidence. Defence Counsel agreed.

The Crown called Hubert Herrington as its sole witness in the hearing yesterday but Defence Counsel Butler called Versie McMurray, and John Howe, both of Gilmour, and Provincial Police Constable S. J. Palmatier, witnesses in the Herrington hearing, for cross-examination. Later the Crown called Samuel Herrington, father of Hubert, for minor evidence.

Herrington Testifies

The youthful truck-driver, given the protection of the court, told how he had been employed intermittently by Kellaway for the past four years, but on August 1, of this year had been offered steady employment at a salary of $5.00 per week. He had secured a beginner's licence and Kellaway had told him he would get more money, when he learned how to drive. He had, however, lost the licence from his hip pocket since the night of the accident. Witness had never driven a truck or car previous to August 1, he testified.

He did not have much chance to learn to drive, Herrington stated "but Kellaway always let me drive the truck on the Faulkner highway".

"Who was driving on the night of August 17?" the Crown asked.

"I was", came the reply.

Witness had made trips to Boulter, 90 miles north of Belleville for several days previous to the date of the accident. They had arrived in Belleville on the morning of August 17, about one o'clock and had left that afternoon on another trip for wood. That night, witness had taken over the wheel of the truck at Green's Corners and had driven it until they reached the scene of the accident. Kellaway, he stated, had given him driving instructions, while on the road, and he (witness) had learned to shift gears a week previous to the fatality.

Brakes Seemed All Right

The brakes "seemed all right to me", he said, adding that he had "pumped" them several times, while coming down a grade a few minutes prior to the crash and "twice heavily" after he had met a car, "and felt a scraping noise". He swore that all the truck-lights were on after they had left Green's Corners previous to the accident. Kellaway, had reached for the emergency brake and pulled it on after the impact with the car, he testified.

Cross-examined by the defence, Herrington stated he saw a car approaching "then there was a scraping noise". The car seemed to be past the truck before the scraping occurred. He thought he brought the truck to a stop about 100 feet from where the "scrape" happened.

Re-examined by the Crown, the witness stated that the speedometer of the truck was not working. He repeated he had pumped the truck-brakes continuously "through force of habit" while coming down the hill north of the scene of the accident.

S. P. Herrington, called by the Crown testified that he did not know his son could drive a car. "He never drove my car in his life", he said, adding that he had warned his boy all summer not to drive a truck.

Police Constable Stanley Palmatier, cross-examined on evidence adduced in the Herrington hearing, told Defence Counsel Butler, he had checked all tracks, including those requested by the accused.

The tracks of the truck were plainly evident on the highway, and they had veered to the right after the vehicle had left the point of impact and come to a stop 311 feet away. He had noticed skidmarks near his idea of the point of impact, some four inches in width where the vehicle had slid sideways to the west. Measurements of the truck, distances and various computations by the officer regarding overlap of the rack featured examination and cross-examination by counsel.

A Mild Sensation

Something of a mild sensation was injected into the proceedings when Versie McMurray, Gilmour resident, who testified in the Herrington hearing told the court, "he had changed his mind as to the point of impact, after taking the measurements of another truck, the day following the accident". "I can't figure out how the accident occurred, where Constable Palmatier said it did, after I took measurements of a Ford truck on August 18", he said. In his opinion the truck-tracks as identified in a photographic exhibit were closer to the right hand side of the road by a distance between one foot and one and one-half feet", when I saw them." He had thought the point of impact was where the officer said it was at the time, but later changed his mind after measuring a truck.

"Did Wilbur Hammett's version of the point of impact agree with that shown in the photograph?" the Crown asked.

"No", McMurray replied', "Hammet said it happened farther north'.

He had arrived at the scene of the accident about 10.10 o'clock, McMurray told the court, and had noticed a lot of cars and traffic. About 75 feet south of where the police officer said the point of impact had occurred, he had noticed broken glass and debris.

Under re-examination, the witness told the crown he had in mind evidence given by him in the Herrington hearing. "Now you have changed your mind?" he was asked.

"No sir,' he replied. "I measured a truck the next day and changed my mind about the point of impact".

"It was sometime after that, you gave your first evidence wasn't it", the Crown remarked.

The witness admitted he had seen Kellaway in his (witness) father's store in Gilmour, since his first evidence had been given, Kellaway had been accompanid by a young man, whom witness did not know, and they had talked about the accident. He could not say whether they had conversed about the evidence.

Shown photographic evidence, McMurray pointe dout tracks near the officer's idea of the point of impact.

"If, as you say", asked the Crown, "the tracks you saw were between one and one and one-half feet to the west of the tracks pictured here, how did the accident occur".

"That is what I would like to know", replied the witness.

Impact 75 Feet South

In his opinion, the point of impact occurred where the broken glass and debris lay, 75 feet south of the point determined by the officer. He noticed a brushing of the road, as if made by a tire, some distance north of where the glass lay.

Constable Palmatier, recalled by the Crown, stated that he agreed with the former witness regarding the glass and debris. For that matter, he said, the highway was strewn with pieces of wreckage and glass between the point of impact and where the truck had stopped. Skidmarks, where the truck had struck the car, and which slued sideways for four inches had definite traces of burned rubber as if from tires, he said.

John Howe, Gilmour, another witness in the Herrington hearing stated Kellaway had asked him to look at the tracks on the night of the accident. He did not know if they were the same as shown in photographs. He had been placed on guard at the scene to watch traffic. No cars, he said, had passed over the tracks on the roadway. In his opinion, the point of impact, "could have been" 75 feet south of that determined by the officer.

HELPS CAPTURE NAZI PILOT

Brockville, Ont., Oct. 8.—(CP)—Parents here of Driver Stanley Simpson with the Canadian Active Service Force in England learned Monday how he took part in the capture of a young Nazi pilot and exchanged a packet of cigarettes for a German medal.

Driver Simpson wrote that the pilot, who bailed out of a Messerschmidt, was "very young, about 17. He was more than scared and I felt very sorry for him. . . He asked me for a smoke and I gave him a packet. He gave me a medal he had."

(German reports said the raiders gave Berlin its hardest bombing of the war during a four-hour and 42-minute alarm).

Radio stations throughout Northwestern Germany were cut off last night, indicating alarms generally in that section. The Air Ministry did not specify where the R.A.F. hit, except to say communications beyond the German frontiers were bombed.

Other raiders attacked the frequently-bombed continental coast bases used by the Germans and struck at airdromes in German-occupied territories from which Nazi fliers base short flight attacks on Great Britain.

Terrific Bombardment

Berlin, Oct. 8—(AP)—Royal Air Force bombers subjected Berlin to its heaviest bombardment in history last night and early today, loosing a rain of explosives and fire-bombs which damaged warehouses and railway lines.

A terse communique said a number of persons were killed and wounded, but did not give the total casualties. One plane was brought down by anti-aircraft fire.

(A British communique said the Royal Air Force attacked "military objectives" in Berlin, communications in various parts of Germany and channel ports and airdromes in German-occupied territory.

(Reports from London said radio stations at Hamburg, Bremen and Zessen went off the air suddenly last night, indicating the possibility of R.A.F. raids on those cities).

The Berlin alarm, which followed three nights of quiet, lasted four hours and 42 minutes. It was exceeded in duration only by the five-hour and eight-minute alarm on Oct. 1.

Fire flared in two sections of the capital and at the height of the raid, lighting the sky with a ruddy glow and spreading a pall of smoke.

No Moments of Quiet

Throughout the alarm there was scarcely a moment of quiet as the raiders roared back and forth across the sky. The thud of bombs mingled with the crash of anti-aircraft fire.

Planes often were at several points over the capital at once, dodging and twisting away from the beams of searchlights and the bursts of shellfire bursting around them.

The German communique said:

"In the past night British planes attacked the Reich's capital and dropped explosive and incendiary bombs at various places.

"Among other things hit were two hospitals, various apartment houses as well as store houses and rail line. Fires started were soon brought under control.

"Several dead and wounded are to be deplored.

"One airplane was shot down by anti-aircraft artillery."

The plane shot down was trapped in the beams of at least 16 searchlights as it droned over the city at a height of more than 9,000 feet.

'FURTHER'

craft probably explains why it is believed that an invasion could not be attempted except when the channel lay quiet and smooth.

"Meanwhile detachments of the British fleet, which had been hovering along the south coast of England, pushed in behind the barges and cut them off from France. Whether or not any German torpedo boats, fast and small, were used, could not be learned.

"The sun had risen meanwhile, dissipating the fog which had cloaked the trip across the channel for the invaders and perfect visibility made the accuracy of the fire of the defenders even greater. When it was apparent that the barges could not reach the shore, the naval units withdrew to safety, leaving the channel filled with bodies and wreckage.

"The barges, The Sun was told, were very light wooden and metal affairs, hand propelled and obviously intended for only a one way trip. The propulsion mechanism is similar to that used on the newest type hand-driven life boats. Levers along the sides connect with a drive shaft which is geared to a propeller and the more men work the levers back and forth, the faster the craft will travel. The German barges were capable of making 10 to 12 knots."

TRAFFIC-PACKED

Along the street where the bus was smashed, air raid precaution squads dug into the rubble heaps of smashed shop fronts where other persons were believed buried or trapped.

One bomb fell into a garden, blowing a small, private shelter over the top of an adjoining house and into a street. No one was in the shelter. Occupants of the house had left a few minutes earlier on their way to work.

Police Cars Wrecked

Another high explosive bomb killed two persons and injured eight in a group of buildings demolished in another section of the city. A girl walking in front of the buildings was one of those killed. Two police cars were wrecked.

One worker at a street booth said: "The alert sounded but many people kept on walking until heavy gunfire was heard. I dived behind my kiosk (booth). Suddenly there was a terrific crash and I was blown against the side of the kiosk.

"Dust rose in a huge cloud. One man was hurled 20 yards into a row of telephone boxes and was hurt badly. Many people were injured severely by flying glass."

One bomb blew out half the leaded windows from the front of a famous row of houses several hundred years old. Apart from the blasted windows the houses did not appear to be damaged.

Two Planes Shot Down

Three German Messerschmitts, each carrying a single bomb, were reported to have attacked a southeast coast town, wrecking a house and causing several casualties. The planes usually used as fighters, turned back across the English Channel after unloading the explosives.

Two Nazi raiders were shot down over the Thames Estuary.

One German fighter was ripped to pieces by a storm of fire from ground defence guns as the pilot was making a dive-bombing and machine-gunning attack on a southeast coast town.

The plane was hit only a few hundred feet above the seafront and the pilot plunged into the water. He waded ashore, hands over his head, and was taken prisoner.

The attack on London, following a night of widespread raids, was made by at least three formations which streaked up the Thames.

Loud Explosions Heard

Loud explosions were heard in the city before any of the high flying bombers were seen. Many persons fled to shelters along the way to work.

Some stayed in the streets for a while to watch the first dozen bombers diving in and out of shell-burst patterns of anti-aircraft fire.

Of the three formations of German planes seen over the southeast coast headed up the Thames, the last was heavily attacked by R.A.F. planes and diverted to the south. The formations all were described as large but there was no immediate estimate of their number.

The Exchange Telegraph Agency reported the first raiders sprinkled explosives indiscriminately over the city. There was a lull after the first bombings, then heavy anti-aircraft fire broke out again from the ground batteries ringing the city.

Most of the attackers apparently still were too high to be seen. One formation of the Nazi planes could be traced by the faint smoke trails left against the sky.

Other smoke streaks indicated that R.A.F. fighter planes swept in to the attack. Some of the British defence planes were low enough to be seen as they climbed speedily to join the dig-fighting.

Some bombs smashed into a passage way between a large block of offices and a wine shop. Another fell in the centre of a busy street.

The third bomb to explode in the London area hit the top of a building, sending large chunks of masonry flying into the street.

A man who was near the building at the time said:

"The street was crowded with buses and other traffic and there was the usual throng of walkers. Suddenly I heard the whine of a bomb and everybody made a dash for doorways. The explosion shook buildings all around.

"One bomb fell by the side of a building in which three men were in a cellar. Two of them came out almost immediately. They had blood all over their faces but refused to be treated by policemen and first aid men who dashed to the spot. Their only concern was that help should be given at once to their comrade still inside."

Longest Alarm of War

The night-long bombing of England caused the longest single raid alarm of the war for London, where explosions were heard and anti-aircraft guns barked from early dusk to dawn.

A communique termed the raids "widespread" but said although "many bombs were dropped in London and in the suburbs and in towns in northwest England, reports so far received indicate that the damage and casualties . . . were not heavy considering the scale of the attacks."

Ten sections of London, including the central city, were bombed with heavy explosives and incendiaries. The outskirts again had a heavy share of the explosives.

Church is Wrecked

Two bombs during the night raids wrecked a church in the London area. The whole roof collapsed and the organ and high altar were smashed. An incendiary bomb fell on the roof of one wing of a hospital in the capital, starting a small fire over a ward which had been vacated. The hospital staff controlled the fire.

The wreckage of a large West End store was added to the rubble heap of others along a street smashed a fortnight ago. A big bomb damaged a famous West End structure now used as an office building. An oil bomb which Londoners call a "Goering Cocktail" struck near a bank but the flames were extinguished.

A bus was hit in Central London. Fires were started in a big block of apartments.

The communique said "an industrial plant in one town in Southeast England was 'damaged." In another town fire bombs showered down on residential districts. Casualties were said to be few.

Raiders penetrated intense anti-aircraft barrages to attack towns in the northeast. Bombs fell in the midlands and along the west coast. Wales also was attacked.

British Guns Make Direct Hits Back Of French Coast

Some Activity by Nazis Is Suspected In Vicinity of Boulogne

Dover, England, Oct. 8 (CP)—Great Britain's long-range southeast coast guns today shelled the French coast near Boulogne after mysterious smoke-screened Nazi movements were detected.

German guns took up the cross Channel firing and explosions shook both sides of the Strait of Dover. German shells struck Dover at intervals of three minutes. Columns of smoke and debris spouted into the air on the French side, marking British hits.

Mysterious White Smoke Screen

The British guns opened fire after a German plane laid down a mysterious white smoke screen along the French coast across from Dover.

Shore watchers on this side were mystified by the unusual German operations. It was agreed the smoke screen was intended to hide some shore activity in the Boulogne victory.

Soon after the plane completed its mission, several trawlers and drifters put out from the French shore and moved cautiously westward along the coast. If the smoke-screen was laid down to hide this operation, it was a failure for the crews of British shore batteries saw the entire proceedings through powerful field glasses.

German Guns Reply

After the British guns started shooting, two of the battery of four big German guns immediately to the east of Cap Gris Nez lighthouse went into action and two smaller guns opened fire at intervals.

Clifftop watchers on the Kent coast clearly saw the flashes of the guns in the bright early sunshine. Flashes were followed by thin spirals of black smoke coiling up like question marks above the muzzles of the guns.

See Shells Exploding on French Soil

Observers who witnessed the British bombardment could see shells exploding on French soil at intervals. The target appeared to be a few miles beyond the French coast line.

Columns of smoke and debris rose into the air as the shells exploded. A number of salvoes were fired before the shelling ceased.

The Stars Say

By GENEVIEVE KEMBLE

For Tuesday, October 8

EXCEPTIONAL opportunities for advancement, property and happiness are presaged from the very auspicious combination of powerful planetary forces. There should be definite gain through application, hard work, sound judgment as well as splendid organizing and executive ability. It is a ripe time for directing the energies and talents toward the fulfillment of high goals, even though there may be some sort of lack of cooperation from those in high places. In purely personal relations there is need of circumspect conduct.

Those whose birthday it is are entering a year in which there should be progress, promotion, prosperity, with very expansive and stabilizing forces operating toward the fulfillment of high goals and ambitious objectives. It is a time for working with resolution, intelligence and industry to such ends, even though there may be some opposition. Be particularly discreet in private affiliations—social, domestic or affectional.

A child born on this day may be efficient, responsible, industrious and ambitious, reaching high levels of attainment by its soundness, executive ability as well as its personal popularity and prestige.

Mrs. G. G. Ostrom Celebrates Her 92nd Birthday

On Saturday, September 28, Mrs. G. G. Ostrom of Halloway, passed her 92nd birthday quietly at her home with her children present to honour her on this another important milestone in her life.

Mrs. Ostrom while not so strong as a year ago has a breadth of vision and keen intellect.

At one o'clock the honoured guest of the day was taken to her seat at the head of the table while her eldest daughter, Mrs. W Eggleton, was at the foot. All enjoyed a sumptuous repast prepared by all her daughters. The table was daintily decorated with flowers and centred with a beautiful birthday cake with ninety-two candles.

After all had enjoyed the good things provided, there was a two minutes' silence for the departed ones of the family circle. An old memory hymn was then sung in honour of the aged mother, "Bringing in the Sheaves" and "There's a Land that is Fairer than Day", in memory of a departed father.

Mrs. Ostrom was called upon for an address. She spoke very feelingly that she was glad that God had spared her to see another year and she was more glad than she could express to have her children with her on this her ninety-second birthday. She hoped that God who had taken care of her all through the years would care for her children. She also thanked them for the lovely dinner, gifts, flowers and cards of congratulations received from relatives, friends and neighbours.

All present replied with heartfelt thanks and appreciation. The day passed very happily with singing of old songs, readings and music. Some appreciative readings were given. Funs and humor were enjoyed for an hour.

Old happy days were brought back to memory and as the beautiful Autumn day was drawing to a close not more beautiful than the life of the honoured aged mother, whose birthday was just celebrated, a happy family sang "Blest be the Tie that Binds", followed by "God Save the King". All departed to their homes feeling they had spent a happy time together.

BRIDGE STREET W.M.S.

The W.M.S. of Bridge Street United Church was held in the Ladies' Parlours, Friday, October 4, at 3 p.m. with the President, Miss Lazelle Brown in charge of the business and Mrs. Houston in charge of the music.

Reporting for her department Mrs. Moore said, "Christian Citizenship is related to peace, and we can't hope to have peace until citizens become Christians. This includes clean thoughts, kind deeds, the making of people around us happier". A word of appreciation was also given for the fact of the dry canteen for our non-permanent forces.

Mrs. Harrison, representing the department of Stewardship said: "The things we are fighting to preserve are mostly Christian things but they have become so familiar that we are hardly aware of them. Christian civilization is not built with guns; defence is not enough; we must endeavour to bring in the spirit of Christ with as much intensity as we strive to defeat despots."

The theme of the Worship Service led by Mrs. Baker was "The Way to the Abundant Life" and in this the surrender of our wills is the first step.

The study period was led by Mrs. Ross assisted by Mrs. Thomas, Mrs. Adams, Miss Reeves and Mrs. Ferguson and dealt with the lives of some of the Christian leaders in Angola and the work they have accomplished in a section of Africa now threatened by Nazi aggression.

Collegiate Red Cross Contributes Summer Work to Committee

Belleville Collegiate Institute and Vocational School Junior Red Cross turned over the following articles to the Local Red Cross Committee on October 8, 1940:—

Soldiers

Triangular bandage 1; khaki hankies, 40; gauze hankies 36 (2-3 donated); white socks 1 pair; black socks 1 pair; grey-blue socks 6 pairs; Airforce blue socks, 6 pairs; grey socks, six pairs and khaki socks 11 pairs, (1 donated); sweaters, 3; face cloths, 40 (all donated); scarfs 3 (1 navy donated); rifle mitts, 2 pairs; pyjamas, 1 pair.

Refugees

Dresses, 7 donated; dresses with self-coloured panties, 7 donated; sweaters, 11 donated; sweaters 7 Red Cross wool; scarfs 5 (1 donated); mitts, 1 pair; flannelette and wool bloomers, 18 pair.

This contribution represents the work of the organization since June. Summer holidays did not mean a vacation from Red Cross work for these enthusiastic members and many hours that might have been devoted to recreation were passed in knitting, sewing and in raising sums to be used this season in buying material for articles for refugees.

Six Groups

Six groups with about forty girls to a group are included in B.C.I.V.S. Junior Red Cross, which have developed from the original group organized by Miss Mary Dwyer and carrying out Red Cross work for the past five years. Twelve lady teachers of the staff, with Miss Dwyer as director, are in charge and these staff leaders have given tirelessly of their time and interest as well as assisting generously in purchasing supplies. Each group has a title of its own, and is in charge of two teachers. There is the John White group, named in memory of the first Belleville casualty in the world war, the victim being a former popular student at the Collegiate. The others were the Sisanna Moodie, the Dextras, Flanders and Winston Churchill. The sixth group is at present nameless. Last year it worked under the name of Weygand, but has, of course discarded that title since June, and has not as yet chosen a new designation.

Every second Wednesday the groups meet, most of them at 4.15 and some at 12.30. The work is done at home, and the list at the top of the column indicates the scope of club's interest. Beginners and expert knitters can all assist, and the organization has in addition to its members, an honorary associate, Mrs. W. H. Merry, who has donated beautifully done socks, the present list of articles, including, as usual, some of her work. Another friend who is eighty-six years old, made lovely little print dresses for refugee children.

Other Projects

Miss Brown is in charge of the contribution of blankets and leather and has been most enthusiastic and generous in her efforts. Miss Priest takes charge of the tin foil collection made by the students. This is donated to the Women's College Hospital, for work in the Amputation Department.

During the holidays each girl pledged herself to raise one dollar to help her group buy materials for articles for refugees. Some looked after children, others ran messages, and one girl by her own efforts raised ten dollars. Staff and students have donated generously at all times to the activities of the Junior Red Cross, a major factor in the success achieved by the groups.

Beautiful Work

A critical inspection of the many articles prepared for sending to the local committee caused visitors to marvel at the neatness of their handiwork. Dainty little dresses, flannelette panties, eight pairs of which were made in the summer by one girl, a beautifully executed patchwork quilt in which the Red Cross design was paramount, made by Margaret Kellar, pyjamas, knitting of every kind, articles for wear and for hospital use, many made by young students of the junior grades, others by teachers formed a contribution to Red Cross of which the Collegiate Institute may well be proud. It represents many hours of painstaking work and effort and beyond that a whole-hearted desire to assist others, a school spirit which brings honor to any alma mater.

Sometimes Teachers Make Mistakes

By Garry Cleveland Myers, Ph.D.

OFTEN when I address teachers, my subject is, "The Tragedy of Errors." I attempt to lead the teachers to see the enormous waste of time and energy of the child and teacher in the making and repeating of mistakes.

The most serious of these errors are with simple basic items which the child will use the rest of his life, such as the correct spelling of simple, essential words, and the learning by heart of such basic number facts as 9 and 7 are 16.

When the teacher corrects or grades the test papers of her pupils, she is annoyed by the number of mistakes she finds. So is the child as he sees the marks on his returned papers. Rarely does a child leave a question unanswered. Still more rarely will he venture in the classroom to say, "I don't know." He supposes he must always answer right or wrong. But as a matter of fact, it is worse for his learning success to answer wrong than not to answer at all.

Adding Injury

What makes the child's errors so serious is that they don't stay corrected: he makes them over and over again; and the most persistent errors tend to be repeated in exactly the same way. This fact irritates the teacher, or the parent who helps the child at home with his lessons. Accordingly the already worried child may be scolded, even punished.

But if a teacher or parent will weigh the matter calmly he will not let himself grow angry at the child for making and repeating errors. The child does not make mistakes to be ornery. He is discouraged and annoyed at himself on account of them. He just makes them in spite of his wish not to do so—when, for example, he spells onion as u-n-i-o-n, he merely makes the association in this way. Having made it this way once he is the more inclined to make it in the same way again or to spell it in some other way, still incorrect. Psychologically, there is no difference between repeating a wrong answer and repeating a right answer. A mistake once made is likely to be made again.

The main problem in good teaching (of facts) at school or home is to keep the child from making a wrong answer or repeating it; in helping him avoid mistakes.

The child who easily might master without error the spelling of three words or the memorizing of three number facts, at a sitting, might get all mixed up if asked to try to master five or eight of either.

Over-Fed

Perhaps the chief reason the average child piles up so many mistakes is because he is supposed to learn more items at a lesson than he will learn accurately.

Always help the child hold fast to what he has already mastered by having him often repeat it mechanically or use it in some sensible way. Good drill is repetition of only what has been learned correctly. Unfortunately, most drill consists of repeating "wrongs" as well as "rights."

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

No Objection to Buying Ring on Credit

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I've been going "steady" with my girl friend for several years and she hinted that it's time we became engaged. I thought I might buy her a small diamond, but as the salary I earn is so small, I hesitate. I have to help support my mother and can't marry for at least three years.

Is there anything wrong about buying a ring on credit, or is it something to be ashamed of?

Wondering

As you and the girl have had an understanding for several years, I don't see any possible objection to your buying her an engagement ring on credit.

I can't see why a girl should insist on an engagement when she knows you can't marry for three years. Many girls are waiving engagement rings altogether, and are willing to save the money for something later on.

My best wishes to you both.

A Novel "Return Courtesy" Party

Dear Miss Fairfax:

Last June I was maid-of-honor at my girl friend's marriage. Since then she has invited me to her new home for dinner several times. On each of these occasions she has had very nice young men to meet me. I'd like to give a party and invite my friend and her husband, and these young men, about half dozen, as a return courtesy, but I'm puzzled to know just what kind of party to give. Our house is small, and if I ask girls for all six of the men, it would be too big an affair for me to swing.

Someone mentioned to me that you had suggestions on tap for out-of-door affairs. What are they like, and could they be given at public parks?

L. W.

As the city from which you write me had a good public park, in which picnickers are welcome, I would suggest, before the weather gets too cool, you give an out-of-door evening picnic, where a dozen or more persons could be very comfortably entertained. Your park has fireplaces, where supper can be cooked. Benches and tables from which it can be served, are also provided.

I've just had an interesting letter from a girl who gave a roof party at her apartment house, where fortunes were told and supper was served. Simple, out-of-door parties can be given through the autumn. In fact, they're pleasanter when the weather is cool than during the sultry dog days.

The Disappearing Waistline

"A woman gone waisty isn't keen about muscle workouts."

By HELEN FOLLETT

IT IS a sad day when a woman realizes that her slender waist is nothing but a memory. Lazy hours, over-indulgence in rich food have added inches to her equator; she wishes with all her heart that they would waste away. She does not regard her silhouette with satisfaction. She would like to sit down and have a good cry about it.

Her slogan should be "up and at 'em fat cells." She won't get rid of them if she goes on feeding them, so she must reduce the intake of sweets, fats and starches.

Exercise is necessary, especially if fat has settled on the mid-section and not elsewhere. And theres the rub. By the time a woman has gone waisty she isn't keen about muscle workouts. We offer simple forms of calesthenics that will strengthen fibers, make adipose tissue go off and die.

Torso Twist

There's the torso twist. Stand erect, chest up, hands on hips. Turn from side to side at the waistline, at the same time pulling up the back bone. There will be a strong fiber pull from ribs to thighs. No loafing now. Work hard. Turn the upper part of the body as far to the side as you can and at the same time try to pull yourself apart at the waistline.

* * *

No stop-and-go system will recondition a skin that has gone slumpy or will it retain the youthful freshness of natural loveliness. It is the woman who does her home beauty work faithfully and continually that keeps Old Man Time at bay, feels satisfaction when she has a conference with the lady in the looking glass.

For the average complexion this is a good schedule; at night wash thoroughly with warm water and a bland soap. Rinse well, dry gently, tap in a heavy cream. Remember that friction has much to do with results, so devote at least five minutes to patting and slapping. Every morning refresh the skin with cold water, dry gently, sponge with witch hazel. Half an hour later you can slap on the beauty batik.

Any Old Silk Stockings?

Send Them to 64 Queen Street to Assist in Work of Grenfell Missions

Don't throw away those old silk stockings! They are not much use to the wearer after a runner or two, but those same stockings may be the means of adding dollars to help maintain the wonderful work of the Grenfell Missions in the lonely settlements in Labrador. They are use for making beautiful hooked rugs, table mats and wall pictures. Only the silk of the stocking is required, the cotton tops and feet should be cut off, and the stockings (clean, of course) sent to the home of Mrs. M. E. Branscombe, 64 Queen Street. The Third Belleville Brownie Pack does the rest, packing, and paying the charges for their shipment to the Grenfell Labrador Medical Mission.

All year long, there is the need for this material in the handiwork done by the people of that district. Those interested are asked to save old hosiery and forward it at any time during the year to Mrs. Branscombe's home. At present a small group is doing this, but there are many who would probably be glad to assist when they realize the need. Such contributions entail no expense at all to the donor. They are discarding the stockings anyway. Now they can help in a most worthwhile cause.

Tin cigarette boxes, cigar boxes and light colored old silk underwear are gladly received by the workers.

The rugs originally had pictures on them designed by Sir Wilfrid Grenfell himself, usually of icebergs, polar bears, husky dogs or dogteams. Other designs have been introduced as well, and these pictorial mats are very popular and sell all over the United States and Canada from Banff to Halifax. One of the wall pieces is much loved by the children—hooked with silk stockings but with a piece of baby seal skin in the form of a polar bear and two little bears appliqued on it. The tin cigarette boxes and cigar boxes are ornamented with clever paintings and find ready sale.

Needless to say toys are welcomed at any time, for the children who rarely receive the toys that are every day playthings for children down here.

Most of all, the need is for discarded silk stockings and underwear. Just remember the Grenfell Labrador Medical Mission and the great work it is accomplishing and you will find the answer to the problem of what to do when you can't possibly disguise those runs, any longer.

The Girl Guides were formerly in charge of sending these articles but now the Brownies have taken over this work and their interest has been most appreciated by the Mission.

Grand Superintendent Pays Official Visit To Quinte Friendship

The regular meeting of the Quinte Friendship Chapter No. 227 R.A.M. was held last evening in the local lodge rooms at which a real good turnout of lodgemen were present.

The meeting marked the official visit of the Grand Superintendent for Prince Edward District, Right Excellent Companion Harold C. McElrath who received a hearty welcome from the local members.

After Degree work was completed upstairs, the Fourth Degree which took place downstairs, following which a varied program of musical numbers and Ray and Leslie Lennox, with Professor Wheatley at the organ, was enjoyed.

Introduced to the lodge members by Excellent Companion Jack McIntosh, Grand Superintendent Harold McElrath gave an excellent discourse on the history of the Grand Chapter. Excellent Companion Jack McIntosh proposed the toast to the Grand Chapter to which Excellent Companion Harold McElrath replied in his fitting manner. The toast to the visitors was proposed by Mr. J. O. Herity and was replied to by members of the visiting party. District Secretary L. F. Patrick and Companion Nicholson also spoke briefly.

DR. DAFOE'S COLUMN on the Quintuplets and the Care of Your Children

The Backward Baby

A grandmother in New York City wrote me a letter about her grandchild that describes a very interesting case.

The baby is twenty months old, but she cannot, or does not, walk or talk. She seems to recognize her mother and father, for she looks at them when asked. But she won't point to them. The child sleeps well, eats well, makes the proper gains in weight. But she cannot sit up in bed unsupported.

"Have you had, or know of any similar cases, where a baby walked and talked normally after two or three years?" the grandmother asks.

The answer is yes; I have. I have known babies who were unable to walk for two or three, yes, four, and even five years, and then they suddenly seemed to overcome whatever had been holding them back.

As I said here recently, prematurity, severe illnesses—particularly rickets, nearly always postpone a child's ability to walk and to stand. Children of multiple birth are often slow about walking and standing. Other factors make walking ages vary.

Babies sometimes have a brain condition, perhaps as a result of an injury, which it rights itself or is corrected, doesn't permit the baby sufficient control of the motor centers to walk properly and talk.

Sometimes an injury at birth will cause this condition. Probably this was true in the case referred to above, for in another paragraph of her letter, the grandmother tells me that the mother did have a hard time when the baby was born. No instruments were used in the delivery, but the baby had a blood transfusion from the father immediately after birth. That indicates there may have been some sort of injury at birth. These injuries often occur, because of unusual conditions doctors cannot control.

Children frequently overcome these handicaps unaided. They often go several years beyond the usual walking age before they learn, and the same is true of talking. But this doesn't mean that the parent of a backward child should just wait for this improvement to come. Sometimes this condition doesn't clear up naturally. So my advice to the grandmother is to take the child to a specialist or to one of the baby clinics in her city. She can take the child there with confidence, because the baby will get the best of attention. They are always interested in such cases at clinics.

GOOD MANNERS

MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

Good Breeding Evidenced in Correct Usage of Names

How perplexing it often is to sense when it is just the moment to drop the formal "Mr." and "Mrs." or "Miss" in favor of the informal "Tom" or "Betty". Social life today has become so informal that this question is not so bothersome as it used to be in the formal old days.

Yet, if we are to be considered well-bred, we must develop a sensitivity about the appropriate time to assume that we have the right to use the first name of a person. Sometimes it is fitting for you to be the one to change to the use of the first name of the other person; sometimes it is fitting that you wait for the other person to adopt the informal address. Almost always the other person's age and position and distinction are to be considered. We may be friendly and informal but we must guard against being thought "too familiar."

Another point about names: Even if we call Mrs. Preston "Anne" when we are with her, we speak of her as "Mrs. Preston" when we are speaking about her to someone who does not call her "Anne" or perhaps does not even know her.

This is important in business: Even if you know your employer or business superior very well socially and therefore call him or her by the first name, you should use Mr. or Miss or Mrs. when addressing or speaking about him or her during business hours. This will call for self-control, but it will stamp you as well-bred.

And in public: When you are on the street or in a restaurant or theatre or any other public place, do not speak of people by names, so that these names can be identified by anyone listening. And do not make comments about them that will be overheard.

Gift Before Party

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

My son and his fiancee are to announce their engagement soon, and my husband and I are invited to dinner that evening at the home of the girl's parents. I would like to know if it is proper to bring a gift.

C. S.

It would not be appropriate for you to take a gift with you when you go to this announcement party. If you wish to give your prospective daughter-in-law an engagement gift, it would be better for you to give it to her some time before this party.

Family Courtesy Tip

Two excellent rules that contribute to family harmony are: Don't be late for meals and Don't pry into each other's private affairs.

Detroit Tigers Take Run Lead In Third Inning of Deciding Game of the World Series

Paul Derringer and Bobo Newsom Hook Up in Hurling Duel

SMART FIELDING

Tigers Score Their Run on Two Hits and an Error by Werber

Crosley Field, Cincinnati, Oct. 8 (AP)—Big "Buck" Newson, Detroit's two-time winner over Cincinnati, was called back after a one-day rest to oppose the Reds today in the seventh and deciding game of the World Series.

Paul Derringer, who has split even in two starts against the Tigers, was Manager . Billy McKechnie's mound choice for the all-important fray.

The weather was ideal, warm and bright. At game time the bleachers were packed to absolute capacity, about 4,500, but the grand stand appeared only about two-thirds filled.

Line-ups:

Tigers—Bartell, ss; McCosky, cf; Gehringer, 2b; Greenberg, lf; York 1b; Campbell, rf; Higgins, 3b; Sullivan, c; Newsom, p.

Reds—Werber, 3b; M. McCormick, cf; Goodman, rf; F. McCormick, 1b; Ripple, lf; Wilson, c; Joost, 2b; Myers, ss; Derringer, p.

Umpires—Plate, Lee Ballanfant, National League; First Base, Steve Basil, American League; Second Base, Bill Klem, National League; Third Base, Emmett Ormsby, American League.

First Inning

Tigers—Bartell lined the first pitch directly at Myers. With the count two strikes and one ball, McCosky lifted a high fly to M. McCormick in deep centre. After looking at one ball, Gehringer lifted a fly in short left centre that looked like an almost certain hit, but Ripple came rushing to make a great catch.

No runs, no hits, no errors, none left.

Reds—Werber looked at one ball, and then lined to Greenberg deep in left. M. McCormick struck out on four pitches. With the count two strikes and one ball, Goodman grounded to Bartell and was thrown out.

No runs, no hits, no errors, none left.

Second Inning.

Tigers—After looking at one strike, Greenberg sent a sharp grounder which Meyers was able to knock down but unable to throw in time to catch Greenberg and it was scored as a single. York also looked at one strike, and then topped the ball toward third base, Werber rushing in for a gloved-hand pickup and throwing to first just in time to nip the runner in a spectacular play. Campbell grounded to Derringer, who wheeled and saw Greenberg streaking for third and ran toward him setting up a trap, in which Greenberg was run down, Derringer to Myers to Werber to Joost, Campbell going to second. Higgins was thrown out, Joost to F. McCormick. 0 runs, 1 hit, 0 errors, 1 left.
